PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 99th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE—Tuesday July 30, 1985

(Legislative day of Tuesday, July 16, 1985)

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable MARK O. HATFIELD, a Senator from the State of Oregon.

(Note: The first 35 minutes of today's session were conducted in reduced lighting and without electrical systems due to a temporary electrical power failure.)

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Gracious God, Father of us all, Lord of lords and Friend of friends, we beseech Thee on behalf of the hostages who remain captive in Lebanon. The drama of TWA flight 847 is passed, though the memory of the ordeal is engraved on our hearts, but we must not, we will not, forget those Americans who remain in captivity: The Reverend Benjamin Weir, William Buckley, Peter Kilburn, the Reverend Martin Lawrence Jenco, Terry Anderson, David Jacobsen, and Thomas Sutherland. Wherever they are, whoever their captors, whatever their circumstances, we thank Thee Thou art with them Lord, and we pray for their soon release.

Grant Thy peace and comfort to their loved ones who have been waiting so long with such unrelieved patience. Help them in their deep anxiety and frustration with Thy comfort and encouragement. We pray that those in authority, who bear responsibility for American citizens under such circumstances, will exercise their best judgment and their finest expertise without delay. Give them wisdom and courage and make them relentless in their effort to free the captives. We pray in His name whose mission was the freedom of those in captivity. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

The assistant legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, July 30, 1985.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable MARK O. HATFIELD, a Senator from the State of Oregon, to perform the duties of the Chair.

STROM THURMOND,
President pro tempore.

Mr. HATFIELD thereupon assumed the Chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the majority leader is recognized.

I make a request from the Chair that without the benefit of amplification, we should be conscious to elevate the decibels of our speaking.

The majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, under the standing order, the leaders have 10 minutes each and then we have a number of special orders of 15 minutes each under the control of the distinguished Senator from New York Senator D'AMATO, special orders for Senators D'AMATO, DOLE, MCCLURE, HUMPHREY, HEINZ, DECONCINI, LEAHY, NICKLES, PROXMIRE, and BAUCUS. I assume the last two Senators, PROXMIRE and BAUCUS, are not under the control of the distinguished Senator from New York. I would guess that special orders could be conducted in the dark, but I do not believe they can be heard since the little machines are not operating in their offices, but if not, if no one shows up for special orders in the next few moments, we will recess subject to the call of the Chair and perhaps we can reduce the time for the special orders and still conclude those before noon.

At noon, there will be the weekly policy luncheon for both Republicans and Democrats, so we will recess at noon and stay in recess until the hour of 2 o'clock. At the hour of 2 o'clock, it will be the intention of the majority leader to turn to the conference report to accompany the DOD authorization bill, and following disposition of the DOD conference report, hopefully today, hopefully by 4 o'clock this afternoon by unanimous consent, the Senate will turn to the Kennedy-Mathias comprehensive test-ban resolution. Rollcall votes can be expected throughout the day's session.

Also, the Senate can be expected to turn to the conference report to accompany the foreign assistance bill and S. 876, the veterans' health care bill, and hopefully later this evening, the Compact of Free Association. It is my understanding that some of the problems with that measure have been taken care of.

It would also seem that there is a good possibility of getting a budget resolution, however meaningful, at least get something done this week, and I know the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI, and the ranking Democratic member, Senator CHILES, will be working throughout the day to see if they can conclude at least the initial stages of a package, so hopefully we could have a budget resolution on the Senate floor before we begin the August recess on this coming Friday, unless by resolution the timing of the recess is changed.

I urge my colleagues that rather than to offer amendments and include the farm bill, South Africa, the budget resolution, and cargo preference, perhaps they would permit the leaders on each side to work out the time for adjournment. We would be happy to cooperate with Members who have a special problem.

(Later the following occurred:)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, as I have indicated before, there will be the customary 2-hour recess so Republicans and Democrats may have their caucus or policy luncheon.

Following that will be the DOD authorization conference report, which I hope will be completed by 4 p.m. We shall take it up at 2.

Following that, as a result of a unanimous-consent agreement, we will turn to the Kennedy-Mathias test-ban resolution. There will be a Record vote on that matter.

We also hope to turn to the conference report on the foreign assistance bill and S. 876, the veterans health care bill, and hopefully, before the day ends, which could be rather late, the Compact of Free Association.

Mr. President, this is Tuesday and there are a number of requests coming now for action on certain matters this week. We are certainly willing to accommodate Senators on both sides of the aisle, but they will have to accommodate us with time agreements or give us some indication that we can dispose of their particular piece of legislation.

It is also my hope that today, the Senate Agriculture Committee will report out a farm bill, at least a commodities portion of it, and maybe every section of it except for food stamps and the so-called farm credit title. We probably cannot pass that this week, but at least, we hope to have some debate on the farm legislation.

I think we can take care of the supplemental appropriations conference report, perhaps a couple of appropriations bills, and we have probably seven or eight items we hope to do by unanimous consent: Veterans' judiciary review, International Air Transportation Protection Act, In-Flight Medical Emergencies Act, Mentally-Ill Persons Act, Handicapped Children's Protection Act, and the Mississippi Sioux Indian education bill. Those are items that we hope can be disposed of in rapid order.

The other major areas that I have indicated are the energy and water appropriations bill, legislative appropriations bill, supplemental appropriations conference report, discussion of the farm bill, Compact of Free Association, Japan trade bill—I hope to propound a unanimous-consent request today on the Japan trade bill—South African conference report, and perhaps the Genocide Treaty to sort of round out the week.

Mr. President, that will probably take a little time. It is also my hope that we will have a budget resolution this week. It seems to me that the air is fairly well cleared as far as major items that were under consideration. I am convinced that we are better off with a budget resolution than with no budget resolution at all, particularly on the Senate side. On the House side in the Rules Committee, they can limit amendments and limit debate, but that is not so on the Senate side. It is my hope that the chairman and the conferees on the Senate side will wrap up the so-called budget resolution. It may not be as meaningful as we had hoped, but it may be better than no budget at all. In fact, I think it probably is marginally better.

We would like to complete action on that. If we can indicate that these matters will be resolved before the week is out, then hopefully, we can avoid spending the afternoon arguing about whether or not Congress will be in session in August and how long and what we need to complete during the August recess. I think most of the items of concern can be completed by Friday, maybe late Friday.

Mr. President, I ask for the cooperation of my colleagues. There will probably be late-night sessions each night this week and without any windows of any kind. So everybody should be alerted that we are planning on an August recess and we do hope it will start at the close of business Friday. At the same time, we know there are more matters that should be disposed of and I shall be meeting with the distinguished minority leader [Mr. BYRD]. I know he is very interested in completing as much work as possible and has been very helpful in trying to expedite the business of the Senate.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The minority leader is recognized.

LET US BE FOUND WORKING

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, we are reminded of the days when Senators did not have microphones. So perhaps if we speak up a little the few who are here can be heard.

I am reminded of the time in the 1700's on an occasion when the Massachusetts Legislature was meeting, and at noon the clouds became so heavy and the sky so overcast that it was almost dark at that early hour. In that religious age, members of the legislature thought that the "end of time" was at hand, and they began falling on their knees and praying, feeling that the moment of judgment was near.

The speaker of the house of representatives assumed the rostrum and he said: "Gentleman, the hour of judgment is either fast approaching or it is not. If it is not, then everything will turn out well. If it is indeed the judgment hour that is approaching, let us be found working. Let candles, therefore, be brought."

So, Mr. President, we may have to send out and get candles, but we will be equal to the task if that necessity comes upon us.

I reserve the remainder of my time by unanimous consent.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am advised that a number of our colleagues are on the way to the floor and I am also advised that we may be in the dark for some time around here. So perhaps I will encourage my colleagues to either deliver their messages in the special order category or permit us to include those in the RECORD.

The distinguished Senator from New York is on his way to the floor and also the Senator from Wisconsin, Senator KASTEN, who would like a portion of my time.

So, if there is no objection, I see no reason they could not go ahead and make their statements. It would be a good day to talk about the budget.

Mr. BYRD. Unless they are on the elevators.

Mr. DOLE. If they are on the elevators they are going to have a problem, but otherwise I think we may continue for a while.

And I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PERSECUTION OF SOVIET JEWS

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to bring to the attention of my colleagues the plight of Soviet Jewry. In late July 1984, the Soviet Union began a substantial crackdown on Hebrew teachers and Jewish cultural activists. They are the major victims of what appears to be an official campaign to stop the current revival of Jewish culture in the Soviet Union. Their only crime is that they continue to speak out for such basic causes as self-determination, freedom of religion, and the right of emigration.

To date, I know of 10 of these men who have been convicted, several on trumped-up charges specifically designed to discredit them. Two were savagely beaten following their arrests. In addition to the arrests and beatings, many Soviet Jews are being fired from their jobs, their homes have been searched, their phones disconnected, and their mail seized. Articles have appeared in Soviet newspapers and on Soviet television that are discrediting to the Jewish culture. A local Leningrad television program last November identified several activists by name and accused them of engaging in "Zionist" subversion. A program broadcast in Moscow equated Zionism with Nazism and accused World War II Jewish leaders of collaborating with the Nazis in collecting Jews for the death camps.

Let me tell you of Yosef Bernstein, from Kiev. He is 48 years old and married with one daughter. Yosef is a teacher of Judaism and Hebrew. He and his family requested permission to emigrate to Israel in 1976. Afterward, all members of his family lost their jobs. In November 1984, Yosef was boarding a train when he was arrested with no charge. Only later did his family hear about his arrest and it was at his trial that they first learned of any details. On being granted a visit to see Yosef, his wife and daughter were horrified to discover his face marked with razor cuts, one eye being damaged and not focusing properly, and the other bandaged up. With no medical treatment, serious complications resulted from his unattended wounds. The prison doctors reported that he is 99-percent blind in both eyes and that the cuts on his face have become serious enough to be life threatening. According to Soviet law, any prisoner in such a serious state of health must be released. However, the prison authorities have informed Yosef that they will nevertheless find him employment in a labor camp. There are many other such accounts similar to this one.

There can be no doubt that this campaign has been consciously directed by Soviet authorities to discredit and destroy the revival of Jewish culture in the Soviet Union. The methods of arrests, beatings, evidence planting, and the use of media to slander these people have created a renewed atmosphere of crisis in the Soviet Jewish community. My concern is: What lies ahead for the Jewish people of the Soviet Union?

Mr. President, I ask my colleagues to urge the Soviet Union to live up to the commitments they have made with regard to human rights and stop this tragic campaign. Although we are limited as to what we can do to help Soviet Jews, it is of the utmost importance that, as Americans, we stand firm and speak out against this travesty. We must never forget the basic human rights our forefathers fought for, that are so shamelessly lacking in the Soviet Union.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR D'AMATO

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO] is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR KASTEN FOR HUMAN RIGHTS PURSUIT

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I would like to applaud my colleague, Senator KASTEN, for his vigorous pursuit of human rights, and for his work as chairman of the Foreign Relations Subcommittee. His actions in the Congress speak far more eloquently than any speeches on the subject of human rights. I applaud his remarks, and would like to be associated with them.

THE 10TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE HELSINKI FINAL ACT

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to call to the attention of my colleagues in the Senate and the American people the 10th anniversary of a very important event. On the first of August 1975, representatives of 35 nations gathered in Helsinki to sign the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. We are commemorating this event in ceremonies beginning today in Helsinki, where a delegation led by our Secretary of State, George Shultz, will take part in a 3-day international meeting of the signatory states.

The Final Act, which has become known as the Helsinki accords, was signed at the height of United States-Soviet détente. Many hopes were vested in this document. Expectations were raised among people everywhere that the process set in motion by the Helsinki Final Act would be a route to better understanding and cooperation and would lead to a lessening of tensions between the nations of the East and the nations of the West.

On this, the first day of the commemoration of the signing of the Final Act 10 years ago, it is appropriate to review the balance sheet on the Helsinki process. As Chairman of the U.S. Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Commission established by the Congress and the President to—

• • • Monitor the acts of the signatories which reflect compliance with or violation of the articles of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, with particular regard to the provisions relating to human rights and cooperation in humanitarian fields.

I am afraid there is little good news to report.

Conditions within the Soviet Union, which showed some brief, spotty signs of improvement until the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, have worsened steadily. Soviet denials of human rights and fundamental freedoms are all-pervasive. Current conditions are the worst they have been since the end of Stalin's rule.

Conditions within Eastern European nations are not as bleak as those in the Soviet Union. Some progress has been made in specific nations on specific issues. However, the recent suppression of the Solidarity Free Trade Union in Poland shows how fragile and how very limited such progress has been.

As a result of Soviet disregard of their promises to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, voices have risen calling for the United States to denounce the Final Act as a fraud and to end our participation in the Helsinki process. Some of my distinguished colleagues in this body have supported this point of view. Indeed, there is a division of opinion on the Helsinki Commission itself regarding the future of the Helsinki process and the U.S. role in the process.

This debate on the future of the Helsinki process has spread into the public media, with commentators like George Will and William Safire criticizing continued U.S. participation in the process. Influential emigres like Vladimir Bukovsky have joined in supporting an end to U.S. participation.

In light of the manifest failure by the Soviet Government to live up to its promises, this debate on the future of the Helsinki process is both timely and valuable. It should continue as a means to increase public understanding of the issues involved, to sharpen and clarify the opposing positions, and hopefully to reach a consensus we can all support.

To help this discussion proceed, the Commission staff has produced a report entitled "The Helsinki Process—Ten Years Later." This short document is an important summary of the pros and cons of the process over the past 10 years.

I have been a member of the Helsinki Commission since 1981; I became chairman of the Commission in April of this year. As chairman, I want to take this opportunity to set forth my views on the Helsinki process.

The Helsinki Final Act was not, as many people portray it, a tradeoff of western recognition of Soviet hegemony over Eastern Europe in return for Soviet promises on human rights. Specifically, the United States has never recognized the forcible and illegal incorporation of Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia into the Soviet Union.

While Basket I of the Final Act establishes as principles of conduct between signatory states the principles of sovereign equality, nonuse of force, inviolability of frontiers, territorial integrity of states, peaceful settlements of disputes, and nonintervention in internal affairs, among others, the United States does not recognize these principles as establishing a de jure recognition of the Soviet empire in Eastern Europe. In fact, if the Final Act contained formal public verification and automatic enforcement provisions, these principles would be a mortal threat to the Soviet empire.

Let me provide a specific example in support of this assertion. Principle II of Basket I states, in part, that:

> The participating states will refrain in their mutual relations, as well as in their international relations in general, from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state * * *.

Principle VI of Basket I states, in part, that:

> The participating states will refrain from any intervention, direct or indirect, individual or collective, in the internal or external affairs failling within the domestic jurisdiction of another participating state, regardless of their mutual relations. They will accordingly refrain from any form of armed intervention or threat of such intervention against another participating state.

If the Soviet Union were to reverse its historic practice of disobeying international law and living up to its responsibilities under international agreements only when it suits its purposes to do so, the situation in Poland would be far different today. In violation of Principles II and VI, the Soviet Union in 1981 conducted a substantial military exercise called Zapad 81. This exercise constituted both a "threat * * * of force against the * * * political independence" of Poland, and a "threat of such [armed] intervention against another participating state."

Far from sanctioning the continuation of Soviet hegemony over Eastern Europe, the Helsinki Final Act is a tool, if it is properly used, to make Soviet maintenance of their empire much more difficult. Indeed, the United States has formally charged the Soviet Union with violation of the security provisions of Basket II relating to confidence building measures for their conduct of Zapad 81 in secret.

Critics who claim that we granted Soviet conquests formal recognition in the Helsinki Final Act ignore the fact that the Final Act allows peaceful changes of international borders by agreement among the participating states. If the iron fist of the Soviet Army were removed from the throats of the nations of Eastern Europe, accommodations resolving post-World War II territorial changes established by Soviet armed force would be possible. I am confident the critics of the process do not have in mind changing Eastern European borders by armed force. That method, after all, is the only one banned by the Final Act.

We can and we must do better in using the Helsinki Final Act's provisions to support our interests and the interests of our allies. The Final Act is a "bully pulpit" from which the leaders of the West can address their people. The Final Act can be either the formal structure through which we guide and manage the advancement of human rights, cooperation, and security, or it can be a method by which we can inform our own people of the reasons for the lack of progress in these areas.

Another major thrust of the debate over the future of the process focuses on the lack of progress in human rights behind the Iron Curtain. In addition to claiming, inaccurately, that the Helsinki Final Act ratified the Soviet empire in Eastern Europe, critics claim that the Soviets signed the Final Act intending to ignore its human rights provisions. This is, so far as it is possible to tell from observing their behavior, probably an accurate charge.

I share the hope of all freedom loving people that the Soviet leadership will change its ways and decide to enter the community of civilized nations by implementing the promises they made to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms. The facts, however, do not encourage this hope.

While there appears little, if any, chance of substantial change in the way the Soviet Union treats its people, the way it does so in the face of its solemn international pledges to the contrary is of increasing importance. We see on the horizon a variety of possible Soviet initiatives as they seek a more active role in world affairs under their new leader, Mikhail Gorbachev. Our task is to make certain that all of these initiatives are seen in the harsh light of the true nature of Soviet totalitarianism and its negative impact on human lives.

Arrogant and cynical Soviet violations of their promises to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms are supremely relevant to the world we face today. The Soviets are seeking agreements on trade and on security issues. If they cannot be trusted to live up to promises on human rights, an area in which their security is not involved, how can they be trusted to live up to agreements on trade or arms reduction?

The Soviet Union has given us an unparalleled opportunity to illuminate the true nature of their goals and values through the way they treat their own people. While complex discussions of numbers of missiles and methods of financing trade put the average American to sleep, 19.3 million Americans can trace their ancestry on one or the other side of their family to Eastern Europe or to the Soviet Union within the past two generations. When we tell the stories of the Shcharanskys, the Beguns, and the Orlovs of the Soviet Union, we tell our own citizens what happens to those who fall under the control of a brutal, monstrous system designed to sustain the power and privileges of its leaders at all costs. We tell our people what is happening to their loved ones, relatives, and friends. The power of this message must not be overlooked.

Finally, let us look at what will happen if we do not continue to participate in the process. First, the stories of the heroes struggling for freedom behind the Iron Curtain will disappear from international discourse. The Helsinki process gives us a way to keep hope alive for the refuseniks and for the dissidents who are being crushed under the weight of the security services of the Soviet Union and its allies. If we pull out, the light of hope will go off all over Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

Second, the allies are unlikely to follow us in any unilateral withdrawal from the process. Since their concerns are weighted more heavily toward the economic, security, and family reunification aspects of the Helsinki Final Act, they would be very difficult to persuade to abandon the process with us. Accordingly, there is a very real risk that the Soviet Union would then be the dominant power in a negotiating process involving all of our allies, but not us. This is a receipe for disaster for the West.

Let us look at a specific example. Under the Helsinki process, there is a continuing negotiation going on in Stockholm, Sweden, called the conference on security, confidence building measures and disarmament in Europe, which is better known by its initials, CDE. If we were to unilaterally pull out of the Helsinki process, CDE would continue. This would present the Soviet Union with something they have been vainly seeking since 1955—an all-European security conference.

An all-European security conference could mean the death of the western alliance. The Soviets would attempt to use such a forum to separate us from our allies and drive us out of Europe. They might be tempted to offer substantial concrete concessions in the bargaining in order to break up NATO. Then, several years later, the Soviet Army would move west again and secure effective Soviet control of Europe.

In conclusion, the Helsinki Final Act and the Helsinki process are enormous assets to the United States and to the West. In order to obtain full benefit from them, we must prove we are serious. We must take advantage of the opportunities inherent in the process to link progress on human rights issues to progress on other issues of importance to the Soviet Union and its allies. We must endeavor to continue to preserve a unified Western alliance on human rights and other issues. We must not allow the voices of hope and freedom behind the Iron Curtain to be silenced.

To make the process work, our State Department must begin to actively coordinate our foreign policy toward the Soviet Union and the East bloc to make human rights one of the guiding principles of our policy. We must have continuing operational linkage between our various negotiations.

We must not make trade agreements until our human rights concerns are satisfied. We must move with caution on other agreements, demanding public verification procedures and automatic compliance provisions in any agreements we sign affecting our security. Most of all, we must keep in the public mind the lessons of the nature of Soviet policy and the quality of Soviet promises in international agreements.

All Americans who believe in human rights must continue their support for the Helsinki process. Without it, human rights in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe will become forgotten issues. Without it, Soviet duplicity and subterfuge in international negotiations will be ignored. Without it, millions of friends of the United States who are struggling for their freedom behind the Iron Curtain will lose hope.

I am pleased to have had this opportunity to discuss this vital subject this morning. The Commission will continue to play a central role in the public debate on the future of the Helsinki process. There will be a sequence of hearings at which interested parties will be encouraged to present their views. I look forward to this process and I encourage all of my colleagues to participate in the continuing debate.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the report entitled "The Helsinki Process—Ten Years Later" be printed in the RECORD. It is an important summary of the pros and cons of the process over 10 years.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE HELSINKI PROCESS—10 YEARS LATER

Ten years after the Helsinki Final Act was signed on August 1, 1975, it is time to review the balance sheet. Few real changes in European relations can be directly attributed to the Helsinki accords. In fact, the record in some critical areas such as human rights and human contacts shows clear backward movement. On the other hand, the Helsinki agreement has contributed to a number of useful, if not vital, developments in other areas over the past ten years. These factors must be a part of any overall assessment of the usefulness of the Helsinki process.

The Helsinki process has given a positive push to a vast range of East-West interactions since 1975. The principles of the Final Act supplied the participating states with a useful diplomatic tool to call public attention to violations of the Final Act. They have also become an international standard to which participating states can be held accountable.

The Belgrade and Madrid Review Meetings, as well as at the numerous experts meetings held as part of the CSCE process, have significantly contributed to unity and cohesion among NATO countries, at a time when the Alliance has been under serious stress in other areas.

Other positive developments have included a small but growing degree of independent activity by the nations of Eastern Europe and a larger role for the Neutral and Non-aligned (NNA) countries in facing the problems confronting comtemporary Europe.

The CSCE process was also the forum for two of the three high-level political contacts between the USSR and the U.S. in 1983 and 1984, a time when bilateral relations were at a low point.

The following section-by-section review of the Helsinki Final Act presents, in capsule form, some of the highlights of developments within the Helsinki process over the past ten years.

I. BASKET I: HUMAN RIGHTS AND CONFIDENCE-BUILDING MEASURES

Human rights

In general, the Basket I Declaration of Principles has kindled new hopes and evoked new awareness of human and civil rights throughout Europe and North America. Despite the repression of the various Helsinki monitoring groups in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, and imprisonment of many of their members, these groups have demonstrated that the Helsinki Final Act is a unique and unprecedented means of exposing human rights abuses in their respective countries. The principles of the Helsinki Final Act permitted the West to maintain continuing pressure on human rights issues, and to make a direct connection between human rights and issues of security in Europe.

A. Human Rights Activists.

From 1975 through 1979, the Soviet government adopted a slightly more tolerant stance towards limited dissent. Known arrests of human rights activists ran at about 80 per year; various unofficial groups functioned; information on dissent reached the West. In late 1979, the Kremlin adopted a much harsher stance against dissidents. Arrest rates tripled to nearly 240 per year, charges against dissidents grew vaguer, sentences became longer, repressive new laws were passed and conditions of incarceration worsened.

The German Democratic Republic also continues to have a poor record on human rights. As a result, there exists in the G.D.R. and estimated 6000 to 9500 prisoners of conscience, most of whom are prosecuted for efforts to emigrate to the F.R.G.

Czechoslovakia's record in implementing the Final Act's human rights provisions has also remained poor. Twenty-three activists remained imprisoned while the human rights movement as a whole struggles on under constant harassment by the regime.

The declaration of martial law in 1981 dealt a blow to the climate for human rights in Poland. Despite two major amnesties in 1983 and 1984, new arrests of prominent Solidarity and human rights activists have brought the number of political prisoners sentenced or under detention in Poland to an estimated 200.

In the decade since Helsinki, Romania has remained one of the most repressive countries in Eastern Europe. Romania's laws and regulations present one of Europe's more extensive arrays of legal constraints on the exercise of civil and political rights. Due to severe repression, there are no organized human rights monitoring groups in Romania today.

Hungary has a positive record for implementing Helsinki and Madrid human rights provisions relative to its Warsaw Pact allies. However, as a one-party regime, the Hungarian Government does not allow full freedom of expression. In 1982 the authorities began a crackdown on the dissident community, signalling a lessening of tolerance of their independent, unofficial publishing activity and forcing them to conduct their activities more discreetly.

In Bulgaria, there has been no organized dissent nor a human rights movement, as far as information reaching the West is concerned. There have, however, regularly been cases of overt repression of individuals for political or religious reasons.

B. Actions Against Labor Unions

In 1977 and 1978, Soviet workers tried to organize two independent labor unions, the Association of Free Trade Unions of Workers and the Free Interprofessional Association of Workers. Both unions were brutally suppressed, and today at least 25 Soviet citizens are imprisoned or held in psychiatric hospitals for their labor union activism or for organizing strikes.

Solidarity organizers in Poland have indicated that the Helsinki Final Act gave impetus to the creation of their union. Despite Madrid pledges respecting free trade unions, Solidarity has been de-legalized since October 1982 and its members and supporters are subject to discrimination, harassment, surveillance, detention, prosecution and frequently to physical attack for continued union activity.

C. Treatment of Prisoners of Conscience

Conditions of detention for the estimated 10,000 Soviet political prisoners have deteriorated markedly. Last year, nine such prisoners died while in detention—a post-Stalin record. There has also been a sharp increase in reported beatings and maltreatment of political prisoners. Helsinki monitors have been brutalized and given long periods of imprisonment.

D. Religious Persecution

About half of the estimated 10,000 Soviet prisoners of conscience are thought to be religious believers who have run afoul of the restrictive Soviet laws on the practice of religion. With 71 known arrests in 1984, religious believers represent the single largest category of new Soviet political prisoners. Although members of all religious groups are subject to harassment and imprisonment, Evangelical Protestants are particularly subject to arrest. The Soviet Union has also banned certain denominations like the Ukrainian Catholic Church, with four million members, and the Jehovah's Witnesses. Anti-semitic publications printed by State publishing houses also have continued to appear.

Although religion in the German Democratic Republic is generally discouraged with believers often subject to discrimination, churches have been allowed some freedom to operate. The Evangelical Lutheran Church, in particular, remains the one element in the G.D.R. where divergent opinions can be expressed in relative freedom.

In Czechoslovakia, religious orders are outlawed and the repression of the Jehovah's Witnesses and the Franciscan Order continues. Citizens who profess their religious beliefs cannot hold public office. The government's unwillingness to accord the church autonomy in the conduct of religious affairs has stalled talks that began 18 months ago between the Vatican and the Government of Czechoslovakia.

Compared with other East European countries, the practice of religion in Poland is relatively free. The Primate, the Episcopate as a whole and the clergy continue to call for greater individual freedom and respect for human rights. The government, however, has engaged in harassment and an increased propaganda campaign directed at the Church. Church-State relations, which had been showing some signs of improvement, have been strained since the Popieluszko murder trial.

There are fourteen recognized religious denominations in Romania. However, religious activity carried beyond the highly circumscribed limits set by the government is dealt with harshly. The Eastern Rite Catholic, or Uniate, Church is still banned, although it repeatedly has appealed for legal reinstatement.

While believers in Hungary do not face the same persecution endured by believers in neighboring states, the church heirarchies do not act freely from State control. Within the Catholic Church, a basic community movement has formed, led by Father Gyorgy Bulanyi, which has criticized the church hierarchy for its acquiescence to State influence.

E. Discrimination Against National Minorities and Forcible Slavicization

There has been little progress in ensuring rights for members of many national minorities in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe. In some states, most notably the USSR, restrictions on national minorities and ethnic groups have intensified; churches and cultural monuments have been destroyed, limitations on the use of native languages have increased and histories have been rewritten. Advocates of greater national and cultural rights—Ukrainians, Balts, Jews, Crimean Tatars, Georgians, Armenians and others—continue to be persecuted.

Bulgaria is involved in a campaign to forcibly Bulgarize its sizeable Turkish minority, said to number 800,000. This campaign reportedly has included brutal coercion and as many as several hundred deaths.

Insensitivity to the cultural heritage and educational needs of Romania's extensive Hungarian and German minorities, inadequate safeguards against discrimination by state authorities and harsh persecution of minority advocates remain a concern.

There are fears among the 600,000-strong Hungarian minority in Czechoslovakia that actions, such as a law which is regarded as detrimental to Hungarian language schooling, may hinder cultural expression. One minority rights activist was recently released after being held in detention for a full year without trial.

F. Forced labor

About five million people are currently engaged in various types of forced labor in the Soviet Union; about half are incarcerated in the Soviet gulag system of 1,100 forced labor camps; the other half are part of mobile labor brigades. Although many of these prisoners are criminals, at least 10,000 of them are prisoners of conscience.

G. Psychiatric Abuse

During the last ten years, thousands of mentally competent Soviet citizens have been subjected to involuntary psychiatric treatment because of religious or political activities. The independent Soviet Working Commission to Investigate the Use of Psychiatry for Political Purposes documented more than 70 cases of such abuse, and was investigating more than 200 other suspected cases when it was suppressed by Soviet authorities. As of Spring, 1985, Amnesty International had documentation on 166 prisoners held in psychiatric hospitals for political or religious beliefs. Psychoactive drugs are routinely used on such prisoners. In 1983, the Soviet Union withdrew from the World Psychiatric Association rather than risk explusion for psychiatric abuse practices.

H. Unofficial Citizens Groups

Following the signing of the Helsinki Accords, several citizens groups were founded in the Soviet Union to monitor implementation of the accord's provisions. Helsinki monitoring groups were founded in Moscow, Ukraine, Lithuania, Armenia and Georgia. In addition, serveral other groups adopted Helsinki principles in monitoring human rights violations i.e., the Working Commisson on Psychiatric Abuse and various religious committees for the defense of believers. Other activists formed the Solzhenitsyn Fund, the Right to Emigration group, the pacifist "Group of Trust" and others. In all cases, the Soviet authorities have responded by acts of persecution, ranging from threats of violence and loss of employment to imprisonment, forced emigration and incarceration in psychiatric hospitals.

Helsinki monitoring groups in Poland were first formed under KOR (Committee for Social Self Defense) auspices in 1979 and later subsumed under the Solidarity Union in 1980. The Helsinki Committee was temporarily disbanded in the immediate aftermath of martial law and the arrests of its members. Since its re-establishment, the Helsinki Committee has steadily issued detailed reports on civil and human rights violations in Poland.

In Czechosolvakia, freedom of expression, assembly and association is entirely subject to the whim of the state, and groups or individuals attempting to exercise such freedom outside of acceptable channels are suppressed. For example, Charter '77, an informal group of human rights activists established in January 1977, and VONS (The Committee for the Unjustly Accused or Persecuted) are targets of frequent harassment.

In Hungary, independent peace groups like Dialogue, religious groups and other unofficial organizations have met with harassment in recent years.

Confidence-building measures

While for the West, human rights and human contacts are the major focus of CSCE, for the Soviet Union the main issue is military security. In fact over the years the major negotiations in the SSCE have concentrated on striking a balance between these two principal areas of the Helsinki Final Act.

At the Madrid CSCE review conference, the major trade-off was agreement to Western proposals for experts meetings on human rights and human contacts in exchange for an open-ended Conference on Confidence and Security-Building Measures and Disarmament in Europe, strongly desired by the Soviet Union. Such a conference was convened in Stockholm on January 17, 1984 and has been in session more or less continuously ever since.

The conference has made little visible progress in reconciling the widely-divergent proposals of the two sides, East and West, based on different interpretations of the Conference mandate. If there is to be any agreement on the radically different sets of proposals—concrete confidence-building measures put forward by the West versus declaratory measures such as non-use of force by the East—it will most probably not come until close to the beginning of the next CSCE review meeting in Vienna scheduled for the fall of 1986.

II. BASKET II: COOPERATION IN ECONOMICS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY AND ENVIRONMENT

The course of East-West economic relations and scientific exchanges during the 1970s suggests that these forms of cooperation are indeed linked. As political relations between the two regions improved in the early 1970s and culminated in the signing of the Helsinki Final Act in 1975, East-West trade expanded. Later in the decade, however, as political tensions arose between East and West, economic and scientific cooperation failed to expand further.

Nonetheless, many positive steps have been taken since 1975 to promote East-West cooperation in the fields of science and technology, the protection of the environment, commerce and industrial cooperation. The CSCE process has initiated a practical and useful dialogue among the industrialized countries of the East and West. Basket II of the Helsinki Final Act has been and will continue to be a useful vehicle for the promotion of economic and functional cooperation between the East and West in balance with improved implementation of other Final Act provisions.

With a membership almost identical with CSCE, the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) is one of five U.N. regional economic commissions and implements many of the Basket II provisions of the Final Act and Madrid Concluding Document of a multilateral nature, particularly in fields such as trade, energy, transportation, and environment.

Economics

A. Trade Growth

U.S. participation in East-West trade not only increased in terms of value in the post-Helsinki period, it increased at a higher rate than did U.S. trade in general. While this trade was conducted by private U.S. firms independently of the U.S. Government, it can be said that the Final Act was important in fostering an atmosphere conducive to the development of East-West trade. By the 1980s, East-West trade as a whole failed to expand further and, in some cases, began to decrease as economic problems and the souring of overall relations following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and the declaration of martial law in Poland, made trading with the East less attractive than in previous years. As these problems have generally bottomed out, East-West trade is again on the rise.

B. Business Contacts and Facilities

There have been positive developments as a result of limited unilateral efforts on the part of Eastern European countries to improve the conditions for Western firms in their countries. While these efforts have not created business facilities comparable to those available in the West, they have improved the situation for foreign business concerns.

Science and Technology

Since the signing of the Final Act of the CSCE, there has been a significant expansion of international cooperation in research and training and in the exchange of information. An example of this cooperation was the increased number of Soviet and American scientists participating in exchange programs in the late 1970s. Interacademy exchanges with the Soviet Union were dropped after the invasion of Afghanistan. The forced exile of Andrei Sakharov has also had a negative impact on such exchanges. Within the CSCE, a Scientific Forum was held in Hamburg in February 1980 which brought together leading scientists from all 35 participating states.

Environment

The primary event in this field, and one that was influenced by the Helsinki process, was the high-level meeting on the environment held under the auspices of the ECE in Geneva in 1979. At the meeting, the Convention on Long-Range, Transboundary Air Pollution was signed.

III. BASKET III: HUMAN CONTACTS, INFORMATION, CULTURAL COOPERATION AND EDUCATIONAL COOPERATION AND EXCHANGES

Human contacts

A. The Helsinki Final Act has, to some degree, led to freer travel policies in Eastern Europe and allowed an overall increase in people-to-people contacts between the United States and Eastern Europe. Since 1975, every East European signatory has taken limited steps toward implementation of the Final Act's human contacts provisions. This has resulted in the resolution of outstanding emigration cases and helped to ease bilateral tensions between Western and Eastern signatories. In a number of Eastern signatories, particularly the USSR, initial improvements made after 1975 have not been sustained.

The human contacts provisions of the Final Act have also provided the main framework for raising individual human contacts cases. The U.S. Government, citing the human contacts provisions of the Final Act as justification, has made frequent intercessions on behalf of relatives of U.S. citizens. Since 1975, thousands of these cases have been favorably resolved.

Soviet performance in the fields of emigration, family reunification, family visits and international travel has deteriorated significantly since 1980. Emigration of Soviet Jews has plummeted to its lowest level since 1975—from a high in 1979 of 51,320 to a low of 896 in 1984. Jews, Germans and Armenians experience severe obstacles in their attempts to emigrate, while the chances for other Soviet citizens are extremely remote. Those refused emigration permission often endure harassment such as loss of work and demotion, unavailability of higher education, surveillance and living under the threat of prosecution. These and other human contacts problems will be discussed at a CSCE experts meeting in Bern, Switzerland beginning in March, 1986.

B. GDR emigration practices are perhaps best symbolized by the stark reality of the Berlin Wall. In the three months following the Helsinki summit, it has been estimated that nearly 100,000 GDR citizens sought to emigrate to West Germany, citing the Final Act's provisions on family reunification. Gradual progress in intra-German cooperation has led to an increase in emigration from the German Democratic Republic and a decrease in restrictions in travel.

C. Romania's emigration record has been mixed. Its emigration laws, regulations and practices remain restrictive. However, individuals whose departure present no economic loss to the country may eventually secure exit permission, but only after years of harassment. Since 1975, emigration from Romania has tripled and last year reached an aggregated high of 21,284.

Information

Harsh new measures have been adopted in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe to discourage free expression and contacts with foreigners. Soviet jamming of radio broadcasts was resumed in the summer of 1980. Direct dial telephone lines, instituted as an Olympic come-on in 1980, were phased out by mid 1982. A few direct-dial lines from Moscow were restored for certain Western commercial firms in 1985. Non-communist newspapers and periodicals are only rarely available through official sources to the average Soviet citizen. Soviet authorities are responsible for non-delivery of mail between the West and the Soviet Union, and frequently interfere with telephone communications. Many Soviet dissidents have had their telephone lines cut off for "abusing" the service.

Under the Helsinki Final Act, the participating states expressed their intention to improve working conditions for foreign journalists by a number of means, such as easing entry visa requirements and internal travel controls, permitting greater access to sources and facilitating the transmission abroad of journalistic products. A bilateral exchange of notes between the U.S. and Soviet Union in 1975 provided for the reciprocal issuance to journalists of multiple entry and exit visas, which had long been sought by Western correspondents permanently accredited in the USSR.

Cultural cooperation

The only major developments in the realm of East-West cultural cooperation and exchanges since the signing of the Final Act have been the completion of bilateral cultural exchange agreements between U.S. and Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania. A major meeting on the subject, the CSCE Cultural Forum, will be held from October 15 to November 29, 1985 in Budapest.

Educational cooperation and exchanges

The Helsinki Final Act has played an important and influential role in facilitating U.S. educational cooperation and exchanges with Eastern Europe. These provisions enhanced conditions for increased and more balanced academic exchanges.

The report, prepared by the staff of the U.S. Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe—the Helsinki Commission—shows that the East block signatories have not lived up to the standards set forth in the accords as had been hoped during the détente era of the early and mid-1970's.

As I say that, I may note that the lights just went on in the Chamber. See, we have a sign from above that what I say is true. Now, if the Soviet Union could only help turn on the lights in terms of human freedom and dignity around the world, what a better place this planet Earth would be.

One of the most notable failings of the Helsinki accords has been the poor performance of some signatories in the critical area of human rights.

I would like to note that the Soviet Union in particular has ignored the human rights provisions of the Helsinki accords. We can only characterize their human rights record as "despicable." It is obvious that the Soviet Union today has little regard for the fundamental freedoms of thought, conscience, religion, and belief that were cornerstones of the agreements signed 10 years ago.

I believe my colleagues will agree with the cochairman of the Commission, Representative HOYER, and me that the lack of significant progress in the area of human rights such as we find in the Soviet Union is not and should not be viewed as a denial of the credibility and utility of the CSCE process. This process has legitimized human rights as a matter of diplomatic discourse among nations and has placed it on the agenda of our allies.

Mr. President, the 10-year review of the Helsinki process reveals:

Since 1979, the Kremlin has adopted a much harsher stand toward dissidents: arrests tripled, charges grew vaguer, and sentences became longer.

Detention conditions for the 10,000 political prisoners in the U.S.S.R. have worsened. There has been a reported sharp increase in beatings and maltreatment of prisoners.

Thousands of mentally competent Soviet citizens have been subjected to involuntary psychiatric treatment because of religious or political activities.

Soviet performance in the field of emigration, family reunification, family visits, and international travel has deteriorated significantly since 1980. Jewish, German, and Armenian annual emigration rates fell to under 1,000 per group. Emigration of Soviet Jews is at the lowest level since 1975.

The Soviets have resumed the jamming of radio broadcasts; frequently interfere with telephone communications; and bear responsibility for the nondelivery of mail from the West.

Advocates of greater national and cultural rights in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe continued to be persecuted—these include Ukranians, Balts, Jews, Crimean Tatars, Georgians, Armenians, and others.

About 5 million people are being held in various types forced labor in the U.S.S.R. Although many are criminals—at least 10,000 are prisoners of conscience.

About 6,000 to 9,500 prisoners of conscience are being held in the German Democratic Republic, most for wanting to emigrate to the Federal Republic of Germany.

Romania remains one of the most repressive countries in Eastern Europe.

The 1981 declaration of martial law in Poland dealt a major blow to human rights. Despite two major amnesties since then, new arrests of political prisoners have brought those under detention to an estimated 200.

In Czechoslovakia, freedom of expression, assembly, and association is entirely subject to the whim of the State. Religious orders are outlawed and there is continued repression of the Jehovah's Witnesses and the Franciscan Order.

I would like to particularly point out that the treatment of Jews in the U.S.S.R. has not improved since the signing of the Helsinki Final Act 10 years ago. Under the thinly disguised veil of anti-Zionism, the Soviet Union has harshly persecuted their Jewish community.

During this time of supposed improved relations between the United States and the Soviet Union, the rate of emigration of Soviet Jewry is barely above the last year's level. Although a relatively high number of Soviet Jews were allowed to emigrate in April of this year, that number has since declined dramatically.

In 1979, over 51,000 Jews were allowed to emigrate from the Soviet Union. In 1984, the Soviet Union allowed only 896 Soviet Jews to emigrate, a 98-percent decrease and the lowest year in recent memory.

Those people applying to emigrate and denied permission, refuseniks, must endure intimidation and persecution. Refuseniks are forced from their jobs and called "parasites of society." The number of Jews interested in emigrating is estimated to be 400,000.

However, restricting the freedom of Soviet Jewry does not end with closed borders. Any attempt to preserve Jewish culture is met with swift retribution. Those brave enough to teach Hebrew, such as Iosef Begun, are harassed, threatened, and incarcerated, usually on trumped-up charges. The crime of these Jews is desire to preserve their ethnic heritage.

Like all citizens of the Soviet Union, Jews are severely restricted from practicing their religion. Jews, however, are afforded none of the token freedoms that other religions are allowed. Jews cannot produce or import religious articles or publish prayer books or periodicals, or have any central structure or organization. In a nation with the third largest Jewish population, there are only 50 synagogues. Jewish cemeteries have been and continue to be desecrated or converted to other uses.

The Kremlin's crackdown on Jewish emigration and the teaching of Jewish heritage is a rerun of the state-sponsored anti-Semitism we have witnessed throughout history. It provides that the Soviet Union has far to go before it justifies its signature on the Helsinki Final Act.

As the leader of the Free World, it is our duty to call upon the U.S.S.R to end this vicious and needless antisemitic campaign. We must emphasize that the continuation of this persecution presents a real obstacle to constructive relations between the United States and the Soviet Union.

Indeed, there is linkage between their conduct on human rights and any agreements on increased trade or other bilateral accords. The normalization of relationships becomes very important. Peace is important. But Soviet actions on human rights are fundamental and basic to any meaningful agreements that the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. may hope to enter into now or in the future.

Mr. President, I wish that this Senator and the Commission would have been able to present a brighter picture. But the truth should not be colored. The picture we present is bleak. I believe that the Helsinki Commission and the Helsinki process should be utilized as a rallying cry and as a bastion of strength for truth and justice. We must use our potential as the leader of the Free World to assist those who are denied human rights and who have no hope other than the strength of this country.

Thank you, Mr. President.

RINGING OF CONVENING BELL

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I understand it may be necessary to do a few mechanical things right now about ringing the convening bell and a few other things we should have done earlier. I wonder if we might do that now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MATTINGLY). The clerk will ring the bells. The legislative clerk rang the convening bell of the Senate.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me advise my colleagues who may be listening, it is not a vote bell. The announced convening hour is 9:30 a.m. It is now 10:10 a.m. We have been making progress. I thank the distinguished Senator from New York. We have probably made a little history today in the U.S. Senate. As far I can tell, there have not been many recent times when we were without illumination. Of course perhaps I should say that we have always had and continue to have illumination in the Senate, but we have rarely been without lights

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR DOLE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I commend the distinguished chairman of the so-called Helsinki Commission for his efforts to focus on the shortcomings, particularly in the Soviet Union and other Communist bloc countries, insofar as human rights are concerned.

TENTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE SIGNING OF THE HELSINKI FINAL ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the cause of human rights is at the core of American foreign policy because it is central to America's conception of itself. These values are hardly an American invention, yet America has perhaps been unique in its commitment to base its foreign policy on the pursuit of such ideals. For this reason, Mr. President, it is appropriate that we mark the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act. As former cochairman of the Commission on the Security and Cooperation in Europe, I have a special appreciation of what the Helsinki process is all about.

The Helsinki Final Act, now 10 years old, was born at what seemed to be an encouraging moment in East-West relations: The United States and the Soviet Union had just reached the first agreements on strategic arms limitation. Broad avenues for economic cooperation appeared to be opening. Genuine progress on human rights seemed possible. And so Helsinki was born as an attempt to deal with the problems of security, economic relations, contracts between our peoples, their basic freedoms, and standards of international conduct.

However, while the Helsinki Final Act is an eloquent statement of aspirations, to which the United States gladly subscribes, tragically, the U.S.S.R. has not approached the Helsinki process with the same commitment and vigor that we have. The Russians promised to abide by Helsinki but they lied. Our records are a true testimony to our respective forms of government.

Reflecting on the experience of the last 10 years, we are disappointed, but not really surprised, that the years since the signing have seen many setbacks for our efforts to strength security, expands cooperation, build mutual confidence, and protect human rights. The record speaks for itself: Simply, there are governments in the East which have from the outset treated their commitment to human rights under the Final Act with open contempt.

Mr. President, the words made famous by Ernest Heminway, while not spoken in the context of the Helsinki process, is still timely. As Americans, we are legitimately concerned about the manner in which the governments of others countries treat their people. As Americans, they insist that our own Government make known the views of the American public on this vital issue and the international community. The point is clear. We must all learn from history. And the one lesson taught by the past is that respect for human rights leads to a relaxation of international tension, not the other way around.

In the most profound sense, the Helsinki process represents an historic effort to bridge the divisions between East and West in Europe. It is modest in its expectations but profound in embodying the most basic interests, deepest convictions, and highest hopes of all the people of Europe. There can be no lasting security of cooperation in Europe as long as one government is afraid of its own people and seeks reassurance in imposing a system of force on its people—and on its neighbors.

Secretary of State Shultz, who is presently in Helsinki to mark the 10th anniversary, should have our position clear: That our concern for human rights is permanent and we will continue to advance this cause in every appropriate forum. We will continue to speak the truth. The struggle for human rights knows no political affiliation, it will remain a permanent priority of American foreign policy.

Thank you Mr. President.

THE ANNIVERSARY OF THE SIGNING OF THE HELSINKI FINAL ACT

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, on August 1, we will be commemorating the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, better known as the Helsinki accords.

Ten years ago 35 nations including the United States and the U.S.S.R. signed a document whose purpose was the promotion of peace, security, justice and cooperation among themselves and with all the other nation states of the world. The Helsinki process, and follow up, is an important one in international relations and must be supported and enhanced. Unfortunately however, Helsinki has fallen far short of our expectations for it.

In the years since the signing of this document of goodwill, the U.S.S.R. has violated every single one of the principles of the Helsinki agreement both within its own borders and in its actions toward other nations.

Nowhere are Soviet violations of the universally accepted humanitarian spirit of the Helsinki accords more flagrant than in its invasion of the ancient and free nation of Afghanistan. Here the Soviets, behind a screen of enforced unaccessibility, have let the mask of humanitarian concern fall from its face. In Afghanistan we see the true expression of Soviet intentions.

The 18th semiannual report on implementation of Helsinki Final Act submitted by the President to the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe indicates that:

> The Soviet Union has continued to violate both the letter and spirit of principles guiding relations between states as set forth in the Helsinki Final Act. The Soviet Union persists in its occupation of Afghanistan and in its efforts to eradicate national opposition. In conducting its ruthless war against Afghanistan, the Soviet Union has used chemical weapons, bombed civilian targets, used ground and air forces to destroy villages and crops, and employed weapons intended to cripple or main noncombatants.

If we wonder what it would be like to fight a war with the U.S.S.R. we need look no further than Afghanistan, for here a small and largely unarmed people is being subjected to the total war of the Red Army. Not since the times of Genghis Khan, and maybe not even then, has a people been starved, maimed, tortured, murdered, burned, bombed and plagued into extinction. That is the way the Soviet Union fights its war, in violation of every principle of international law.

The Helsinki accords forbid the threat or use of force. They proclaim the inviolability of frontiers and territorial integrity of states, the nonintervention in internal affairs and perhaps, most importantly, the respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms including the freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief.

Helsinki Watch, an organization which monitors violations of the accords, has written a report called "Tears, Blood and Cries," documenting human rights violations in Afghanistan.

From time to time I have submitted portions of this report to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Today, on the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki accords, I would again like to commend this report to my colleagues to remind us of the ephemeral nature of Soviet promises and the brutal face of Soviet reality.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, under the special order the Senator from Kansas had 15 minutes. I have used about 2 minutes of that time, I believe. I yield the remainder of my time to the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I thank the majority leader.

TENTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE HELSINKI FINAL ACT

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, 10 years ago the U.S. Government raised the world's hope that, through diplomacy, the iron bars that imprison all who live within the Soviet Empire had been parted just a bit, and that, over the years, through diplomacy, little by little, the Soviet Empire would become a little less rigorous toward its people. We all wanted this very much, not just for humanitarian reasons, but because we believe, along with Andrei Sakharov, that the danger to peace comes not from weapons, but from governments that are unconstrained by the people they govern. The essence of the Helsinki accords, as presented to the free people of the West by such eminent statesmen as Helmut Schmidt and Henry Kissinger was that we would assure the Soviet Empire's masters that we would not challenge their legal right to their empire, while in return the masters of the empire pledged themselves not to be so heavy-handed.

Ten years later, all but two of the Soviet Union's Helsinki monitors are in the gulag or in mental hospitals. While Jews were then emigrating at a rate of 50,000 per year, today the rate is about 900 per year. By general agreement—and you can see it in all the papers of this country and Europe—the masters' hand is heavier than ever. From this we can draw a host of lessons about the Soviet Union and about how we are compelled to deal with it. But today I want to draw just one lesson about another matter, on which there can really be no argument: the eminent Western statesmen who conceived the Helsinki accords for the West were eminently wrong. Their view of the accords has not prevailed. Rather, the Soviet view of the accords has prevailed. Our statesmen proved to have little grasp of the fundamentals of statecraft. They were outdone not just by the Soviets, but above all by their own failure to face up to the twin questions that every negotiator must answer: "Does the other side really mean to keep its commitments? What do we do if it does not"?

Traditional training in diplomacy stresses the necessity of finding the true common ground between two parties, and the overriding importance of making sure that all parties understand everyone's commitments in precisely the same way. To neglect such factors is not to accomplish what the agreement is supposed to accomplish, but to sow the seeds of a greater discord. That discord we witness today.

But our very clever contemporary Western diplomats have adopted an entirely opposite set of precepts when working with the Soviet Union. Knowing, however dimly, that the Soviet Union's fundamental purposes are irreconcilable with those of free peoples, and knowing that Western public opinion would reject outright capitulation to Soviet objectives, yet zealously desiring agreements "for the sake of advancing the prospects of peace," our experts have decided to fudge.

Time and time again, they have deliberately entered into agreements that they knew full well the Soviets deliberately understand very differently from the way Western opinion understands them. Time and time again they have entered into agreements that they know the Soviets do not intend to keep. Moreover, they have done so completely aware that they themselves were not prepared to recommend any move to force the Soviets to comply.

Why have they done this? Because each of them wants to "bring home the bacon" from negotiations, regardless of how rancid it might be. Another reason is that our experts genuinely, but ever so foolishly, regard the diplomatic process as a good thing in itself. If we can just engage them in the process on any subject, the thinking goes, we can "hold their feet to the fire." Mr. President, I ask simply: What fire? The last refuge of the experts on the Helsinki process is that it has given us a chance to "raise the subject" of Soviet violations of human rights at international gatherings.

Who are we kidding? Does this mean that prior to 1975 we did not have the right, indeed the duty, to speak the plain truth about the Soviet Empire's denial to its citizens of every right known to man? Of course we did in fact, if one simply glances at the West's newspapers prior to 1969, one sees the Soviet Empire referred to routinely in far harsher terms than one sees today. The very last corner of the "experts" refuge is "the Europeans." If we did not have Soviet acquiescence, in the Helsinki Final Act, that it is OK to raise the subject of human rights, "the Europeans" would be scandalized if we do it, even abandoning the alliance and running into the Soviet's arms.

I have no doubt that "the Europeans" with whom our "experts" habitually fraternize feel this way. But I also have no doubt that such are not the majority of Europeans. At any rate, for the sake of an alliance with such people, it would not be worth turning ourselves into moral hypocrites.

So, in sum, the pitiable sufferings of Soviet dissidents who believed in our experts' views of the Helsinki process should teach us the value of those views. The 10 years since the Helsinki Final Act do not teach us anything about the Soviets that we did already not know. They do however tell us that the people at the State Department and in the foreign policy establishment who severely pass themselves off as the fountain of wisdom on foreign affairs have proved incompetent. They have allowed the figments of their desires and imaginations to overcome the respect due to the fundamentals of their craft. Perhaps now, this decade later, we should ask for an honest reappraisal. The purpose of negotiations should be to achieve real change, not temporary satisfaction.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I join my colleagues today in this body and the other body in commemoration of the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act. It is my honor to do so both in my capacity as a Security and Cooperation in Europe Commissioner and as one who is keenly concerned with the eradication of human rights abuses throughout the world.

The Final Act was signed on August 1, 1985 by the United States, Canada, the Soviet Union, and every nation in Europe with the exception of Albania. Signatory nations agreed to expand their cooperation with other signatory states in a number of areas, including those relating to military, economic, and humanitarian affairs. Further, they made explicit their intention to "respect and put into practice" a number of specific principles. Among those was the principle of respect for basic human rights.

The act created, for the first time, a means whereby the governments of signatory nations would be open to regular and systematic examinations of their record of human rights improvements and abuses. Each nation affirmed its committment to endure such examination and potential criticism by other Helsinki accord nations. The lengthy periodic review meetings provide a forum for these encouters. It has evolved over these 10 years that the meetings have offered a way in which to draw attention to the myriad abuses of human rights perpetrated by the Soviets and the Eastern bloc countries.

However, it cannot be said that there are fewer violations of human rights throughout the world or among signatory nations today than there were 10 years ago. Among the worst offenders is the Soviet Union. "The Eighteenth Semiannual Report on the Implementation of The Helsinki Final Act" states, unequivocally:

> The Soviet Union has continued to violate both the letter and spirit of principles guiding relations between states as set forth in the Helsinki Final Act.

Notable is their use of chemical weapons against the freedom fighters of occupied Afghanistan.

The Soviets flagrantly abuse the rights of their own citizens as well. Incarceration in mental hospitals or prison has befallen religious and peace activists and those working for the achievement of greater political and cultural rights. The Soviets have continued their widespread campaign to eliminate all religious observances. The Sakharovs remain in internal exile in Gorky. The mistreatment of dissidents of all types goes on.

Further, in a now well publicized and most distressing development, the number of individuals currently allowed to emigrate from the Soviet Union is at its lowest level in years. Only 327 Jews were allowed to leave the U.S.S.R. between October 1, 1984 and February 28, 1985. Anti-Semitic propaganda abounds. There are reports that at no time since the reign of Stalin have there been more acts of official discrimination and repression directed against Soviet Jews. I have spoken to this body before about the plight of a refusenik whom I have adopted. His name is Yuli Kasharovsky and he has been attempting to emigrate from the Soviet Union since 1971. He has been denied work, placed under house arrest, imprisoned on trumped-up charges and even led away from his home in chains. His is not an isolated case, Mr. President. It is but one example of a widespread pattern of human rights abuses.

Violations have taken place in other countries as well. The Rumanian regime's performance in observing basic human rights continues to deteriorate. Their citizens are denied the rights of free speech and free assembly. Those wishing to emigrate are often demoted or they may lose their jobs altogether. Bulgarian violations of rights are at an all-time high. It is reported that:

> Bulgarian officials have not prevented security forces from committing the reported, detention and murder of the ethnic Turkish minority during the government's campaign to assimilate these people by forcing them to change from Turkish names to Bulgarian names.

I could go on. The picture which I have outlined is bleak. However, it is not intended to discourage. We must not abandon our responsibility to work for improvements whenever we have the opportunity to do so. The "Helsinki process" aids us by creating a climate which allows us to remain cognizant of those abuses which occur. We must remain aware. Further, we must redouble our efforts to eliminate the mistreatment of individuals and groups throughout the world. The Helsinki Final Act is a document of hope. It is with the hope that we may someday live in a world in which nations abide by the principles enshrined in The Final Act that we celebrate the 10th anniversary of its signing.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, this morning a number of Members of the Senate—those who are and others who are not members of the Helsinki Commission—had statements for the RECORD.

Mr. President, I am pleased to participate in the commemoration of the 10th anniversary of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. On August 1, 1975, heads of governments from the United States, Canada, the Soviet Union, and 32 European nations signed this international document, better known as the Helsinki accords. Nearly every aspect of East-West relations, including military security, trade and economic cooperation, and humanitarian rights are addressed in the Helsinki accords. In the last 10 years, periodic conferences and subordinate meetings have been held to review the implementation of the Helsinki provisions and to discuss new measures to strengthen cooperation and security between the signatory nations. Although each provision of this comprehensive document is of equal importance in the pursuit of peaceful relations, I would like to focus upon the basic human rights standards—the universal principles of freedom of thought, conscience, and belief—which are rooted in the hearts of humanity.

In agreeing to the Helsinki accords, the signatory nations have acknowledged their adherence to principles of freedom, not necessarily to the sophisticated modes of parliamentary democracy, but to the basic rights of citizens to emigrate, to be reunited with their families, and to enjoy at least minimal respect by their government of their individuality and personal worth. Unfortunately, blatant abuse of these fundamental rights is evident in many signatory countries, particularly in the Soviet Union. It is a well-known fact that Soviet authorities have consistently violated the basic human rights of that nation's citizens. Men and woman are restricted, deprived, and often imprisoned merely because of their religious or political beliefs.

The arrest and exile of Andrei Sakharov, a renowned Soviet dissident scientist and advocate of individual rights, is just one example of the atrocities carried out by Soviet officials. Sakharov has dedicated many years of his life to the welfare of all mankind. He is the founder of the "Committee for Human Rights," which stresses the vital need for fair trials, a free press, and freedom for political prisoners within his own country. His ideals formed the basis of the human rights section of the Helsinki accords, and he is the first Russian to ever win the Nobel Peace Prize. His accomplishments are numerous and worthy of praise. Any yet, these very achievements are discredited by his own government.

Sakharov has been classifed as a "renegade" who has sold out to the West. His "subversive activities" have cost him the renouncement of several state titles and awards. Because of his condemnation of the invasion of Afghanistan by the Soviet Union, he is being held hostage in the city of Gorky which is isolated from the outside world.

The punishment of a man with such a brilliant scientific career and with such a deep compassion for the suffering of others is beyond comprehension. More importantly, Sakharov's endurance of continual harassment and pain is to be admired by all of us. His sustaining hope for social justice represents the human enterprise that exists outside the totalitarian Soviet system.

Anatoly Shcharansky represents the plight of Soviet Jews wishing to live as Jews. As he became actively involved in the human rights movement in his country, as he became increasingly aware of the injustices prevalent in Soviet society, and as he became more outspoken about the inequitable treatment many of his fellow citizens endure, Soviet authorities responded with severe pressure—eventually leading to his arrest on March 15, 1977. Shcharansky was charged with treason, was unlawfully tried, and was ultimately sentenced to 13 years in prison. His crime was that he issued reports about his government's abuse of the human rights provisions of the Helsinki accords. Shcharansky's tragic fate is not unique. Many Soviet citizens who became Helsinki monitors are incarcerated in prisons, labor camps, and psychiatric hospitals, or are serving terms of exile.

The plight of the Sakharovs and the Shcharanskys is a significant one. Their strong determination, trememdous courage, and undying sustaining power must never go unnoticed. Their message to the world is clear. We must never lose sight of what we believe in, and we must never cease striving toward the fundamental rights of freedom of religion, thought, and conscience to which every human being is entitled. Perhaps we will never reach these worthy ideals for all mankind, but that should not stop us from trying.

On the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki accords, let's take this opportunity to reaffirm our commitment to human rights and the common values which unite us with our NATO allies. The defense of democratic ideals and the protection of individual freedoms are how we, as a society, will be judged by history and future generations.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, 10 years ago, on August 1, 1975 the leaders of 33 European nations, the United States and Canada signed the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe [CESE]. After 2 years of intensive negotiations, the signing ceremony represented a breakthrough in international diplomatic relations. While the Final Act encompasses nearly every aspect of East-West relations, for the first time, human rights were accorded the status of a fundamental element of those relations. The 35 participating states recognized that respect for human rights is as important a factor in state-to-state relations as respect for national borders or refraining from the use of force.

Significantly, the Helsinki Final Act also called upon the signatories to promote exchanges and contacts in the cultural, educational and scientific fields as a means of achieving greater mutual understanding among people. Such humanitarian cooperation among the people of the 35 nations, it was believed, should lead to a lessening of tensions among the governments of those nations and, eventually, to the establishment of genuine peace.

As a founding member and original cochairman of the U.S. Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, I have witnessed the hard realities of implementing the provisions of the Helsinki Final Act. Despite pledges to respect human rights and facilitate the freer movement of people, information and ideas, the Soviet Union imprisons human rights activists, denies Jews and others the right to join their relatives abroad, jams Western radio broadcasts and severely restricts the exercise of religious rights. Unfortunately, many of the Warsaw Pact nations, especially Czechoslovakia and Romania, have followed the Soviet example of repression.

Yet, there have been positive developments in the last 10 years as well as accomplishments that are too often forgotten in light of the overwhelming amount of work yet to be achieved. The Helsinki Final Act was the impetus for theater seminars, academic exchange agreements, writers' conference, legal statutes to ease travel restrictions and joint scientific research projects—all of which have borne positive results for both East and West. These improvements in private and official contracts are evidence that the Eastern governments are aware of their commitments to some provisions of the Final Act.

Mr. President, we must strive to ensure that other commitments—especially the human rights pledges—are met with no less vigor and determination. One method to achieve this is to ensure that the discussion of further exchanges among artists, businessmen, writers, journalists and politicians be linked to considerations of the State's recognition of the individual's right to exercise fundamental rights: To practice his religion, to live in the country of his choice, to work in his field or to travel. Only by constantly reminding the Eastern governments of their obligation to respect human rights as we engage in cooperative endeavors will we create the kind of leverage that will ultimately ensure successful exchange programs—those which incorporate balance, reciprocity and dignity among all citizens' contacts, East and West. In short, the Helsinki Final Act set a standard of governmental conduct that must apply to all human interaction.

Ours is not an easy task. The drafters of the Final Act recognized that achievement of the goals embodied in that historic document would be slow and gradual. Yet we should not be deterred by temporary setbacks. A firm and uncompromising commitment to the value of human rights will eventually produce the results of a more humane and just world.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, August 1, 1985 marks the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act.

This document provides a framework to work to resolve the humanitarian, economic, political, and military differences that divide Europe. It stresses that improvement in each of these areas is equally important to strengthening security and cooperation.

The Western signers of the Final Act, to preserve and reinforce the principles of the accord, have instituted a thorough review of the situation in Europe in order to determine whether these principles are being observed. There have been some positive results in the area of human rights in Eastern Europe, as well as in economic cooperation between East and West. However, the overall performance of the Warsaw Pact nations, including the Soviet Union, has remained seriously flawed. The Soviet Union, above all other states, continues to violate this agreement, particularly principle seven, which calls for "respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief."

Proponents of greater cultural and political freedoms have been targeted by Soviet officials and treated in ways that are clearly in violation of the Helsinki Final Act. Andrei Sakharov and his wife Yelena Bonner remain under virtual house arrest at their place of exile in the closed city of Gorki. They are denied contact with friends and relatives. They have not received proper medical care which they require as an elderly couple.

One of the most blatant violations of the accord is the treatment of Dr. Yuri Orlov and the Moscow Helsinki Watch Group. The group, founded in 1976 by Dr. Orlov, was meant to monitor violations of the Helsinki Final Act from within the Soviet Union, but it has been persecuted so harshly that it no longer operates. Dr. Orlov embodies the plight of the group; the 60-year-old physicist was incarcerated in a hard labor camp for 7 years and is presently in internal exile in the remotest corner of Siberia. His health has been destroyed by the term in the labor camp—he suffers from chronic illnesses, including a serious kidney disease, and has lost all of his teeth. Other members of the group have been sentenced to psychiatric hospitals, prisons, labor camps, or internal exile. Three members are known to have died after years of mistreatment in Soviet labor camps. This is just one known and isolated case; any person or group who attempt to express themselves outside the framework of the Soviet system continues to run the risk of persecution and arrest.

Soviet performance in other areas of human rights has been equally deplorable. For example, the current regime continues to use internment in psychiatric hospitals as punishment for dissidents and free thinkers. Perfectly sane individuals are forcibly committed to such facilities, resulting in the deterioration of their mental and physical health, and sometimes in their death.

Thousands of citizens remain in the Soviet Union, despite their wish to join relatives abroad. The Soviet Government continues to deny its citizens, particularly Jews, exit permission from the country, claiming that the vast majority of those who wished to emigrate have already done so. Paradoxically, those who apply to leave and are forced to stay, face mental and physical harassment while they remain in the country.

The situation of religious believers also remains grim. For example, a harsh campaign was recently instituted against Hebrew teachers and Jewish cultural activists, resulting in more than a dozen arrests. Ukrainian dissidents and Eastern Rite Catholics have been subjected to mounting harassment. Baptists, Pentacostals, and Russian Orthodox activists are also subjected to suppression, persecution, and often arrest and imprisonment.

In the international arena, the Soviet war in Afghanistan is a direct violation of the principles of the accord governing noninterference in the affairs of other nations. Along the same lines, Soviet support for the Vietnamese occupation of Kampuchea also violates the same principles.

The Soviet Union signed and agreed to the principles of the Helsinki Final Act. Why then does it remain one of the chief violators of this accord? These continuing internal and international violations constitute an open affront to the constructive steps which the document seeks to promote.

As we observe the anniversary of this important and farsighted document, let us reaffirm our commitment to the principles by the Helsinki Final Act. With our strong support, we can improve human conditions and freedoms throughout the world.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, August 1 marks the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki accords. I would like to take a moment to reflect on what this agreement has meant to this country.

Before the United States and its allies agreed to participate in the European Security Conference, at which the Helsinki accords were adopted, we insisted on certain conditions and prerequisites. First, that the United States and Canada had to be participants in the European negotiations. Second, the Soviet Union and Poland were required to sign treaties normalizing relations with West Germany. Third, a bilateral agreement was signed normalizing relations between West Germany and East Germany. Fourth, negotiations on mutual force reductions in Central Europe were initiated. Finally, the Soviets agreed that the conference should recognize the independence, territorial integrity, and right to self-determination of every European country. Most U.S. objectives were thus achieved prior to the security conference.

Under the declaration of principles of the Helsinki Final Acts, each side agreed to respect the sovereignty of each others borders, including the right to change frontiers by peaceful means. The territorial aspects remain central to the accords, although in recent years more emphasis has been placed on the human rights provisions.

The human rights provisions have provided the West with legitimate international means to press the Soviets and East European governments on their failure to comply with conditions pertaining to the free flow of information and people across borders. We must continue to stress the Soviet and East bloc failures in this area.

Importantly, while relations between the United States and the Soviet Union remain clouded, the Helsinki accords do provide a basis for a continuing dialogue between the East and the West. In addition, the accords have helped the governments of Eastern Europe loosen their diplomatic dependence on the Soviet Union. Bilateral and multilateral relations with the West have improved as the East Europeans have struggled to gain maneuvering room from the Soviets. The neutral countries and nonaligned Yugoslavia, threatened with obscurity between the two blocs, have found a new role for themselves through the Helsinki process.

Mr. President, let us hope that our observance of the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki accords will further promote the continuous process of change within the Eastern bloc. Steady pressure from the West and world opinion may eventually ease more barriers between East and West. The Helsinki process remains one avenue for the pursuit of such changes.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I rise today to speak regarding the upcoming 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki accords. Mr. President 35 nations have gathered in Helsinki to recognize this agreement which was designed, at least by the west, with the purpose of improving Soviet human rights compliance.

Two questions must be addressed by all governments attending this ceremony:

First, whether there has indeed been any improvement in the Soviet Government's behavior in regard to the way they treat their citizens and Second, if the answer is no, whether the Helsinki process is worth continuing.

Clearly on its face the answer to the first question is no. Conditions are worse for Soviet Jews and other religious minorities now than they have been in years.

I believe the answer to the second question, at least for the moment is yes.

Two years ago the junior Senator from Arizona and I formed the Interparliamentary Group for Human Rights [IPG]—a group dedicated to improving Soviet compliance with the Helsinki accords. That group has grown to include over 700 parliamentarians in 15 countries. I ask unanimous consent that the attached IPG report on the recent Ottawa human rights experts meeting be printed in the RECORD in full.

In order for Helsinki to be determined to be a viable process we must demonstrate to the Soviets, united Western resolve on the importance of human rights. The IPG will work diligently from now until the 1986 Vienna review conference to that end. IPG activity will center around parliamentary meetings, communications programs, and parliamentary visits to the U.S.S.R. We are dedicated to raising the consciousness of the world community regarding Soviet human rights abuses and it is incumbent upon all of us to try to constructively improve the Helsinki prior to disavowing the process. Throwing the baby out with the bath water will not improve the lot of Soviet Christians and Jews whose only desire is to believe and live as they wish.

Let us redouble our efforts over the next year and a half to increase Soviet compliance with the Helsinki by constantly focusing the spotlight on the accords.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IPG REPORT CONCERNING OTTAWA HUMAN RIGHTS EXPERTS MEETING

The Ottawa human rights experts meeting concluded on June 17, 1985. This report will summarize the Ottawa proceedings, analyze the results of the Ottawa meeting with reference to the Helsinki process and Soviet human rights performance, and will offer conclusions and recommendations as to IPG intiatives to strengthen the Helsinki process and to prepare for future human rights experts meetings.

The Ottawa experts meeting was called for in the Concluding Document of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) Madrid Review Conference (September 9, 1983). The experts discussed questions concerning respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, as embodied in the Helsinki Final Act, by the 35 Helsinki signatory nations (Canada, the United States, the Soviet Union, and all of Eastern and Western Europe, with the exception of Albania). The mandate of the Madrid meeting called for a concluding document and recommendations to the participating States.

SUMMARY OF OTTAWA PROCEEDINGS

The Ottawa meeting opened on May 7, 1985. Prior to the formal opening, a two-week preparatory meeting was held to establish the agenda and procedures for the experts meeting. There was considerable disagreement among the participating States as to the agenda and procedures, particularly in two areas: (1) whether portions of the meeting would be open to the press and public; and (2) the amount of time given to discussion at each plenary session. The compromise reached established the following agenda and procedures:

(1) The Ottawa meeting would have two sessions open to the press and public, the welcoming remarks by Canadian Foreign Minister Joe Clark on May 7 and the closing statement made by delegations on June 17.

(2) The first three weeks of the Ottawa meeting (May 7-28) would be devoted to opening statements and a review of implementation by the participating States of their performance on questions of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

(3) Three weeks (May 28-June 14) would be devoted to a discussion of proposals for recommendations and the drafting of a concluding document which would contain the experts' recommendations.

During the review of implementation phase, a thorough discussion of the participating States' human rights performance was undertaken. Many Western and neutral delegations strongly criticized the U.S.S.R.'s performance in the areas of religous freedom, the repression of Soviet Helsinki monitoring groups, the free movement of peoples and information, the abuse of psychiatry for political purposes, officially sanctioned anti-religous propaganda, the treatment of prisoners, and the reduction in the emigration of Soviet Jews and ethnic Germans.

The participating States could not agree on either recommendations or a concluding document for the meeting. Proposals for recommendations and a concluding document were offered by 17 Western nations acting as a group, by 7 Eastern nations (including the Soviet Union) on behalf of the Warsaw Pact, and by the neutral/nonaligned (NNA) nations.

The Western proposals contained numerous recommendations for improving human rights performance.[1] For example, the Western nations proposed: (1) a re-publication by all States of the Helsinki Final Act and the Madrid Concluding Document, as well as other relevant international agreements on human rights; (2) guaranteeing the right of persons to give and receive religious instruction; (3) guaranteeing religious believers the freedom to establish contact with co-religionists abroad; (4) guaranteeing the right to produce, acquire and make full use of materials necessary to the practice of religion or belief; (5) respecting the rights of national minorities and safeguarding national and cultural identity; (6) protecting individuals from psychiatric abuse; (7) allowing foreign observers at legal proceedings; (8) responding to inquiries about human rights performance from governments, private individuals or groups, etc.

The Warsaw pact proposals repeated familiar Soviet positions on human rights. The proposals referred to peace as the fundamental human right, and called on the States to focus on racism, unemployment, homelessness, the right to work, etc. These proposals, which concentrated on issues outside the CSCE framework and did not address Soviet and East European performance under the Final Act, were rejected by the Western and NNA delegations.

The NNA proposal attempted to reach a compromise between East and West which would result in a concluding document at Ottawa. The NNA proposal recommended that the participating States consider, at the Vienna Review Conference, the possibility of holding further human rights experts meetings. This proposal, was rejected by the Soviet Union, with the result that no concluding document or recommendations could be agreed to at Ottawa, and therefore, the Madrid mandate was not achieved.

During the closing remarks, the frustration felt by many Western and neutral delegations surfaced. The failure to agree on a concluding document was properly ascribed by many delegations to the obstructive attitude of the Soviet delegation. Further, some delegations suggested the lack of progress at Ottawa might have an impact on other CSCE meetings. The Swiss delegation, in its remarks, said that it would be difficult to develop and make concrete a concluding document at the Stockholm Conference on Disarmament in Europe when a similar document on human rights and fundamental freedoms did not exist as an outcome of the Ottawa meeting.

RESULTS OF THE OTTAWA MEETING

The Ottawa meeting had both positive and negative results with regard to the Helsinki process and Soviet human rights performance. First, there was a frank and thorough discussion of Soviet human rights performance. Many Western and neutral delegations made reference to specific instances of Soviet noncompliance with the Final Act. This review contributed to the further strengthening of the Helsinki process as the only viable international forum for a candid discussion of Soviet performance.

Second, most of the IPG proposals submitted to the participating States were incorporated into the Western proposals made at Ottawa. As such, IPG was able to establish its credibility as a serious player in the Helsinki process; no other non-governmental organization (ngo) submitted proposals to improve the participating States' compliance. Further, the fact that 17 Western nations agreed to a framework for human rights in the Helsinki process represented a major achievement in the promotion of Western unity to support human rights concerns. It is unclear, however, as to whether the Western framework (i.e. OME.47) truly represents ongoing Western policy for future CSCE meetings.

Third, the Ottawa meeting was the first in the history of the Helsinki process to fail to reach agreement on a concluding document and recommendations. This result did create an imbalance, in terms of progress, between the major areas of the Final Act which may have peaceful settlement of disputes. As such, the Ottawa meeting failed to achieve the mandate contained in the Madrid Concluding Document, i.e. to submit recommendations and a concluding document, and thus was not fully successful. The IPG staff believes this represents a significant failure of the Ottawa meeting.

Fourth, the Ottawa meeting did not attract sufficient press and media attention in the Western and neutral countries. As Leonard Sussman, Executive Director of Freedom House (a U.S.-based human rights organization) observed, "the most important aspect of the Helsinki process is its public nature . . . To the extent that the press does not convey this information, people everywhere, including the mass media themselves, suffer." The lack of coverage at Ottawa partially mitigated the achievement regarding a thorough review of Soviet performance, in that world public opinion was not fully informed of the Soviet record.[2]

Finally, the arrangements made by the Canadian Secretariat to allow access by representatives of ngos and other prominent individuals were unsatisfactory. In order to have access to the conference facilities, these individuals had to be accompanied at all times by a conference delegate. By comparison, the access given to the Madrid Conference was far less restrictive, although security was quite strict. This result may have an adverse impact at future human rights experts meetings, in that the participating States may choose to observe the Ottawa model in granting access to ngos and other individuals. Therefore, efforts should be made by the Western and neutral signatories to assure that these unsatisfactory procedures do not become a precedent in the ongoing Helsinki process.

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

As has been noted, the Ottawa meeting produced mixed results in terms of progress within the Helsinki process on the question of improving Soviet human rights performance. From IPG's participation at Ottawa, I believe there are initiatives which can be undertaken to strengthen the Helsinki process as a vehicle for the expression of IPG interests and concerns.

First, it is essential that IPG continue to build public support for the Helsinki process and to increase awareness of Soviet performance. To this end, parliamentary hearings on the Helsinki process should be undertaken as soon as possible. Attached is a letter from several IPG members who were present in Ottawa, asking the heads of parliaments in Western and neutral nations to convene such hearings. It is the hope of IPG that a series of these hearings could be held before the Vienna Review Conference in November 1986.

Second, IPG members should make every effort to inform the press and media about future Helsinki human rights meetings and our concerns about Soviet performance. We recommend that IPG members consider placing articles in their major newspapers, particularly before the Budapest Cultural Forum (October 1985) and the Berne Human Contracts Meeting (April 1986). Further, we believe IPG members should hold meetings with the editorial boards of major newspapers to acquaint them with the Helsinki process and to encourage wider coverage of future human rights meetings.

Third, IPG members should meet with their country's delegation to the Ottawa meeting as soon as possible. It is important that we be fully apprised of the results at Ottawa, and that we convey our ongoing interest in the Helsinki process. The assessment by our country's delegation to Ottawa will be useful in determining the direction of our activities, and will further strengthen relations with our government's policymakers.

Fourth, there should be a regular exchange of ideas and suggestions with relevant executive agencies. For this purpose, meetings with government officials and the use of question time or similar parliamentary vehicles will keep Soviet human rights performance on your government's agenda for bilateral, multilateral and CSCE relations with the U.S.S.R. These activities will also demonstrate to our governments that parliamentarians should be more visible and active participants in the Helsinki process, because we have a serious and thoughtful viewpoint that governments must consider. One goal of IPG which should be pursued is to have parliamentarians represented in every country's delegation to future Helsinki meetings; the interaction with governments can contribute significantly to achieving this goal. This action is especially important for the Vienna Review Conference, scheduled to begin in November 1986.

In conclusion, we believe that the outcome of the Ottawa meeting presents a challenge to our organization. Although the results of Ottawa did not fully meet our expectations, the value of the Helsinki process as a forum to hold the U.S.S.R. accountable to world public opinion is unquestionable. IPG's approach to the Helsinki process should be characterized, in our view, by healthy scepticism but not cynicism, by a long-term approach to improving Soviet performance, and by a renewed commitment to making the process serve our common goal, the strengthening of Western and neutral unity in support of human rights in the Soviet Union.

May 10, 1985.

We urge you to hold public hearings in your parliament to assess the contribution of the Helsinki Final Act to the improvement of human rights in the Soviet Union.

We believe that such hearings will call public attention to the Helsinki human rights standards. We are convinced that there should be a frank evaluation of the human rights performance of all Helsinki signatory nations.

Through this action, we can realistically assess the contribution of the Helsinki process to concrete progress in the human rights field.

We ask that such hearings be held after the conclusion of the Ottawa Human Rights Experts Meeting of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) on June 17, 1985, and before the 10th anniversary of the Helsinki Accords on August 1, 1985.

We thank you for your attention to these matters and look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

Senator Dennis DeConcini, United States.
Senator Charles Grassley, United States.
Representative John Edward Porter, United States.
Representative Tom Lantos, United States.
Etienne Pinte, Member of National Assembly, France.
Dr. Josef Hochtl, Member of Parliament, Austria.
Reg Stackhouse, Member of Parliament, Canada.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, today we recognize the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki accords. I join many of my colleagues in acknowledging this day, and in calling for a renewed commitment on the part of the United States and all signatory nations to observance of the spirit and letter of the accords.

The Helsinki Final Act was the product of long discussions among many nations. Ten years later, the document is still viewed as a benchmark set of guidelines for international relations and individual rights. Although the accords deal with many principles of global relations, the provisions regarding human rights have a particular significance to many of us.

This is a time when we are acutely aware of the many groups of people and individuals around the world—from Afghanistan to South Africa to the Soviet Union—who are being deprived of their basic rights as citizens of our world. Many of us in the Senate have been involved in working on behalf of these neighbors in every way we can. Often we call for compliance with the terms of the Helsinki agreement. We are all very aware of claims and counterclaims about the true significance of the accords. However, there are certain elements of the accords which cannot be disputed. Among these is the explicit agreement of all parties to the accords to respect the rights of every individual. Yet in the countries which I have mentioned, and in many other countries in all corners of the world, governments continue to ignore and abridge the rights of their citizens.

As we recall the importance of the Helsinki accords, Mr. President, let us remind ourselves and all governments of the world of the tremendous responsibilities which we have—responsibilities which include working for the good of the citizens of the countries which we serve. I will not outline here individual cases of human rights abuse, nor will I denounce specific actions of specific governments. Instead, I call upon the Government of the United States and the governments of all nations to reveiw the Helsinki accords this week, and then to review their own policies and actions. And, Mr. President, I challenge our own Government and governments around the world to respond by making whatever changes may be necessary in national policy to bring their country into complete compliance with the terms of the Helsinki accords.

The power and potential of government is great. Governments have the ability to solve problems and provide for the well-being of their peoples. Governments also have the ability to repress and stifle the creative and intellectual powers of their peoples. Mr. President, I believe that the Helsinki accords are a mighty attempt to encourage responsibility among the governments of the world. By exercising that responsibility wisely, governments and individuals within nations can move together toward meeting the tremendous human needs which are present and toward addressing our common problems and goals.

[2] An exception to the lack of coverage was the attention given to the meeting by Christopher Wren of the NEW YORK TIMES and by Voice of America and Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty.

May this 10th anniversary of the Helsinki accords truly be a time of rededication to the principle of respect for the human rights of all individuals.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise to join my colleagues in this special order to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki accords on August 1, 1985.

Ten years ago when 35 nations signed the Final Act of Security and Cooperation in Europe, widely known as the Helsinki accords, many hoped that a new era in human rights had dawned. The signatory nations committed themselves to sweeping human rights guarantees including the freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief. Every Helsinki nation agreed to abide by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which declares that everyone has the right to leave any country including their own. Signatory States also agreed to guarantee the right of individuals to monitor compliance with the Helsinki accords.

But history judges nations not by the promises they make, but by the promises they keep. A decade later, many of the promises made at Helsinki remain unfulfilled. Unfortunately, it is the signatory nations whose citizens are most in need of the Helsinki accords protections whose governments have failed to honor these commitments. The Soviet Union's treatment of its Jewish citizens is a glaring example of this sad fact.

Despite signing the Helsinki guarantee that every citizen has the right to leave any country, including their own, the Soviet Union has permitted only a small fraction of its Jewish population to emigrate. Although in 1979, a record 51,000 Jews were permitted to leave the Soviet Union, in 1984, only 896 Soviet Jews were granted permission to emigrate. That number is a small portion of the 400,000 who are estimated to have applied to emigrate, and of the 20,000 repeatedly refused permission to leave.

Soviet Jews, unable to emigrate and forced to remain in the Soviet Union against their will, face a dismal fate. Often they lose their jobs and face increased persecution simply as a result of applying to emigrate. Even Soviet Jews who have never expressed a desire to leave their country are denied the most basic rights to which the Soviet Union explicitly committed itself a decade ago. Jews are forbidden to attend religious services, learn Hebrew, or instruct their children in the fundamentals of their faith. Government-sponsored harrassment, persecution, arrests and imprisonment of Soviet Jews solely because of their cultural and religious beliefs have increased dramatically in recent years. Such treatment violates both the spirit and the letter of the Helsinki accords.

The Soviet Union has not only failed to honor the basic human rights commitments set forth in the Helsinki accords; it has relentlessly persecuted those men and women who acted on their right to monitor their governments record of compliance. The Helsinki Watch Group in Moscow has been decimated and no longer can fulfill its appointed task; 51 members of that group or its affiliates are in prison, labor camps, psychiatric hospitals, or in exile; 3 of the group's members have died after years of harsh treatment in Soviet labor camps; 20 others have been released after serving sentences.

The Soviet treatment of Jews and other minorities is but a painful reminder of how far we still must go to make the promises of the Helsinki accords a reality. The United States must continue to use its influence to obtain the compliance of signatory States with the commitments undertaken in the Helsinki accords. We must actively seek improvements in the lives of those who are denied the freedoms set forth in the accords. For this reason, I have joined 38 of my colleagues in sending a letter to General Secretary Gorbachev urging him to make good on the promises of Helsinki and ease the repression of Soviet Jews.

The Helsinki accords are a beacon of hope for oppressed people the world over. Each follow-up Helsinki conference convened to monitor compliance with the Helsinki accords provides another forum in which to train the international spotlight on human rights abuses. The existence of the accords provides a legitimate basis for Americans to raise human rights issues with signatory countries.

The Helsinki accords provide a measuring stick to see how far we have come and how far we still must go to achieve full observance of the promises made in Finland 10 years ago. They are of concrete and enduring value; 10 years from now, I hope to be proud of the record of this country's record in seeking to make their promises a reality.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I want to thank Senators WALLOP, HUMPHREY and others for making statements on behalf of the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act. I also want to thank the distinguished majority leader for allowing us time to put forth this forum on human rights.

Our colleagues in the House are also joining our vigilant efforts to commemorate the anniversary of the Helsinki human rights movement, but today's congressional statements on the Helsinki Final Act are more than commemoration. We are strongly affirming our support for a process that needs to be reaffirmed—and adhered to better by the Soviets and their satellites.

Soon, Secretary of State Shultz and his counterpart from the Soviet Union will meet in Helsinki. I am hopeful that their talks will be successful. We must use the occasion of the 10th anniversary of the accords as the conduit for increased observance by the signatories of the principles embodied in the Helsinki Final Act.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR BAUCUS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

THE TRADE DEFICIT

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, an historian has observed that "the real crises are often concealed in occurrences so trivial in appearance that they pass unobserved."

On March 21 of this year, there was such an occurrence. It seemed trivial at the time but profound in retrospect.

That morning, the Commerce Department announced that consumer spending remained strong, but was being satisfied by imports rather than domestic products.

We were inhaling goods from around the world. But American industry was sputtering to a halt.

As a result, the first quarter GNP estimate was slashed in half, to barely 2 percent.

The trade deficit was no longer an abstract problem. It was stopping the American economy dead in its tracks.

The trade problem had become a trade crisis.

THE JANUARY-JUNE STATISTICS

Now, even more startling evidence has arrived. About an hour ago, the biannual trade statistics were released.

They show that the downward spiral is accelerating.

During the first half of 1985, exports rose just slightly—by 2 percent. But imports jumped dramatically—by 8 percent. and our overall trade deficit deepened to $70 billion for just 6 months.

To put it another way, for every dollar worth of U.S. goods going out, a $1.50 worth of foreign goods were coming in.

THE IMPACT

Mr. President, these trade deficit figures are not just more abstract statistics for economists to debate about.

They represent a serious threat to America's economic health.

First of all, the trade deficit represents a lost foothold in export markets. We won't recover that foothold easily. Our competitors will step in.

Second, it represents the loss of key industries and millions of jobs: In Butte, MT, where the mines all are closed; in Silicon valley, where U.S. companies are losing their market share and laying workers off, and in every farming State, where the most efficient farmers in the world have seen agricultural exports shrivel.

These are not isolated examples. The story is the same in every State, whether companies are losing export sales abroad or drowning in the flood of imports here at home.

Our constituents are not taking this lightly. They are frustrated. And they are angry.

They were perfectly good employees, working hard, minding their own business. Suddenly, they do not have jobs.

THE RAZOR'S EDGE

As a result, Congress is under increasing political pressure, to do something.

And we are walking the razor's edge.

On one side is this administration's trade policy—it is a do nothing policy. So far as I can tell, this is a simple-minded recitation of antiquated lasseiz-faire economics.

Mr. President, figures do not lie.

If our huge trade deficit tells us anything, it tells us that the administration's do nothing policy has failed, and failed dismally.

We cannot sustain this policy, either economically or politically.

But the other side of the razor's edge is just as dangerous.

That other side is stark protectionism. Build a wall around America. Stop the imports.

Sounds simple. But, as H.L. Mencken used to say, "for every problem there's a simple solution. And it's usually wrong."

Ultimately, protectionism will shrink the world economy and leave everyone worse off, just as it did in the 1930's, when the Senate amended the Smoot-Hawley bill 1,253 times and plunged the world deeper into depression.

So, what is the alternative? How do we balance along the razor's edge?

Let me describe a policy framework.

THE DOLLAR

First of all, we have to reduce the value of the dollar.

Over the past few weeks, the dollar has fallen somewhat. But it still constitutes a 35-percent surtax on U.S. exports and a 35-percent subsidy for U.S. imports.

How can we compete in the international arena with that kind of surtax on our exports and an equal subsidy provided for imports?

We have to help bring that dollar down further.

As a first step, obviously we must reduce the budget deficit—if not exactly along the lines proposed by the Senate budget conferees, then in some agreement resulting in about a $65 billion reduction in the fiscal year 1986 deficit.

Mr. President, it is regrettable that the President seems not to want to help Congress reduce the deficit. He is both standing on the sidelines and opposing all compromise. If he remains on the sidelines, the solutions will be much more severe in the future than they would be today.

Reducing the deficit requires sacrifice, frankly, it requires the efforts of the President, the Speaker, and this body to no longer be prisoners of their past rhetoric, to swallow a little bit of pride, to be statesmen, and to compromise a little. We must all work together to do what we should do: get that budget deficit down.

But even that will not be enough, Mr. President. We will still have to establish some mechanism for coordinating international monetary policy to help force the dollar down gradually. This is tricky. It is hard to do.

But there are 123,000 people working in the Treasury Department. It seems to me that someone down there should be able to come up with a better proposal than the half-hearted G-10 report that was released a few weeks ago.

And if they don't come up with something, we will direct action, along the lines proposed in section 103 of Senator BENTSEN's "Trade Emergency Act."

UNFAIR FOREIGN TRADE PRACTICES

Mr. President, we also must respond more aggressively to unfair foreign trade practices.

For years, America has been trying to set free trade by example.

But other countries have not followed our example. Instead, they have practiced a kind of "new mercantilism," protecting their own markets and subsidizing the invasion of ours.

For example, Canada subsidizes the production of softwood lumber by selling cutting rights dirt cheap, driving perfectly efficient U.S. timbermen out of their own market.

A similar fate has befallen other key U.S. industries.

Enough is enough.

It's time to follow the advice of Thomas Jefferson, who said that "free commerce is not to be given in exchange for restrictions and vexations."

We have given our trading partners free trade.

They have responded with restrictions and vexations.

It's time to get tough.

Not by erecting massive import barriers.

But simply by tightening up our trade laws to cover mercantilistic practices like industrial targeting and natural resource subsidies.

And we should drive tougher bargains to increase market access for U.S. products.

To accomplish this, we should change our approach.

We should abandon the endless rounds of fruitless legalisms, and simply set a reasonable U.S. export target.

If that target's not met, we should retaliate.

This kind of results-oriented approach is especially appropriate in our negotiations with Japan.

It would be a mistake to blame Japan for the whole trade crisis.

But it would also be a mistake to overlook the fact that there is a problem.

Japan has benefited from the open postwar trading system more than any other country.

But Japan continues to stubbornly protect its domestic market.

Sometimes, it's to protect inefficient but politically powerful groups like the beef producers or sawmill operators.

Others times, it's to incubate "sunrise" industries like telecommunications until they can compete on their own.

For years, we've been negotiating for reduction in Japan's protectionist barriers.

And for years, the Japanese have been engaging in an elaborate "Kabuki play."

Japanese negotiators drag their feet, haggling over every detail. Then they reluctantly relent, and lower a few trade barriers.

But new barriers replace old, and U.S. sales don't substantially increase.

Yesterday we saw another example of this.

The Japanese released another so-called market access package that's long on promises and short on results.

We should stop begging for more concessions and simply set a target for U.S. exports to Japan.

The Finance Committee has reported legislation, S. 1404, that moves in this direction.

When this bill comes to the Senate floor I plan to offer an amendment, along with Senator CHILES and Senator BOREN, that would improve the bill by replacing the trade balance target with a series of reasonable sales targets.

As amended, the bill will cut through all the negotiations about tariffs, quotas, standards, inspections, and distribution systems, so that we can focus on U.S. sales, plain and simple.

AMERICAN PRODUCTIVITY

Then it will be up to us.

In the end, we must produce our way out of the trade crisis.

Let's face it. In some respects, we've become complacent. We've assumed that America would remain the No. 1 economic power automatically.

But there's no such guarantee. We have to work hard to maintain our position.

Lately we've been falling behind.

Our competitors have been increasing their productivity faster than we have:

Germany twice as fast;

France five times as fast; and Japan six times as fast.

Why has this happened? Why are we losing our edge?

Simple. Our competitors have adapted better to the hypercompetitive global economy.

Let me give one example.

For years, the Japanese Government has been translating U.S. scientific journals into Japanese and circulating them to Japanese businesses, so that they can keep up with U.S. research developments.

In contrast, we have virtually ignored the 10,000 Japanese scientific and technical journals, thinking that the Japanese were imitators, not innovators.

Whether or not that belief was justified once, it's not justified now. Japan is third in overall scientific research, and leads in many aspects of process technology.

We should be working just as hard to learn from the Japanese as they have been working to learn from us.

This is just one small example. We need to make many other changes.

We need tax policies that encourage savings and investment.

We need to improve the quality of "inputs" into our economy by improving public education and training.

And we need to improve our management and labor policies to encourage cooperation rather than confrontation, long-term planning rather than short-sighted financial gamesmanship.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, none of these changes will come easily. But if we delay, the changes will be harder.

And, as I said before, we face a crisis. If we fail to act, things will get worse. But perhaps the crisis will galvanize us to act, to restore our competitiveness, we can do it and we must.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAUCUS. I am happy to yield to my illustrious colleague from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wish to compliment the Senator on a very logical and wise statement.

It would appear that the President and his advisers intend to take the attitude that a $200 billion deficit in our Federal budget and a deficit of $160 billion or more in our trade accounts are just nothing to be concerned about, that everything will take care of itself.

Recently, some members of the administration have taken to wearing the Adam Smith tie, a red tie with a little picture of Adam Smith woven into the tie.

If they are counting on Adam Smith economics to save them, they are just not reading Adam Smith and properly understanding what they are reading there.

The so-called laissez-faire theory that originated with Adam Smith does not just say that the Government should be in a vacuum. The theory is that the Government should set up its laws to assure complete free competition, and then let the competitors compete. But it was intended that the Government should oppose monopoly, that there should be no Government favorites and there should be a free market in which to compete.

When one has the kind of world that we are confronted with today, that situation simply does not exist.

I was talking just this morning to one of our able staff members, Mr. Mike Stern, well known to the distinguished Senator, and Mr. Stern was making the point that in visiting the People's Republic of China and shopping in the markets there, he was amazed to see that there seemed to be no rhyme or reason to the way they priced the products that they had. He could not understand why. The same article might be for sale in the market for several different prices, a variation of prices for the same identical product.

His thought was that apparently the Chinese have not placed a particular monetary value on their labor or the various components that go into the product, and so that their pricing appears to be completely arbitrary for a great number of their products.

The same thing is true in many respects when one deals with Communist countries. They just keep their books different than the way we do.

Mr. BAUCUS. That is true.

Mr. LONG. And they are privileged to price things how they want to price them.

So in trading with the Socialist and Communist countries we are not trading by the same rule book.

Mr. BAUCUS. That is correct.

Mr. LONG. We do not do business the same way. It is rather arbitrary, and you wonder how they arrive at their pricing.

Most countries in the free world do take an interest in the value of their currency.

We have heard for years that Japan by their arrangement with the Government-business alliance, which has been described as Japan, Inc., from time to time, has used the power of the Government to keep the value of their currency below its equivalent value in the United States. I do not challenge their sovereign right to engage in that type of conduct.

I am told that most countries actually do what they think best in their national interest to keep their currency about the level it should be compared to our dollar.

But by the same token, the United States should take an interest in what its dollar would trade for compared to the other currencies. If by valuing their currency far below ours, they are in effect dumping into our market, then that could be a matter of grave concern to our working people.

The rule of thumb that one uses for trade is that every $1 billion of trade deficit costs you about 25,000 jobs. Some say it will be more jobs than that. But in any event, to just take that one standard, with the deficit that is predicted and that we are running at this very moment, that would be around 4 million jobs. Four million jobs is a lot of jobs in this country.

I am told that among the young blacks in America, for example, about 40 percent of young blacks who are available to the job market are unemployed, and a very high percentage of young whites are unemployed in the job market.

Think how good it would have been in this country if we had three percentage points less of unemployment. With unemployment running over 7 percent, if you take 3 points off of it and get down around 4, that would be a blessing. We have not known for a very long time here in America.

Mr. BAUCUS. I think the Senator makes some excellent points. The members of the administration who are wearing Adam Smith ties forget that Adam Smith ewed and wrote in a different period of time. He propounded the theory of the invisible hand and of comparative advantage. Countries would produce goods in which they have a comparative advantage and other countries would buy them.

That assumed that countries would not protect industries or erect trade barriers. As the Senator so ably points out, that does not describe the real world.

During this century, countries have changed their economic policy. Today there are Socialist countries, Communist countries, and countries like Japan which, in some sense, is an open society, but in another sense is a very closed society. The Japanese Government and the people of Japan have worked together and developed an economic policy in which foreign trade is the main tool of development.

So the theory of comparative advantage is not working as envisioned because countries' governments are changing comparative advantage through subsidies or wage policies. They are ignoring comparative advantage by granting protection and by targeting. And we have to deal with the real world. As the Senator very ably points out, we have to be willing to fight fire with fire.

Mr. LONG. Well, the fact that the United States has an unemployment insurance program with a tax on manufacturers which is reflected in the price of the product, our cost of caring for the unemployed is a comparative advantage for the other country that does not have those costs.

Mr. BAUCUS. That is correct.

Mr. LONG. And the fact that we have a Medicare Program to provide health care for elderly people who are ill, who otherwise would die without adequate medical care, that also works out to be a comparative advantage for the country that does not bear those costs. The fact that we have a Social Security Program to prevent poverty, wretchedness, penury in old age—that again is a comparative advantage for countries who do not have those expenses.

The fact we have a minimum-wage law is a comparative advantage for those who can pay labor as little as they wish. The fact that we have collective bargaining laws that have made it possible for workers to join together and bargain collectively for better working conditions, that is a comparative advantage for the other country, not for us.

At some point, this U.S. Government needs to look and see to what extent we are willing to see our people suffer and penalized without jobs because of the comparative advantage that we have provided for other countries that lack our social protections. When we provided the minimum wage law, we did not have in mind relieving the American worker of his job. We had in mind assuring him of a better standard of living. However, the effects of this and other laws are matters that we should consider.

The big problem here is that something is going on that is bad for the country. It is somewhat like riding down the Niagara River. If you have no foresight, if you are not planning ahead and if you wait until you can see the falls, at that point, if you are in the middle of the river, it is just too late to do anything to save yourself. You should have been moving toward the shore or taking some steps to keep from going over the falls before you started finding yourself about to do so.

Mr. Paul Volcker put it about as well as anyone I know. He said that the enormous fiscal deficits the Nation runs, and I am sure he would say the same thing about the trade deficit—those are two very serious problems that must be addressed. He said that it is just a matter of time before something very bad will happen. Mr. Volcker says he cannot tell us when it will happen, but it will happen.

Mr. BAUCUS. And he also says unless we change our policies it is going to happen sooner rather than later. We do not know exactly when, but sooner rather than later.

Mr. LONG. I am sure that is correct. My thought about all of this is that we ought not to be fretting about when it is going to happen. I think we ought to decide to act right now.

Mr. BAUCUS. The Senator has always said that we do not want to wait to find out when disaster will strike, that we do not want to be here when it does.

Mr. LONG. I do not want to know how soon it will happen. I would rather not find out. We ought to start making moves right now to prevent it from happening.

I regret to say it is very unfortunate that the President seems to be completely unwilling to address the fact that we have a problem. It makes this Senator wonder: Does he think that this thing can drift along for another couple of years until someone else is President? Just why would the President think that we can afford just to take an ambivalent attitude toward these enormous deficits and toward what they are expected to cause, their logical result?

Obviously, the Senator has some ideas and I applaud him for the suggestions he has made. I do not know whether it would solve the problem or not, but I do know we ought to be moving in that direction. We ought to be doing things to correct the overvalued dollar.

Incidentally, that raises another problem. How can anyone contend the dollar is not overvalued? The traders in all the whole wide world know it is overvalued, and all the media know it is overvalued.

It might surprise the Senator to know the administration has a policy that they are not supposed to discuss anything in terms of an overvalued dollar. I was at a meeting with farm people on a commission appointed, I believe, by the President, and the representative from the Treasury Department was there to ask about these problems which obviously hurt the farmers, just like they hurt everybody else in the country. They were asking, "Why doesn't the administration do something about the overvalued dollar?" The representative from the Treasury Department explained something I could not understand prior to that time. He said in this administration and at the Treasury Department, they will not discuss anything in terms of an overvalued dollar. He said they were willing to discuss problems that related to a strong dollar.

Here is something that has millions of people out of work, that is destroying industries and destroying communities around the country, and is obviously bad for America—and they say the administration does not want to discuss the problem in terms of what it is. They would like to talk about it in terms of something real good. "This is some great, great strong dollar. A good thing for the country."

In Louisiana we have about 12 percent of the people unemployed. It should not be more than 4 or 6 percent. But, no, that is a problem, and the strong dollar may have something to do with that.

Mr. BAUCUS. Why do you think the administration likes this strong dollar? Why do you think the administration is unwilling to discuss ways to help bring the dollar more in line with other countries' currencies? Does the Senator have any idea why the administration turns a deaf ear to this problem?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, it beats me. I just do not know the answer to it. It is something I cannot understand. I would like to find out. I would like somebody to explain to me why the administration thinks in those terms.

Do they really have anyone with any real economic credentials who thinks that? For example, I recall an economist who held a position with the Council of Economic Advisers. They got rid of him.

Mr. BAUCUS. That is right.

Mr. LONG. He was an honest, intelligent man doing his job. He was a man of integrity, with talent and ability, and he was advising them. He had the job, he was confirmed. But he was telling the administration the truth. Why do they not listen to some of those people, and, if not, who are they relying upon? Who are their economic advisers? Is it the same fellow who was advising on supply-side economics who is advising on all of this?

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I have no idea to whom they are listening. Sometimes I wonder. Perhaps they like the strong dollar because it shows foreign investment is coming in to pay for the deficit. Our able colleague from New York, Senator MOYNIHAN, has often pointed out that this administration created and maintains these deficits to shrink the Government down to practically zero. Maybe they think the strong dollar keeps interest rates from going higher and so takes the pressure off them to do anything about the budget deficit. I do not know.

I certainly cannot understand—with all the jobs being lost, with all the market share we are losing, with the abysmal decline of American industry that will continue if nothing is done—why the administration does not try to address the problem.

We all know that the overvalued U.S. dollar is right at the heart of the problem. I cannot understand their lack of concern.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I congratulate the Senator on his statement. I believe it serves a purpose. I think every time a Senator takes the floor to address himself to something that is clearly in error and needs correction, at least it tends to move us a little bit more in the direction the Nation must necessarily go. The Senator well knows that I am not going to be running for reelection at the end of this term, so this Senator has about a year and a half left to serve in this body. This Senator is not interested in partisan advantage. I am not interested in some political advantage for me. I am a lifelong Democrat. I wish Democrats well. I am not going to change parties at this late date. It is too late in life for me to change.

Mr. BAUCUS. It is never too late for the able Senator from Louisiana to do whatever he wants to do.

Mr. LONG. But the thought of the Senator from Louisiana is that we should not be trying to decide this type of thing based on who is right. It ought to be based on what is right. I just cannot for the life of me understand how, against all the best economic advice one could receive, the administration insists on these enormous twin deficits—the unprecedented peacetime deficits which would, in terms of dollars, but not in terms of purchasing power, put even wartime deficits to shame. So with these twin enormous deficits—the enormous peacetime deficit in our budget and the enormous deficit that is growing and putting people out of work throughout America in our trade accounts—it makes me wonder why in the name of common sense, would one go forward, and what kind of advice are they getting down there? Is the President just flying, you might say, by the seat of his pants? Where does one gain the idea that this is the way to do it?

Mr. BAUCUS. I have no idea, Mr. President.

Mr. LONG. Can there not be any planning behind this?

Mr. BAUCUS. I have no idea. I cannot understand it.

For the life of me, I cannot understand why the administration refuses to listen to others when they so clearly and correctly point out that we have a huge competitiveness problem. We have to address it right now. It will take time. Let us begin immediately. I cannot understand the administration's attitude.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KASTEN). The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

HOW CAN MANKIND SURVIVE IN THIS NUCLEAR AGE?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, recent editions of both Time magazine and Newsweek featured the atomic age that arrived 40 years ago with our bombing of Hiroshima as their cover stories. Both magazines told the story in the one way that can bring tears to our eyes and resolution to our hearts. They described what that one first nuclear bomb in Hiroshima did to the human beings who lived in that doomed city. In the Time story the picture captions read as follows: "Those who could walk stumbled over the bodies; they wore tatters and were covered with ash." And "The whole area gone. Children lay in the arms of dead parents, parents carried dead children." In the Newsweek article the picture captions told the same hideous story: "In a place reduced to a desert of ash, the living could not even count the dead" and "The flash tattooed the design of women's kimonos onto the flesh of their backs."

Mr. President, that was the dawn of the nuclear age: the horrible, heartbreaking beginning of nuclear war. Two nuclear bombs—one at Hiroshima, one a few days later at Nagasaki. The only time in human history that nuclear weapons have ever been used in wartime. If any Member of the Congress, if any American, has any illusion that we can fight a nuclear war and expect to survive, consider that these Hiroshima and Nagasaki bombs were only two, relatively puny, feeble nuclear explosives. Today France and England and the People's Republic of China each have bombs with thousands of times the destructive power of the fat atom bombs this country dropped on the two Japanese cities. And the United States and the Soviet Union? Each of our two countries has more than 10,000 strategic nuclear bombs—each with many, many times the power of the Hiroshima or Nagasaki bomb.

Each of the superpowers also has more than 15,000 tactical nuclear weapons that can individually pinpoint and totally obliterate any target on Earth. One Newsweek picture caption gave us a hint of our power to inflict death, it read: "One new Trident submarine will carry as much destructive power as 25 World War II's."

Think of that. One new Trident submarine will carry as much destructive power as 25 World War II's.

That means that one submarine will carry more destructive power than all of the explosives throughout the World War II, 25 times as much. And we have 36 Trident submarines.

Is the Soviet Union satisfied they have enough? Is the United States? No way. Both superpowers rush to pile up bigger and bigger and bigger nuclear arsenals. Each could blow up every significant target on Earth 5 times, 10 times, perhaps 20 times. But the build-up races on. Conceivably the steady accretion of nuclear weapons could stop—possibly as a result of arms control negotiations now underway at Geneva. The arsenals might be cut in half. They might even shrink by a factor of 4 or 5 or even 10. Would not that be progress? No. The arms race would continue and it might very well be more dangerous because it would be less stable, more unpredictable. As long as both superpowers have their scientists devoting most of their genius to finding ways to make nucler defenses more immense and nuclear offenses more penetrating and devastating, the number of weapons on both sides and even their megatonnage will mean less than their steadily increasing accuracy, their infinite speed and the steady capacity of nuclear offense to score breakthroughts that will first match then surpass any defense.

What hope is there for survival with this exploding nuclear power. The hope is reflected in another Newsweek caption that referred to the Hiroshima bomb of August 1945. It read: "The bomb ignited a movement whose passions have never cooled."

Mr. President, that movement represents the solid common sense of the people of this country. It is a vast majority of the people of America. They have said in one statewide referendum after another and in every competent public opinion poll by overwhelming margins that they want the nuclear arms race to stop. And that means an end to nuclear weapons testing, to nuclear weapons production, to nuclear weapons deployment. We must negotiate that kind of a comprehensive, mutual and especially verifiable agreement and we must use every bit of scientific resources we can muster to establish a system of verification and communication with the Soviet Union that will give us the strongest possible fighting chance for peace.

That's my answer. Time and Newsweek have their answers.

Here they are:

Time concludes:

In the end we face a hard, self-evident fact: whether because we dropped the bomb, or because we live in its shadow, or because we are able to use it, we have created an enormous handicap for ourselves, and we will have to learn to survive and endure in spite of that handicap. The handicap will not disappear. It only remains to be seen if we will disappear, or if, by an effort of will and judgment, we can make our handicap work in our favor, never pretending that imperfection is a state of grace, a gift tied directly to a perception of common humanity.

Newsweek concludes with a more understandable dialog between two people in love who disagree on this great issue.

Dottie was an idealist, he thought, and he was a realist; she saw the bomb as destructive of life, where he saw it saving lives. His case for the defense rested on the historic fact that the planet had survived the first 40 years of the atomic age. But certainty had died as a condition of existence at Hiroshima at 8:15 on the morning of August 6, 1945, a casualty of the first nuclear weapon; it became the lot of humankind to live permanently and dangerously, with the bomb.

MYTH OF THE DAY: THAT THE REAGAN ADMINISTRATION HAS REDUCED CRIME

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the myth of the day is: The Reagan administration has reduced the crime rate. The fact: It has not. When crime statistics for 1983 were released in April 1984, then Attorney General William French Smith took credit for the reported 7-percent drop in serious crimes, stating: "This marvelous news proves we are beginning to win the battle against crime with some of the most significant initiatives and results in years." Attorney General Smith had similarly taken credit for a 3-percent drop in the crime rate the previous year. But, when the preliminary statistics for 1984 were released in April 1985, no such proud words were heard from Attorney General Meese because the volume of violent crime showed no decline from 1983. Apparently, the administration only claims responsibility when the crime rate drops.

The question remains whether the Reagan administration's purported battle against crime produced the welcome reduction in the crime rate in 1982 and 1983? The simple answer is no. Just as the wax wings of the mythological figure Icarus melted when exposed to the bright light of the sun, the administration's claim that it deserves credit for reducing the crime rate dissolves when exposed to the bright light of reason.

In reality, significant drops in the crime rate in the early and mid-1980's were predicted as much as 10 years ago by crime experts, simply by studying demographics. A disproportionate percentage of crimes—approximately 80 percent—are committed by individuals between the ages of 15 and 29. Think of that—80 percent of the crime in this country committed by individuals between the ages of 15 and 29. Throughout the 1970's, crime rates rose because the post-World War II baby boom generation fell within these age parameters. As the bulk of baby boomers moved beyond the high crime years during the 1980's, crime rates, without help from the administration, fell naturally. The Reagan administration simply benefited from being in the right place at the right time.

To the extent that demographics do not explain the entire drop in 1982 and 1983, the Reagan administration is responsible, but in a way that it has not been eager to acknowledge. According to Dr. James P. Lynch of the Bureau of Social Science Research, and an expert on crime statistics, recent studies have shown that, contrary to the common wisdom, as the health of the economy declines, so does the crime rate. Dr. Lynch states that an unhealthy economy decreases the mobility of our citizenry, which, in turn, reduces the opportunities for crime. Of course, during 1982, this country was mired in a deep recession that could be expected to force down crime rates. Since the economy did not begin to expand again until late 1983, the effect for that year was also to force crime rates down.

Finally, Mr. President, let us not forget that 99 percent of the crimes reported in the FBI figures fall under State and local jurisdiction, not Federal jurisdiction. The Federal Government has nothing to do with it. If any law enforcement group deserves credit for reducing crime rates, it is State and local authorities.

Therefore, while we can all rejoice over the decline in the crime rate for 1982 and 1983, we should not succumb to the myth that it is the product of the Reagan administration's tough talk about crime. And we should ask why, in spite of favorable demographics, the decline stalled in 1984.

NAZI HUNTERS' NEW TOP PRIZE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the Washington Post of July 6 reported that with the recent identification of Josef Mengele's remains in Brazil, Nazi hunters are now shifting their attention to new top targets.

One such Nazi war criminal is Alois Brunner, who is now living in hiding in Syria.

Brunner is reputed to have been responsible for sending more than 125,000 Jews to their deaths. By his orders, Jewish neighborhoods and communities in Austria, Greece, and France were wiped out.

Only in a system of such absolute moral corruption as Nazi Germany could a man such as Brunner have attained such power.

Brunner was a madman who had a hunger to inflict brutal torture personally. He was obsessed with killing Jewish children and women of childbearing age in order that the next generation not be able to take revenge for what he had done.

Brunner was entirely without remorse for his actions. He intended to live a full life after his wartime occupation without fear of prosecution.

So far, this villain has gotten his wish. Since the late 1940's, Brunner has found refuge in the Arab world.

He is 73 years old now, and his victims may never have the satisfaction of seeing Brunner brought into a courtroom.

The Simon Wiesenthal Center for Holocaust Studies will soon announce rewards for information leading to the capture of 10 of the most notorious war criminals still at large.

Brunner will be on this list.

The United States can aid in this struggle if it joins the 96 nations that have ratified the Genocide Treaty.

Our absence from the list of signatories of the Genocide Treaty is conspicuous. By signing the Genocide Treaty, the United States would send a clear message to the world community that we have not forgotten the victims of the Holocaust. It would emphasize that we fervently desire that all nations, especially those in which known war criminals reside, recognize their responsibility to prosecute men such as Alois Brunner before they die.

Mr. President, the Genocide Treaty has now been reported to the floor of the Senate for the sixth time since World War II. The treaty has enjoyed the support of every President since the end of that war.

It is unconscionable that the Genocide Treaty has languished in the Senate for so long.

The Senate has committed itself to taking up the Genocide Treaty during the 99th Congress. There is no sense in delaying ratification.

THE WESTWAY HIGHWAY LANDFILL

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, on April 2, along with Senators HUMPHREY, LAUTENBERG, and BRADLEY, I introduced S. 826 which would end funding for the Westway Highway landfill in New York City.

Three recent pieces by Sidney Shanberg, the New York columnist for the New York Times, detail Westway's tangled legal and political history.

As Shanberg aptly points out, "As a public works project, the Westway plan may be this generation's largest suggested misuse of scarce public funds."

Even worse, Shanberg cites attempts by high Federal officials to push the project through even in the face of massive evidence of potential environmental harm and vastly less expensive alternatives.

Mr. President, no aspect of Westway warrants the huge sums necessary for completion of what Shanberg correctly calls a megaboondoggle.

I ask my colleagues to examine this project carefully and reject it. Anything less is irresponsible.

I ask unanimous consent to include these articles in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CAJUN FLIES AND WESTWAY

(By Sydney H. Schanberg)

As I leave on vacation, the frontpage news is about the Mayor rushing to the rescue of a New Orleans chef whose restaurant was closed down by the Health Department because of a "number of violations" severe enough to cause "foodborne illness"—including a "massive" infestation of flies.

The Mayor, said the boldly played stories, swarmed to the restaurant with two city commissioners, a mayoral advance man, a special assistant, a press aide, two bodyguards and the obligatory television crews. They saw to it that the flies which had been feasting on the crabmeat, popcorn and shrimp gumbo and bread pudding were asked to leave, thus enabling the violations to be lifted and the Cajun chef to open his doors and begin charging $50 a meal to the Columbus Avenue hungry.

This is big news? Yes, as a matter of fact, it is big news in a city where the newspapers have shrunk to four in number and suffer from frequent bouts of sleeping sickness—and not just in the soporific summertime.

Too often in this town, the media's idea of big news is the Mayflower Madam's little black book or the fall-off in summer rentals in the Hamptons that has forced homeowners who would prefer spending the season in Europe to actually live in their own beachside houses.

Now I have nothing against the Hamptons or black books or even flies on Cajun food. We all need trivia on our newspaper pages to leaven the serious stories that weigh down the mind. But if trivia begins to dominate, the mind can become air-headed.

All this is by way of grinding an ax about a story I consider important—the proposed spending of at least $4 billion, and more likely $10 billion or $15 billion with overruns, for a four-mile road and real estate deal known as Westway.

Our newspapers, oddly, can't seem to find space for Westway and its scandal. The lone exception in the region is The Newark Star-Ledger, which has lately provided first-rate coverage. It is hard to understand the silence.

As a public works project, the Westway plan may be this generation's largest suggested misues of scarce public funds, but we do owe it an educational debt—as a wondrous, unfolding case study of wheeling and stealing on a grand scale. Rather than using the money to build this brief underground highway through landfill that will gouge 200 acres out of the Hudson so that developers can erect luxury apartment towers on Lower Manhattan's West Side waterfront, we could spend it instead on an ordinary road that would move vehicles just as well. By that method—known as the "trade-in" alternative—we would have possibly $1 billion left over for rehabilitating the subways, which can use all the help they can get.

But the trade-in idea doesn't have many big friends in this city. The big unions say Westway will mean jobs. Big business says it will mean big business. The politicians don't want to offend anyone big because it's the big people who pay for their election campaigns.

So the Mayor is for it and the Governor is for it. And so are Senators Moynihan and D'Amato. Not least, David Rockefeller is for it.

Because most of the money for Westway would be Federal, more and more Congressmen are growing nervous about it—because they know it's a mega-boondoggle. So the Koch-Cuomo-D'Amato-Moynihan-Rockefeller juggernaut has become frenetic in its lobbying.

Meanwhile, more scandal has oozed out at the latest court battle over the Federal permits for Westway—more unbelievable testimony by pro-Westway Government officials, more documents indicating a cover-up of essential data, more evidence that the political fix had been put in by senior officials in Washington to bring the Corps of Engineers and other Federal agencies into line so that the permits would be granted.

Our New York politicians have ignored the false testimony and the cover-ups from the beginning. But the Federal judge, Thomas Griesa, has slowly lost his patience—first appealing to the pro-Westway witnesses and their lawyers to tell the truth and then warning them, in effect, that they were on the edge of fraud. His decision—on whether the permit process violated Federal law—is due soon, and we can expect to see an attempt by the Westway lobby to discredit Judge Griesa as biased.

The city's newspapers, like the big politicians, have also ignored most of the scandal. The New York dailies, strangely asleep, run only occasional bland stories, sometimes just snippets—rarely anything about the chicanery. That too, is part of the shame of Westway.

THE TESTIMONY DOESN'T WASH

(By Sydney H. Schanberg)

"You have an obligation . . . to want the truth. You are not doing that."

Federal Judge Thomas Griesa used those words this week to admonish the Federal attorneys who are representing the Army Corps of Engineers in the latest trial on the proposed Westway project. The corps is backing the project, and the judge was distressed by the vague and shifting testimony of the corps' key witness, a marine biologist named William Dovel. The testimony "doesn't wash," Judge Griesa said.

The judge has repeatedly warned the pro-Westway Government lawyers, throughout years of legal battle over this $4 billion highway and real estate mega-project, that they have a responsibility to persuade their clients to take their courtroom oath seriously. What has emerged instead is a steady pattern of cover-ups, distortion and incredible testimony.

In this most recent episode, the Corps of Engineers has used a speculative theory put forth by Mr. Dovel as the principal basis for granting its latest go-ahead landfill permit for Westway—the first permit having been thrown out by Judge Griesa three years ago as violative of Federal environmental laws. The second permit is fast beginning to smell the same way.

Mr. Dovel's hypothesis is that striped bass only pass through the Hudson River area that the Westway development would fill in, that it is not a crucial habitat where they linger and grow toward maturity and that therefore the landfill would not harm the river's aquatic life.

Mr. Dovel may indeed have come to believe this theory now, but he didn't tell anyone about it when he worked for the corps in early 1984 as a field supervisor taking fish samples in the river as research for a required environmental impact statement. Thus, the corps' preliminary statement—in May 1984—said that Westway would have a "significant adverse impact" on the base population.

It was not until the latter half of 1984 that Mr. Dovel began telling the corps and others about this migratory theory. One of those he told was George Lamb—whom he has known for years, who is the senior operating executive of the Rockefeller foundation and who from the beginning has been on the board of directors of a lobbying group pushing for approval of Westway.

Mr. Lamb, in a telephone interview, said that Mr. Dovel "came to me after he had finished his [sampling] work for the corps and said that he had a handle on the population dynamics and movement of the striped bass." Mr. Dovel asked Mr. Lamb for funding to develop his theory further and Mr. Lamb agreed, eventually paying him $9,000 for three months' work.

This money came from Jackson Hole Preserve Inc., the foundation Mr. Lamb works for, which is headed by Laurance S. Rockefeller. Mr Rockefeller's brother, David, has been actively campaigning for Westway in high places in Washington.

Did Mr. Lamb tell Mr. Dovel of his own vigorous advocacy of Westway? "Of course I did," he said. "And he [Dovel] said to me: 'I want to make one thing clear to you. It makes no difference to me whether Westway is built. All I care about is understanding the fish.' "

Mr. Lamb says he replied to Mr. Dovel that "I would go along with that priority—the fish first—but I told him that if you can show that this project [Westway] would not hurt the fish population, I would like to see Westway go forward."

So Mr. Dovel proceeded to put his theory on paper and to convey his hypotheses to corps officials. And Mr. Lamb also proceeded to press the theory on the corps. Finally, last November, the corps produced its final environmental statement, relying not on new data but on the Dovel theory. The result: The impact on the fish had been reduced from "significant" (which would have required denial of the Westway permit) to "minor."

On the witness stand, Mr. Dovel changed his testimony several times and appeared rattled at being thrust into a conflict-of-interest controversy. But he is not the villain here. He was used by others—principally the Corps of Engineers, which had apparently gotten the political word from Washington that this project was to be approved and which needed an "expert" to justify that approval.

Consider what this boils down to. A biologist who was paid by a Westway advocate was used as the primary support for granting the Westway permit by an agency that was supposed to be reaching an independent judgment.

If it sounds as if there's something wrong here, maybe there is.

GETTING "THE MESSAGE"

(By Sydney H. Schanberg)

There have been two major discoveries in the latest trial in Federal Court on the proposed Westway project. One is that the Army Corps of Engineers, the agency that earlier this year granted the go-ahead landfill permit for this 4.2-mile highway and real estate plan with its $4 billion price tag, kept no records of what took place at its internal meetings—in defiance of the Federal judge's order to do so.

The trial's second discovery, based on documents obtained by Westway opponents, is evidence strongly suggesting that people at the top in Washington were sending out the word to those Federal agencies most crucially involved in the Westway decision that the project was to be approved—regardless of the evidence against it.

These documents also show that powerful figures such as David Rockefeller and Senator Alfonse D'Amato were personally pushing hard on those people at the top to get the project approved. Mr. Rockefeller, for instance, waged a campaign to try to discredit the scientific and legal findings of those he called "lower level bureaucrats in the Federal agencies."

Up to now, the campaign has succeeded. But the Federal Judge, Thomas Griesa—who in earlier Westway trials found coverups and distortion of evidence by Westway advocates—will now decide whether the Corps of Engineers, whose first permit he threw out in 1982 as violative of Federal law, has followed his orders and the law in issuing this second permit.

The latest testimony has focused on the Environmental Protection Agency, whose role was also pivotal. Professionals in E.P.A. at regional level and higher have opposed Westway from the start, pointing most recently to the Corps's own environmental finding in May 1984 that construction of Westway with its 169 acres of waterfront landfill would result in a "significant adverse impact" on the Hudson River's striped bass population.

That finding, under existing conservation law, would have pretty much compelled the corps to deny the landfill permit. But this was a preliminary report and by November 1984, when the Corps released its final environmental statement, the impact had been reduced from "significant" to "minor." The only trouble was that the statistics on the damage to aquatic life hadn't changed between May and November. Only the language had changed.

The E.P.A.'s response, here at the regional level in New York, was that since the damage data was the same and the corps offered no credible explanation for softening the language, the permit should be denied. That's when David Rockefeller and others stepped up their campaign against the E.P.A.'s "lower level bureaucrats."

Their purpose, not veiled at all in the documents that have emerged in the Westway trial, was to pressure the E.P.A. into diluting its opposition so as to allow the corps some breathing space to grant the Westway permit without a flood of negative publicity.

However, the New York regional head of the E.P.A., Christopher Daggett, wouldn't budge. So E.P.A. headquarters in Washington simply took away from him the job of writing the E.P.A.'s final recommendation to the corps.

Here's a memo that was sent to the E.P.A. chief, Lee Thomas, by Phil Angell, special assistant to Mr. Thomas: "Lee, I'm troubled by both the tone and content of this [Daggett] letter. It doesn't appear that Daggett has gotten the message; nothing will kill this project faster than this letter."

And here are some minutes taken of an internal E.P.A. meeting: "Bigger issues: Daggett et al. . . . It will be bound to come out that Regional technical comments were rewritten by HQ lawyers, out of normal course of review and preparation, and it could look bad (like Gorsuch era)."

Nonetheless they began rewriting, and some E.P.A. officials in Washington, people who also apparently had not "gotten the message" from above, became alarmed. One of them wrote, in an interoffice memo: "Major points in the region's letter have been diluted or omitted and the result is a vague response that the corps could interpret as a change in, E.P.A.'s earlier position. Such an interpretation may undermine any potential corps decision to deny the permit."

Such objections were overridden, and the final letter to the corps was a pale version of the original Daggett draft. The corps thereupon granted the Westway permit.

What Judge Griesa will now decide is whether "the message" that delivered this permit was legal or illegal.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR NICKLES

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Oklahoma is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

FARM BILL, OIL IMPORT FEES, AND THE BUDGET

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, Congress today and this week we will be making some important decisions in regards to the budget and the farm bill. I urge my colleagues today—to go forward and complete action on the budget and on the farm bill before the August recess.

Mr. President, I believe it is very, very important that we complete action on both items this week or, if it is necessary, next week or even the following week. I have a lot of things that are important to me in Oklahoma and I am sure every Member of the House and Senate does as well. I think it is even more important that we fulfill our constitutional responsibility in regard to fiscal and agriculture policy.

A lot of people, a lot of businesses, a lot of farmers are out there waiting for us to make these decisions. If we adjourn without a budget, in all probability we will not have a budget and I think it is irresponsible for those of us who are elected to represent the American people not to pass a budget.

I also think it is important, if we are going to have a budget, we have a good budget, not a budget for budget's sake but a good budget. In fiscal year 1985, it is estimated by OMB that we are going to spend $96 billion more than we spent last year. The deficits continue to rise. The deficit projections are already this year, year to date, over $160 billion. They are estimated by the end of this fiscal year to exceed $220 billion. That is not financially responsible. That is not something we can bring back to our constituents this August or next year and say, "Hey, haven't we done a great job?" Congress has done a dismal job on the budget. We need a good budget. We need a budget that will show fiscal discipline. We need a budget that will show that we are making substantial headway in curbing Federal spending. I hope that we will have the guts, the patience, and the willingness by Members in both parties in both Houses to come to grips with this enormous issue and that we will do it this week. If we adjourn without a budget and without a farm bill, we are basically throwing up our hands and saying, "Well, we tried, but we didn't get there." I do not think that is the way to go. So when we are meeting in an hour or so in our respective caucuses, I hope that Senators on both sides will say, "Let us keep our shoulder to the wheel, let us continue working and see if we can come up with a bipartisan solution that can pass both Houses, that will show substantial fiscal discipline."

Mr. President, I have heard a lot of comments concerning oil import fees and why the President would not sign on to this idea. I compliment my colleague, Senator BOREN, for his initiative in this area.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article by Senator BOREN in the Washington Post on July 29 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, July 29, 1985]

WE NEED AN OIL IMPORT FEE

(By David Boren)

Never has the case for an oil import fee been stronger. Congress and the president should unite and put it in place as soon as possible. I recently introduced a bill that would place a $5-per-barrel import fee on foreign crude oil and $10 on imported refined products. It would raise as much as $15 billion per year for the Treasury. There are a host of clear and convincing reasons to support it.

First, it could help resolve the current political deadlock over the budget. We cannot afford to let the budget process collapse. Tossing in the towel on the battle against the deficit would cast a cloud over the nation's economic future. The money raised by the import fee would help reduce the deficit and provide more room for budget negotiators to resolve other controversial issues that now divide them.

Second, an import fee would put a safety net under the price of domestic oil and would protect the financial system against the shock of any sudden fall of oil prices. The value of oil reserves in the ground is used as security for billions of dollars in loans held by American banks. Some analysts have predicted that oil prices could plunge sharply to $20 per barrel or even lower. While this is unlikely, if it happened it would threaten the stability of the banking and financial system in oil-producing regions of the country and would send shock waves into money centers such as New York and Chicago. We cannot afford to subject our economy to such risks.

Those who argue that an oil import fee could slow economic growth fail to take into account the disruption of the economy which could occur without it. They also fail to assess what a sudden drop in oil prices would do to employment and income in the domestic oil industry. One private study indicated that if oil fell to $20 per barrel, domestic drilling would be cut in half and hundreds of thousands of jobs would be lost.

Third, the proposal is fair tax policy and will promote energy independence. Domestic oil producers pay the windfall profits tax and state severance taxes. Foreign producers do not. Why should our tax policy continue to encourage the creation of jobs for exploration and refining in other nations instead of here at home. Already the portion of oil we obtain from overseas has begun to increase again. It is clearly in the interest of national security for us to lessen our dependence on these foreign sources.

The import fee must be placed on refined as well as on crude oil to prevent the other producing nations from simply switching their U.S. sales from crude oil to refined products. Our refineries are already in trouble. More than 100 U.S. refineries have folded in recent years, and our refining capacity is already below the 14 million barrels a day needed to meet emergency national security requirements.

Fourth, an import fee would promote energy conservation. If oil prices continue to fall toward artifically low levels, wasteful use of energy will once more be encouraged. The bill before the Senate would promote conservation while protecting consumers against unreasonable prices. The fee would begin to phase out as crude oil prices reached $25 per barrel and would end entirely at the $30 level.

Fifth, the proposal can be implemented in a manner that will maintain regional fairness and preserve our own competitiveness in trade. The bill I introduced provides rebates on the fee for home heating oil in order to protect those in New England and the Northeast who depend upon this fuel. It also provides a rebate to American manufacturers who use imported crude oil in the process of making products for export. This would ensure that American businesses such as the chemical industry would not be placed at a competitive disadvantage in the cost of their products for export to other markets.

Recently, one of my fellow senators said to me, "The import fee makes so much sense that Congress probably won't pass it." I hope that he was wrong. We can't afford the luxury or continuing to discard good ideas.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I compliment Senator BOREN for his leadership on the oil import fee. A lot of people say, "Well, we do not need nor can we stand to have tax increases," but at least this Senator from Oklahoma looks at an oil import fee a little differently than some other proposed tax increases. Sure, it provides more money to reduce the deficit, but I might point out that right now under present policies domestic production is at a disadvantage because we place an additional tax on domestic production while we have no tax on imports.

I testified before the Finance Committee on energy taxation. I said that we have a glaring inequality on energy taxes because we do have an excise tax on domestic production. It is called the windfall profit tax. That tax is only on domestic production. It is not on imports. Therefore, we discourage domestic production and we encourage imports.

The windfall profit tax is not a minor tax, it is a very significant tax. It is called a profits tax but it has nothing whatsoever to do with profits. It is an excise tax on domestic production. It has raised, since its passage in 1980, over $77 billion. So, again, those are taxes on domestic production and not on imports.

We have given an economic advantage to imports. We have been encouraging imports and imports are also a significant problem to the economic health of our country. We spent last year over $55 billion on oil and product imports.

If nothing else, I think we should equalize this disadvantage we are putting on domestic producers by at least putting a comparable tax on imports. A comparable tax would probably be in the neighborhood of the tax that the Senator from Oklahoma proposed in his bill, which I am pleased to cosponsor. Last year, the windfall profit tax raised $9 billion. The total corporate income tax in the United States last year was $54 billion. A lot of the oil companies paid into that $54 billion. So they paid their fair share on the corporate income tax and then they were saddled with an additional $9 billion windfall profit tax.

The year before, it was even more dramatic. In 1983, the total corporate income tax was $36 billion, but the total amount of windfall profit tax was $12.2 billion. So windfall profit taxes that year equaled about a third of the total corporate income tax. And, again, I will remind the Senate that oil companies paid a substantial portion of that $36 billion. And there was no tax on imports. So there has been a heavy, heavy excise tax on domestic production but no comparable tax on imports. When we are looking at tax policy, it may not be a part of this deficit reduction package—and if it is not, that is fine—but I hope that we spend most of our efforts in trying to cut spending in this package, not raising revenues.

I think we do need to get the package passed. The oil import fee is estimated by the Budget Committee to collect $25 billion over a 3-year period. Along with the import fee is the COLA delay for Social Security and other entitlement programs which will reduce spending $12 billion over the same period. With these items and others, we are looking at a package that reduces the deficit $338 billion. So let us not forget about that $338 billion.

The Senate package was $295 billion over a 3-year period before the latest oil import free proposal or the coupling of the Social Security. Let us not abandon that $295 billion.

We must also not forget that those were cuts of projected increases, not cuts of last year's spending levels. I think people in the country today are looking for real cuts, not facades, not the type of cuts such as your spouse or son or daughter might make, saying "yes, I saved a lot of money, I bought this garment and it cost $50; it was supported to cost $100, and therefore I saved $50."

That is the type of savings we have been looking at in Washington, DC, and I think that is one of the reasons why the American people have become so disillusioned, in many cases disappointed or disgusted, with Members of Congress, so I hope that we will see some real budget savings. I hope that some of the decisions that will be made in the next hour or so say, "Yes, we are going to work; we are going to continue to push for significant real cuts."

I also hope, Mr. President, that Congress and the leaders in both the House and Senate will decide today that we are not going to adjourn until we get a farm bill, or at least we are not going to adjourn until those elements of the farm bill which are critical, time-sensitive, will be decided. That is primarily, Mr. President, the wheat portions of the bill. Wheat farmers right now are preparing their land and they do not know if there is going to be a 20-percent set-aside, a 30-percent set-aside or any set-aside as a condition for participating in the program. They have no idea. Congress is going to be marching out, yet Father Time marches on. But they have to make decisions on plantings; they have to make decisions on buying fertilizer; they have to make decisions on renting land—an unbelievable number of decisions. They are in financial straits right now.

We, in Congress, are complicating their decisions by not making our decisions on time. We need to let them know what is going to be in the farm bill, whether it is good or bad. If we start making decisions after they have put their seeds in the ground and the crops are on their way, I think it is not responsible, from my point of view. So I hope that, as a bare minimum, we will pass those elements of the farm bill that are critical for them to make decisions.

Mr. President, we are looking at an August recess. I, for one—and I think there are several other Senators who are making the same statement—say, "Let us do our business before we take this recess."

I know that others will say that we need this time to be with our constituents, and I totally agree. But I think these areas in the budget and the farm bill are critical enough that it is important that we finish them before we take the month off.

I have also been somewhat concerned and a little disgusted, as many taxpayers are, when I learned of the number of congressional junkets and trips that will commence starting next week. I was kind of surprised and maybe a little shocked when I read in the Washington Post that all the military and State Department planes are taken. In other words, Congress is getting ready to fly away, and away we go—and away we go at taxpayers' expense.

Mr. President, not all congressional trips are junkets. Maybe a majority are, although I doubt that they are worthwhile. I think that is a decision for the taxpayers to make.

In that regard, I introduced legislation yesterday that would call for greater congressional accountability so that at least taxpayers would know how much money their Congressmen and Senators are spending when they go abroad and how much these trips cost. Right now, these figures are kind of hidden in the Department of Defense and other agencies. You do not see a line item for the Department of Defense on congressional travel. You do not see a line item for the State Department appropriations for congressional travel, but it is there.

When you see people talking about 27-day trips to 8 or 10 or 12 different countries, it makes you wonder whether or not it is strictly a factfinding trip or whether it is a vacation subsidized by the taxpayers.

Again, I think the taxpayers need to be making the ultimate decisions. The legislation I introduced did not prohibit any travel. It said that there needed to be an accounting item that would be made public, so that the public could find out the cost of the trips.

When you know that many Members are traveling around the country, I personally find it irresponsible on our part to leave for those types of trips until we finish the business we are elected to do, and right now that means, basically, the budget and the farm bill. They may be things we do not want to do, but they need to be done.

Recently, I told my son he had to cut the grass before he could go swimming. He did not want to cut the grass, and the grass continued to grow, and he was not allowed to go swimming until the grass was cut.

I hope we are able to get out in the month of August, but I think it is time we cut the budget and do the farm bill before we recess for August.

SCHEDULE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I understand that we have notified all those who wished to use their time under the special orders before 12 o'clock, and they have not arrived. I assume that their statements will be made part of the record.

In a moment, I intend to recess until 2 p.m., so that we might have the Republican and Democratic policy luncheons.

I indicate to my colleagues that at 2 p.m. we will proceed to the consideration of the conference report to accompany the DOD authorization bill. I am advised by the chairman of the committee, Senator GOLDWATER, that he hopes to dispose of that measure in a couple of hours. That may or may not be the case. I hope that is the case.

Then we can turn to the Kennedy-Mathias test ban resolution. And I believe that will take less than 30 minutes if we are not troubled with amendments on whether or not we should do something next week and if we do what it should be.

Then we would go to the veterans health care bill, which I believe is now in the process of being resolved, and a number of other matters we can dispose of by unanimous consent and hopefully the Compact of Free Association proposal, if that can be worked out by this evening.

I would again indicate we may be in rather late this evening and probably Wednesday and Thursday evenings of this week, because there are a number of things that have been called to my attention that Members on both sides would like to dispose of.

It is still my hope, now that the air is clear, that we can have a budget resolution this week. I have not had an opportunity to visit with the distinguished chairman of the committee, Senator DOMENICI, but it would seem to me, with the parameters that are now set, that it should not take long for the conferees to reach some agreement. Hopefully, they will cut as much Federal spending as possible and we can then move on the budget resolution this week.

RECESS UNTIL 2 P.M.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate now stand in recess until the hour of 2 p.m.

There being no objection, the motion was agreed to, and at 11:51 a.m., the Senate recessed until 2 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. COHEN].

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business.

CAFE REQUIREMENTS

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I rise today to express my reluctant opposition to the Evans amendments.

The Energy and Policy Act of 1975 mandated that passenger automobiles should meet Corporate Automobile Fuel Economy [CAFE] standards. However, the act also included a provision that gave the Secretary of Transportation the authority to relax the CAFE standards if economic or energy supply circumstances warranted it.

This of course is the situation we find ourselves in today. A petition by Ford Motor Co. and General Motors to lower the 27.5 miles per gallon standard to 26.0 miles per gallon has been filed, because both companies state it is impossible for them to meet the higher requirements this fall in time for model year 1986.

They argue they cannot meet the fleet average because of the shift in consumer demand back toward larger cars. They argue that this shift has occurred because of low and stable gasoline prices. Therefore, they argue they should not be penalized for responding to consumer demand, and should be granted at least 3 years, if not an indefinite period, at the 26.0 miles per gallon level.

The Department of Transportation has since ruled that the companies should be given 1 year to retool, but that by model year 1987 the companies should be in compliance with the 27.5 miles per gallon standard.

I cannot support the contention that the big two auto companies need at least 3 additional years to comply with a law that has been on the books since 1975. I also cannot support the idea that the Congress should reward these companies for making inaccurate economic assumptions and thus poor marketing decisions.

However, I do support the Department of Transportation's position that the changing economic conditions have had some effect on the companies ability to meet the standards, and therefore I am willing to support the 1-year stay they propose.

But, Mr. President, I want the record to clearly reflect that should the various parties return to Congress next year, seeking an additional extension of the 26.0 level, I will be one of, if not the first, to stand up in opposition to any further extension.

REMARKS OF HARRY DARBY AT DEDICATION OF EISENHOWER STATUE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, on June 15, 1985, Harry Darby, former Senator from Kansas, donated a 17-foot bronze statue of Dwight D. Eisenhower to the Eisenhower Library in Abilene, KS. I was honored to participate in the dedication ceremony and had the opportunity to hear Harry Darby's remarks. Senator Darby was a personal friend and adviser to President Eisenhower, and I ask unanimous consent that his dedication speech may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS BY HARRY DARBY

Distinguished guests all—how wonderful it is for all of us to be together here, Ike's hometown, to dedicate this statue and pay tribute to him as the 34th President of the United States from Kansas.

By honoring Dwight Eisenhower today, we recognize him as a man of integrity and courage with a deep passion for justice, fair play and equal rights in all of his many accomplishments.

From a Kansas farm boy, he went on to be supreme allied commander in Europe and President of the United States and to become loved by more people in more parts of the world than any other man who served in public life.

No man in our memory has so firm a place in the hearts of our Nation—he was a symbol of all that is good about America—truly a champion of peace.

In that same spirit of peace—I ask all of you to join with us as we formally present this statue through the National Archives to the people of the United States as an expression of our respect, admiration, love and esteem for President Eisenhower.

JERRY DAHMEN: REPORTING AT ITS BEST

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, the news media are perennially under critical attack and scrutiny as they play an increasing role in national and world events. I would like at this time to accentuate the positive by telling my colleagues about a newsman in my home State of South Dakota. Jerry Dahmen, news director of KXRB/KIOV Radio in Sioux Falls, has racked up a series of awards and honors that reflect great credit on him, his station, and the best traditions of American journalism.

One notable aspect of Jerry's achievements is that he consistently finds good news—he has won awards for blizzard coverage, to be sure, but he has also been able to do stories about high school students seeking to save their school, about people helping themselves and others. This year he was given the Lowell Thomas Youth Award for his coverage of the Canova, SD, high school students. He was one of four to receive recognition this year from the Southern Baptist Radio Television Commission for his positive news stories.

United Press International has cited Jerry more than 30 times at the State and national level for newscasts, documentaries, features, and spot news. The Farmers Union has praised his coverage of agriculture, South Dakota retailers named him newsman of the year, and the Disabled American Veterans thanked him for outstanding coverage of veterans issues. These are just a few of his many honors.

Jerry has also shown that a radio reporter in the heartland of America can find international news, just as long as he has a telephone line. He has interviewed officials in Iran and marine officers in Lebanon from his desk in Sioux Falls.

Each week, Jerry Dahmen produces and narrates the "Good News Report," which President Reagan recently recognized as an example of positive radio programming. He's done documentaries on drug abuse and people who have overcome severe handicaps. He has shared his knowledge and understanding of the media with civic and professional organizations, and has given speeches on motivation and goal achievement.

Mr. President, I believe that Jerry Dahmen represents journalism at its very best. He has turned down offers to move to larger cities, because he likes living in South Dakota and South Dakota is proud to have him. We know we count on him for the news we need to go about our business. He's an aggressive reporter who is not cynical. He's a newsman who understands that information isn't gloom and doom—it is education, enlightenment, and occasionally inspiration.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a list of his awards.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

HONORS WON BY JERRY DAHMEN

United Press International awards: Best story (state), 1979, "Outstanding Contributor" (state), 1979, Stringer of the Year (state), 1979, Outstanding coverage of Iran (state), 1980, Outstanding coverage of railroad agreement (state), 1980, Stringer of the Year (state), 1980, Outstanding Radio Contributor (state), 1980, Best Documentary (state), 1981, Best Public service investigative story (state), 1981, First place newscast (state), 1982, Best newscast (state), 1983, Best documentary and spot news in state 1983, Regional awards, best newscast and spot news, 1984, National UPI Award for Best Story, blizzard coverage, 1984, Best Regional Feature, 1985, Best Newscast, Documentary, Feature, and Spot News Awards (state), 1985, National UPI Award for Best Feature for stations with 5 or fewer fulltime newspersons, 1985.

Other notable awards: First place winner of the Lowell Thomas Good News Award, 1985, Third place winner of the Lowell Thomas Good News Award, 1984, Northwest Broadcast News Association, three awards, South Dakota Social Workers, Best Public Service Coverage, 1982, South Dakota Farmers Union, Outstanding Reporting on Farm Issues, 1982, University of South Dakota, Tom Brokaw Broadcasting Award, 1984, Finalist, Documentary entered in International Radio Festival of New York, 1985, Southern Baptist Radio Television Commission, Abe Lincoln Award, 1985, South Dakota Retailers Association Newsman of the Year, South Dakota Disabled American Veterans, Best Media Support, 1985.

MAYOR PATRICIA McKENZIE: A TRIBUTE

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise today with my colleagues to pay tribute to Patricia Patterson McKenzie, the distingushed mayor of Atmore, AL.

First elected in 1976, Mrs. McKenzie has worked to improve the city and its surroundings and has served the people well. She has been responsible for providing fellowship and nutritional meals to Atmore's senior citizens, installing a natural gas pipeline, expanding Atmore's water system, and has instigated other projects, such as a summer food program, energy conservation projects, and a traffic safety program.

Mr. President, her most recent and prized accomplishment is one for which Mayor McKenzie will certainly be remembered in future years. Patricia McKenzie is primarily responsible for beginning the first major restoration project of one of Atmore's oldest structures. Rachel Patterson Elementary School is being transformed into a multipurpose recreation facility. This civic center will contain a cultural program for public enrichment and maintain a special emphasis on young people.

Mr. President, I feel safe in saying that because of Mayor Patricia McKenzie's efforts, a piece of history, in the form of Atmore's school house, is being saved and will now be passed down to Atmore's children.

In addition to Mayor McKenzie's fine accomplishments as mayor, she has had many personal accomplishments as well. She is a past member of the human resources steering committee for the National League of Cities and coordinator of the NLC women in municipal government. She is also a past chairman of the county and city affiliates of the American Cancer Society. In 1979, she was named Atmore's Most Outstanding Citizen of the Year.

Mr. President, the listing of Mayor McKenzie's accomplishments throughout her career could go on and on. To list them all, would seem endless. To have listed none would seem an injustice.

Mr. President, Mayor Patricia Patterson McKenzie is to be commended for her fine efforts and success as mayor to Atmore. On behalf of all of Atmore's citizens I thank her for all she has done for her city and our State.

Thank you, Mr. President.

THE RETIREMENT OF MAJ. GEN. HUGH J. CLAUSEN AS THE JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL OF THE U.S. ARMY

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, on July 31, 1985, the Department of the Army will lose the services of an outstanding leader when Maj. Gen. Hugh J. Clausen retires from his position as the Judge Advocate General.

General Clausen is a native of Mobile, AL, and a graduate of the University of Alabama School of Law. In fact, Mr. President, my law school career overlapped with that of General Clausen, and, since first meeting during those years, we have remained good friends. I have, naturally, followed his distinguished career with interest, and, during my term as chief justice of the Alabama Supreme Court, I attempted to attract General Clausen away from the Army to a position in the Alabama Department of Court Management. Obviously, he chose to remain with the Army—its gain was Alabama's loss.

After his retirement from the Army, General Clausen will assume the position of vice president for administration and secretary to the board of trustees at Clemson University. I can ensure both of my distinguished colleagues from South Carolina that he will be an excellent attribute to their State.

After graduating from law school in 1950, General Clausen was commissioned as an officer in the U.S. Army Reserve, Judge Advocate General's Corps, before being called to active duty in 1951. During the last 34 years, he has completed the advanced management program in the Graduate School of Business Administration of Harvard University, the nonresident course of the U.S. Army War College, U.S. Army Command and General Staff College, the U.S. Army Language School, and the advanced class at the Judge Advocate General's School.

Mr. President, through the years, General Clausen has served in a variety of positions, each of which helped prepare him for his tenure as the Judge Advocate General. He has served as Staff Judge Advocate in Vietnam and at Fort Hood, TX. He also served 2 years here in Washington in the Office of the Chief of Legislation Liaison. In addition, General Clausen has been Chief of the Military Justice Division, commander of the U.S. Army Legal Services Agency, and Chief Judge of the Army Court of Military Review.

In September 1978, General Clausen was appointed Assistant Judge Advocate General for Military Law. Following that assignment, he was named the Assistant Judge Advocate General of the Army, and, finally, in July 1981, he began his tenure as the Judge Advocate General.

Mr. President, during his service career, General Clausen has received awards including the Legion of Merit with Oak Leaf Cluster, the Bronze Star Medal with three Oak Leaf Clusters, the Meritorious Service Medal, the Air Medal with Oak Leaf Cluster, and the Army Commendation Medal with Oak Leaf Cluster.

I congratulate Maj. Gen. Hugh J. Clausen on his outstanding career and accomplishments. As a friend I am proud of his excellent work, and am certain that he will continue to distinguished himself.

THE SOVIET NUCLEAR TEST MORATORIUM OFFER

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I was pleased and encouraged by the Soviet declaration of a brief unilateral moratorium on nuclear testing and their offer to join the United States in a mutual moratorium. I only hope that the offer reflects a genuine Soviet interest in the achievement of a comprehensive ban on nuclear explosions.

The best way to test Soviet intent would be for us to offer to sit down at the bargaining table with them at the earliest possible date to discuss how best to bring an end to nuclear explosions. We should be willing to treat their offer seriously and to explore every possible means of breaking through the present impasse.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

The majority leader is recognized.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I understand the distinguished minority leader is on his way to the Chamber. We hope to dispose of the conference report on S. 960. It will not take more than 1 minute. If we can finish that, then we can move to the conference report on S. 1160, and I am advised by the distinguished chairman, Senator GOLDWATER, that it will not take a great deal of time. Following that, we will take up the test ban treaty resolution.

I hope we can avoid amendments on what will happen during the August recess. We have been encouraging our colleagues to not offer a number of amendments to that proposal.

INTERNATIONAL SECURITY AND DEVELOPMENT COOPERATION ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on S. 960 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 960) to amend the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, the Arms Export Control Act and other acts to authorize appropriations for the fiscal year 1986 for international security and development assistance, the Peace Corps, the Inter-American Foundation, and the African Development Foundation, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The conference report will be printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD.)

Mr. LUGAR, Mr. President, we are considering the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1985 which the Senate and House conferees have agreed to late last week. I strongly urge my colleagues to pass this measure because it represents a balanced and fair compromise between the House and the Senate foreign aid bills. If passed, we will have the first foreign aid authorization bill in 4 years and in so doing we will help restore the foreign aid authorization process to its rightful place in Congress' role in foreign policy.

Enactment of this bill is very much in the national security interest of the United States. It authorizes security assistance for our allies and friends to improve their defenses against external aggression and internal conflicts and it also authorizes economic and development assistance to Third World nations beleagured with a vast array of economic problems. This bill also provides constructive approaches to dealing with international terrorism, airport security and the chronic and troubling problem of the international traffic in narcotics and drugs. When progress is made in each of these areas, we protect and promote the interests of the United States.

The authorization levels approved by the conferees represent a serious attempt to strike a viable balance between the House and the Senate bills. The conferees agreed that the overall numbers should fall below those of the Senate and above those approved by the House. In order to accomplish this objective, we settled on a slightly lower figure for security assistance than was approved in this Chamber, but the House reconciled itself to slightly lower figures than it wanted for development assistance. This was necessary to reach the common ground of a constructive compromise that is workable and balanced. Overall, slightly less than one-half of the $12.7 billion authorization level in the bill would go to military assistance, the remainder to economic and development assistance. The largest share of the authorization levels would go to Israel and Egypt, the two Camp David countries which have been the leading recipients of U.S. security and economic assistance for some time.

The conferees also agreed on several important issues central to the conduct of our foreign policy. We agreed on balanced funding levels for the Philippines—$70 million in military assistance and $110 million in ESF—and authorized funding levels for humanitarian purposes for the democratic resistance in Nicaragua. The bill repeals the prohibition against assistance to nongovernmental forces in Angola, authorizes assistance to non-Communist forces in Cambodia and Afghanistan and continues the constructive programs for economic and military assistance in Central America, especially in El Salvador where our programs have helped slow down and reverse the deteriorating situation of recent years.

This is a good bill, it represents the labor of many people who have put in countless hours in order to develop a viable compromise. It merits broad, strong bipartisan support in the Senate, as I am sure it will receive in the House.

I would like to thank my fellow conferees on both side of the aisle, especially the distinguished ranking minority member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, as well as the committee staff members for their tireless effort and sage counsel throughout the past several months work on this bill.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I want to add my endorsement to the conference report on the foreign aid authorization legislation that is now before the Senate. This report is the culmination of an arduous process and, as such, represents a compromise between the original House and Senate foreign aid bills passed earlier this year. We have attempted in this report to address a number of highly contentious issues in a fair, bipartisan manner. The conferees, and the staffs of both committees, sought to fashion a compromise that best reflected the views of the Congress, as expressed in our respective bills, and that best served the foreign policy interests of our country. I urge its swift passage by the Senate.

I also want to take a moment to congratulate our chairman, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR]. He steered this legislation through some very troubled waters. With his leadership, and his willingness to listen to competing views and to fashion fair and workable compromies, he has led us to the point where the Congress, for the first time in 4 long years, will pass an authorization bill for the Foreign Aid Program. He deserves our thanks and admiration for this devotion to this task, which is, as all of us know, not always easy, and almost never popular. May I add that his staff supported him in a fair and excellent way. However, our Nation's interests are well served by this effort, and we are all in Senator LUGAR's debt for his work on this legislation.

Mr. President, I am pleased that after 4 years the Senate and the full Congress have returned to regular process, requiring a full authorization prior to approval of funding for the foreign assistance programs. I support that process and earnestly hope that we will continue in this manner in the future consideration of foreign assistance programs.

I also wish to thank my own staff, particularly Gerald Christianson, Gerald Connolly, and Bill Ashworth for their invaluable help.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I have been honored to be majority leader of this body for nearly 7 months now. One of the most important goals I have set for myself in this position has been to do what I can to restore some of the orderly conduct of business to the Senate, particularly in the authorization and appropriations processes.

For that reason, I am especially pleased that the Senate will take final action today on the foreign aid authorization bill. This will be the first time since 1981 that we have succeeded in passing a foreign aid bill, taking it to conference and bringing it back to the Senate for final action. For that reason, today is something of a red letter day—a real milestone on the road toward restoration of orderly and rational procedures in this body.

It is doubly satisfying, moreover, that we have reached this stage without ducking the tough foreign aid issues which have stymied progress on this legislation in past years. Here in the Senate, and in conference, we have dealt with Central America, including the most difficult issue of aid to the so-called Contras in Nicaragua. We have dealt with the Middle East—Israel, Egypt, Jordan and the rest. We have tackled some of the difficult African problems, including some like the Clark amendment which have been with us for several years. And we have put flesh on our policies of support for the freedom fighters of Afghanistan and Kampuchea.

There are many people, on both sides of the aisle, who share credit for the progress of this legislation. The chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, Senator LUGAR, is the principal architect of this bill and has been the principal strategist in bringing it to fruition. He deserves a lion's share of our praise and thanks today. The distinguished ranking member of the committee, Senator PELL, has worked with the chairman in an exemplary bipartisan way, to insure that we would have good, practical legislation, aimed at our national interest and not at partisan interests. The conferees from the Senate side each did a superb job—in addition to Senators LUGAR and PELL, they were Senators HELMS, MATHIAS, KASSEBAUM and BOSCHWITZ, from the majority; and Senators BIDEN, SARBANES and ZORINSKY from the minority. And, of course, all the other members of the Foreign Relations Committee have each contributed in major ways to this final product, too, and each deserves recognition. Finally, I would be remiss if I did not take special note of the work of the Foreign Relations Committee staff, both majority and minority, who did so much of the backstage work to get us where we are today.

At a time when we seem to be having difficulty moving some other important legislation, it is encouraging and satisfying to see this important bill ready for final passage. It shows we can act—effectively, decisively and in a bipartisan way. Hopefully the spirit of cooperation embodied in the passage of this bill will show us the way on other equally important matters.

PEACE CORPS PROVISIONS

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to recommend to my colleagues support of the provisions of title IX of the conference agreement on the proposed International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1985, which relate to the Peace Corps. In addition to the reauthorization provision, the conference agreement contains three provisions similar to those in S. 882, the proposed Peace Corps Amendments of 1985, which I, joined by Senators MATHIAS, PELL, KASSEBAUM, and DODD, introduced on April 4. These provisions would establish a statutory Peace Corps National Advisory Council; declare a policy of providing opportunities for a volunteer corps of at least 10,000; and require overseas appointments of Peace Corps employees to be made on a nonpartisan basis. Also, the conference agreement would modify the existing 5-year limitation on the period that U.S. citizens generally may be employed by the Peace Corps and authorize the appropriation of $130 million for the Peace Corps for each of fiscal years 1986 and 1987.

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE PEACE CORPS

Mr. President, next year the Peace Corps will celebrate its 25th anniversary. For almost a quarter of a century Americans of all ages have volunteered for the Peace Corps. In all, over 100,000 Americans have served as Peace Corps volunteers. They have established a record of service throughout the world of which every one of us can and should be proud.

Former Peace Corps volunteers are continuing to contribute in a multitude of ways, from activities in small communities to national leadership. Two former Peace Corps volunteers, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD] and former Senator Tsongas from Massachusetts, have been elected to this body. Four former volunteers currently serve in the House of Representatives.

For a period of time, however, the visibility of the Peace Corps had seemed to diminish. Some wondered whether the Peace Corps still existed or whether the idealism of the sixties which had spawned and nurtured this program had been replaced by a con-sumptionistic, materialistic orientation. In 1981, the legislation I authored in the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1981 set the Peace Corps free from the Federal bureaucracy in which it had been buried and was hibernating and gave it an opportunity to reestablish its presence, both in the public eye at home and throughout the world.

The Peace Corps is alive and well today and is thriving. Public interest in Peace Corps volunteer service is strong, as demonstrated by the flood of inquiries received by the Peace Corps in response to Peace Corps Director Loret Ruppe's call this past spring for 600 volunteers to go to Africa to help deal with the agricultural challenges facing that famine-ridden part of our world. Inquiries were pouring into Peace Corps offices at the rate of 1,000 calls a day. However, even as we rejoice in the renewal of interest in this program, there is more than can be done to help continue to stimulate this revival and renewal of the ideals and the vision that the Peace Corps has always symbolized and to reinforce the bipartisan, nonpartisan nature of support for the program.

OPPORTUNITY FOR RENEWAL AND REDEDICATION OF THE PROGRAM

Mr. President, the 25th anniversary of this unique program—which so well exemplifies the compassion and the willingness to help those in need which is integral to the American spirit—presents us with a special opportunity to reflect upon the Peace Corps and on where it should be going in the next 25 years.

Despite the renewed sense of interest in and a much greater public awareness of the Peace Corps since Congress granted it independence in 1981, the Peace Corps today is one-third the size it was in 1966 when more than 15,000 Peace Corps volunteers were serving throughout the world. Today, we have barely 5,000 volunteers. Concerns over the utilization of overseas Peace Corps staff posts as political patronage plums continue to plague the program. The resources, talents, and ideas of the thousands and thousands of former Peace Corps volunteers bearing on the future direction of the Peace Corps Program are not used as a part of the formal structure within which Peace Corps planning and programming decisions are made. It is long since past time, for example, for the appointment of a former Peace Corps volunteer as Director of the Peace Corps.

Provisions of the conference agreement are aimed at addressing each of these issues.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

With respect to the authorization of appropriations, I believe that the agreement—providing authorizations of appropriations of $130 million for each of fiscal years 1986 and 1987—represents a fair compromise between the Senate-passed authorization of $128.6 million for fiscal year 1986 and the House-passed authorization of $136.1 million in each of fiscal years 1986 and 1987. In this connection, I note that, based on Senate provisions, the conference agreement contains a potential additional source of funding for the Peace Corps operations. The conference report would authorize the President to transfer to the Peace Corps, for use in carrying out the purposes of the Peace Corps Act in Central American countries, funds appropriated for nonmilitary assistance in Central America for fiscal years 1988, 1989, and 1990 pursuant to new section 435 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961.

I would encourage the use of that authority to the full extent that the Peace Corps believes it can make effective use of additional funding for its programs in Central America.

In addition, I am delighted that the conferees agreed to include in the joint explanatory statement language I suggested to underscore the unique role of the Peace Corps as an instrument for enabling dedicated Americans to serve the peoples of its host countries and for increasing mutual understanding between Americans and the people of other countries. Thus, the explanatory statement of the conferees stresses that in making these additional funds available to the Peace Corps for use in Central America, the conferees do not intend to change in any way the fundamental precept, first enunciated by Secretary of State Dean Rusk in 1961, that the Peace Corps is not to be used as an instrument of U.S. foreign policy.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL

I am also very pleased that the House conferees agreed, with a very few modifications, with all of which I concur fully, to the Senate proposal—embodying provisions from amendment No. 121, which I, together with Senator KASSEBAUM, submitted and the Senate agreed to on May 15—to establish a statutory, bipartisan Peace Corps National Advisory Council to replace the existing advisory committee.

This new council would be directed to evaluate the accomplishments of the Peace Corps, assess the potential capabilities and future role of the Peace Corps, and make recommendations to the Director of the Peace Corps, the President, and the Congress. The council's recommendations would serve to help guide the future direction of the Peace Corps and ensure that the purposes and programs of the Peace Corps are carried out in ways that are economical, effecient, responsive to changing needs in host and potential host countries, and to changing relationships among peoples, and in accordance with law.

The council would consist of 15 voting members—nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate—who would be required to be broadly representative of the general public, with the Secretary of State and the Administrator of AID, or their designees, and the Director and Deputy Director of the Peace Corps serving as nonvoting members ex-officio. At least seven of the voting members would have to be former Peace Corps volunteers and not more than eight could be members of the same political party. The council would elect annually its own chairman and vice chairman who could not be of the same political party.

This council is designed to serve as a real, working group, not a perfunctory rubberstamp.

I am convinced that this is the right point in the history of the Peace Corps to create a new, specialized, representative bipartisan body, to bring together individuals with relevent experience and insights about the role that the Peace Corps should play in the world during the Peace Corps' next quarter of a century.

Mr. President, there is currently a nonstatutory advisory council to the Peace Corps. However, as far as we can tell from the scant information available about it, it contains no former Peace Corps volunteers and does not have the type of mission, responsibilities, scope, or experience and representative membership as the advisory council which would be established under this legislation. Under the conference agreement, beginning 60 days after the date of enactment, no such administratively established council would be permitted to exist.

The changes made in this provision in the conference agreement are relatively minor in nature and include modifications to the council membership to make the Secretary of State a nonvoting, rather than a voting member, and add the AID Administrator as a nonvoting member.

Mr. President, for further information regarding the background and intent of the provisions to establish the National Advisory Council, I refer my colleagues to my remarks at the time of Senate adoption of my amendment, beginning on page S. 6164 of the RECORD for May 15.

NONPARTISAN APPOINTMENTS OF OVERSEAS PERSONNEL

The conference agreement contains, without modification, the provision in amendment No. 121 to amend the Peace Corps Act to provide that overseas staff appointments must be nonpartisan. This provision deals with a problem that has plagued the Peace Corps through both Republican and Democratic administrations. Unfortunately, Peace Corps country directorships have sometimes been viewed as political patronage prizes. These post are too important to be handed out to unqualified persons. A Peace Corps country director is a vital link both to the Government of the host country and to scores of volunteers in the field who must depend on the country director's good judgment and sensitivity on numerous occasions.

Peace Corps volunteers often serve in precarious positions, hundreds of miles from any governmental—ours or the host country's—support mechanism or protection. They don't live, as do most Foreign Service officers, in American compounds or foreigners' enclaves with special commissary and diplomatic privileges. Peace Corps volunteers live generally at the level and in the communities of the people they come to serve and help.

They deserve to know that their country director and support staff were chosen specifically because of the capacity to be of help to Peace Corps volunteers and not as a reward for political contributions or campaign work.

Unlike overseas diplomatic missions of the U.S. Government, which are supported by a cadre of career, professional Foreign Service staff, the Peace Corps overseas programs are staffed by very small numbers of American employees serving in the Peace Corps for statutorily limited periods, generally no more than 5 years. Under the circumstances, missteps or miscalculations by an unqualified Peace Corps country director or other staff person could have dire consequences. Each overseas Peace Corps staff member must be competent and dedicated to the goals of the Peace Corps and to the wellbeing and success of the volunteers and should be expressly selected because of and only because of those attributes.

Again, for further information on the background and intent of this provision, I would refer my colleagues to my statement on amendment No. 121, beginning on page S 6164 of the May 15 RECORD.

POLICY FOR A VOLUNTEER CORPS OF AT LEAST 10,000

Mr. President, the conference agreement contains a provision, derived from the House-passed bill, declaring that it is the policy of the United States and a purpose of the Peace Corps Act to provide sufficient opportunities for service to maintain a volunteer corps of at least 10,000, to the maximum extent appropriate and consistent with programmatic and fiscal considerations.

In 1984, there were about 5,200 Peace Corps volunteers serving in 60 countries around the world. For the past 18 years, however, the number of Peace Corps volunteers has steadily declined, from its height of more than 15,000 in 1966, to 9,000 in 1970 and 6,000 in 1980. The worldwide distribution has also declined. Almost half of the current volunteers—2,400—serve in Africa. Less than 200 serve in South America—all of those in only two countries.

Obviously, an increase in the size of the Peace Corps must be carefully planned and executed. Expansion must be tailored to, first, the needs of and requests for assistance from host countries; second, the pool of qualified volunteers; third, the capacity of the Peace Corps to provide adequate training and support to and placement of volunteers; and, fourth, budgetary realities given our very critical deficit problem and the great competition for scarce resources. But I believe there is little doubt that a goal of a total volunteer strength of at least 10,000 is worthwhile and attainable in this decade or early in the next.

Mr. President, as I noted at the time of Senate consideration and adoption of amendment No. 121, although my bill, S. 882, contained a provision to establish an at-least-10,000-volunteers goal, because the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee (Mr. LUGAR) was not then receptive to that provision, it was not included in the amendment I finally offered after considerable discussion. However, as I also noted, on page S 6165 of the May 15 RECORD, the chairman then agreed that in the conference he would take another look at the modified language I had planned to include in my amendment. He was, of course, true to his word and, I am very pleased that he, upon reconsideration, and the other Senate conferees were agreeable to the goal provision in the form I had originally included it in my floor amendment. It also includes the House bill's amendment to Peace Corps Act section 11, modified so as to require that no Peace Corps annual report specify any plan to carry out the new statutory goal.

LIMITATION ON LENGTH OF PEACE CORPS EMPLOYMENT

Mr. President, the House-passed measure contained a provision to extend from 5 to 7½ years the general maximum duration of the period that a U.S. citizen may be employed by the Peace Corps. Although the Senate bill contained no comparable provision, we were sympathetic to some of the reasons cited for such expansion and, after much staff discussion prior to the conference, have been able to reach accord on provisions that meet the Peace Corps' need to retain some number of its U.S. citizen employees longer than 5 years.

Thus, the conference agreement contains the House provision in the amendment with modifications. The agreement specifies four purposes for which appointments of U.S. citizens in excess of 5 years may be made: First, to permit Peace Corps employees who have served at least 2½ years abroad to serve in the United States; second, to permit Peace Corps employees who have served at least 2½ years in the United States to serve abroad; third, to permit employees who have served at least 2½ years in a recruiting, selection, or training assignment to serve either in the United States or abroad in an assignment other than the one in which they have most recently served; or, fourth, to promote the continuity of functions in administering the Peace Corps.

The conference agreement would also limit the total number of appointments or assignments of U.S. citizens in effect at any one time for more than 5 years to no more than 15 percent of the total of all appointments or assignments of U.S. citizens at that time. However, without regard to these limitations on the number of U.S. citizen employees who may be employed, and the purposes for which they may be employed, for more than 5 years, the conference agreement would permit the Director of the Peace Corps under special circumstances personally to extend on an individual basis an employee's service up to 1 year beyond 5 years. This authority to extend an employee's appointment would be in addition to the Director's existing authority, currently set forth in section 7(a)(2)(A), to provide under the same terms and conditions up-to-1-year extensions of the general limitation—which the conference agreement would increase from 5 years to 7½ years—on the duration of U.S. citizen's Peace Corps employment.

The conference agreement would also require the Director to submit to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and the House Committee on Foreign Affairs by January 1, 1986, a report on the criteria to be used, pursuant to the four statutory-purpose provisions, in exercising the new authority to employ U.S. citizens beyond 5 years for up to 7½ years. The Director would thereafter be required to submit annual reports on the exercise of that authority and the Director's authorities personally to approve the two types of 1-year extensions.

Under these provisions, if at a given point there were a total of 800 U.S. citizen employees of the Peace Corps, no more than 120—15 percent of 800—would be permitted at that time to have appointments or assignments in excess of 5 years, but employees serving in their 6th year pursuant to up-to-1-year extensions personally approved by the Peace Corps Director under special circumstances would not be counted against the 15-percent limit. However, each employee serving with an extension beyond 7½ year would be counted. The conference report joint statement stresses the views of the conferees that the extraordinary short-term extension authority should continue to be exercised sparingly by the Director, as it has been.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, I want to express my appreciation to the conferees on this legislation for the cooperative, constructive attitude with which they approached the negotiations on provisions relating to the Peace Corps. I would especially like to thank for their fine work on these provisions the very able chairman, Representative DANTE FASCELL, and ranking minority member, Representative WILLIAM BROOMFIELD, of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, and committee staff consultant Margaret Goodman; the distinguished chairman, Senator RICHARD LUGAR, and ranking minority member, Senator CLAIBORNE PELL, of our committee, and my fellow committee member, Senator CHRIS DODD, who as a former Peace Corps volunteer has a strong personal interest in matters relating to the Agency. I also would like to express my gratitude for their fine work and cooperation on these provisions to members of the Senate committee majority staff, especially Mark Blitz, and minority staff, Gerry Christianson and Gerry Connolly, and staff assisting Senator DODD, Robert Dockery. I also want to thank for their outstanding efforts the staff who assisted me, Susanne Martinez, Ed Scott, and Jon Steinberg.

Mr. President, the Peace Corps has always been a very special program for me. In the midsixties I had the honor of serving as a Peace Corps program evaluator, visiting volunteers on the job in Ghana. Seeing first hand the tremendous work being done by these dedicated Americans left me with an enduring commitment to this truly outstanding endeavor.

Peace Corps volunteers have contributed in countless ways to the goal of world peace and understanding. Both America and the world have much to gain from an expanded, rededicated, and nonpartisan Peace Corps. I believe that enactment of this legislation will provide an opportunity to reinforce and strengthen the bipartisan support for this program and help make the next 25 years the best they can be for this unique people-to-people effort.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am pleased that the conferees on S. 960, the foreign assistance authorization bill, agreed to authorize economic assistance and cultural exchange funding for Central America for the next 4 years. This landmark multi-year authorization implements one of the major recommendations of the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America, chaired by former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger.

A long-term commitment to the economic and social development of Central America is established by this legislation. Other recommendations of the bipartisan commission are also included: assistance for granting clear titles to land reform recipients; reform of judicial and civil police systems in the region; and establishment of a Central America Development Organization.

The Agency for International Development, the U.S. Information Agency, and other executive branch organizations should move forward as rapidly as possible to take advantage of this expression of congressional endorsement of the Bipartisan Commission. Until now, too many activities have been delayed by redtape and lack of high-level attention. Most of the money requested has been appropriated, so with this policy language, there's no more room for excuses to delay implementation.

The distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee has done a good job with this legislation, and is well on the way to restoring the Foreign Relations Committee to its traditional status as a major actor in foreign policy. I thank him for his help.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me in order that I might direct a couple of questions to him concerning economic support funds [ESF] for Ecuador?

Mr. LUGAR. I will be glad to yield to the distinguished Senator.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee for yielding to me. I am specifically interested in whether this bill earmarks any ESF for the Government of Ecuador in fiscal years 1986 and 1987. Am I correct that the legislation does not, in fact, earmark any ESF for Ecuador?

Mr. LUGAR. Yes, that is correct.

Mr. PELL. Can the Senator explain to me the reason for this and whether he feels Ecuador is entitled to this type of assistance?

Mr. LUGAR. Yes, I will be glad to respond to the Senator. As the Senator knows, the Foreign Relations Committee does not, as a general rule, earmark funds unless there is a compelling reason to do so. However, while the bill does not earmark ESF for Ecuador, I would say that I am very supportive of President Febres-Cordero's recent request to President Reagan for ESF in this and subsequent fiscal years. In addition, I would say that the absence, or the lack of, an earmark does not, in any way, diminish Ecuador's need for ESF support. On the contrary, Ecuador's needs ought to be considered carefully. It is fast becoming one of the most progressive countries in terms of its economic policies and human rights record among countries in that region.

Mr. PELL. Can the Senator tell me since there is no earmark, whether the conference report contains a specific recommendation with respect to ESF for Ecuador during the next 2 fiscal years and, also whether he considers that amount sufficient?

Mr. LUGAR. I would say in response to the Senator that the administration recommended $15 million in ESF for Ecuador in fiscal years 1986 and 1987. However, in my judgment this amount should not be considered a ceiling on ESF for Ecuador during the next 2 years. Rather, I would hope that the administration would consider this a minimal amount. It is my belief that Ecuador, under the leadership of President Febres-Cordero, is on the road to becoming a strong and viable democracy and ally of U.S. interests in Latin America and that, further, this is the kind of government the administration and the Congress should support.

Mr. PELL. What is the Senator's view of a potential reprogramming request for Ecuador?

Mr. LUGAR. The bill, of course, does not make any such recommendation with respect to a reprogramming of unexpended fiscal year 1985 funds. As the Senator knows, I met recently with President Febres-Cordero and I was truly impressed with his determination to make his country a genuine Latin American success story. However, it is clear to me that in order for him to be successful, he needs to have our help. So I would say to my friend that I would be very supportive and, indeed, I would encourage the State Department to consider Ecuador's needs with this in mind. I believe that adequate funds for Ecuador would be a wise and prudent investment that would reap substantial dividends for the United States in this part of the world for years to come.

Mr. PELL. I thank the Senator for yielding. I agree with him that Ecuador requires and deserves a substantial amount of ESF and I will work with him in this regard.

Mr. SARBANES and Mr. LUGAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I wish to thank my distinguished colleague, Senator PELL, for his comments, and to add my own congratulations to him, and to the majority and minority staff who did extraordinary work.

Likewise, to our colleagues who worked so hard on this bill.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, this is a significant case. It is the first time that the Congress will have passed a foreign assistance authorization in 4 years. We have been operating really on the basis of a continuing resolution, which is not the way to do business.

I commend the chairman and the ranking member for their persistent and consistent efforts over a very sustained period of time in order to bring this about. This is the way we ought to be legislating.

Mr. President, I am pleased that we are back on the right track with respect to this important legislation.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr President, I move adoption of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on S. 1160 and ask for its immeditate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1160) to authorize appropriations for the military functions of the Department of Defense and to prescribe personnel levels for the Department of Defense for fiscal year 1986, to authorize certain construction at military installations for such fiscal year, to authorize appropriations for the Department of Energy for national security programs for such fiscal year, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conferees.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD of July 29, 1985.)

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I am pleased to bring to the Senate the conference report on S. 1160, the Department of Defense authorization bill for fiscal year 1986. After 2 weeks of extensive negotiations, House and Senate conferees have resolved nearly 1,000 funding differences and more than 350 language differences.

Before I highlight some of the more important agreements contained in this bill, I would like to first thank my friend and colleague Senator NUNN, the ranking minority member of the Armed Services Committee, for his invaluable help in completing this conference. As always, his sound judgment and close cooperation were essential in our efforts to reach agreement with the House conferees. Mr. President, I have participated in many conferences during my years on the Armed Services Committee, but I cannot remember a single year during which the committee's work has been managed in a greater spirit of bipartisan cooperation. That is a real credit to Senator NUNN.

I would also like to express my great appreciation to the chairmen and ranking minority members of each of the subcommittees of the Armed Services Committee for their diligent efforts in resolving the differences within their subcommittees' jurisdiction. And I would also like to thank all the members of the committee for their steadfast support and cooperation throughout this conference.

Finally, the staff of the committee—both majority and minority—should be commended for their professionalism and hard work in completing this conference report.

Mr. President, the bill I am recommending to the Senate today, together with the expected outcome of the conference on the military construction authorization bill, will total about $302.5 billion for the national defense budget function in fiscal year 1986. This funding level is the same as that contained in the tentative bipartisan agreement on the budget—a level I expect to be retained in the first concurrent budget resolution. A funding level of $302.5 billion allows the defense budget to grow only enough to cover the projected rise in inflation during fiscal year 1986. I continue to believe that this figure is too low, and that it does not provide adequate resources to meet our national security requirements.

Nevertheless, Mr. President, I am recommending that the Senate approve this conference report. No one will be surprised to learn that there are many matters in this bill with which I personally disagree. Both the House and the Senate again burdened the defense authorization bill with narrow, parochial concerns that in many cases do not belong on this bill, and which contribute nothing to our national defense. Although some of these provisions were eliminated in conference, a number remain. However, I am urging the Senate to approve this bill because, on the whole, it will strengthen our national security. Conference reports by their very nature involve compromise—and concessions were made by both sides on a number of issues.

At this time, I would like to briefly highlight the major provisions of the conference report:

SDI

The conferees agreed to provide $2.75 billion, and left the allocation of these funds to the discretion of the program manager.

BINARY CHEMICAL MUNITIONS

The conference report provides for the initial production of binary chemical munitions, following certain Presidential certifications.

PEACEKEEPER (MX)

The conference report capped deployment of MX missiles in existing Minuteman silos at 50, and procured 12 missiles in fiscal year 1986.

ASAT

The conferees agreed to limit ASAT tests against an object in space to three through the end of fiscal year 1986.

SMALL ICBM

The Conferees added $100 million to the amount requested for the small ICBM.

M-1 TANK

The conferees approved procurement of 840 m-1 tanks.

SERGEANT YORK DIVISION AIR DEFENSE (DIVAD) GUN

The conferees approved the procurement of 72 Divad guns for $210 million. This money may be spent only after the Divad has proved its effectiveness during follow-on test and evaluation.

F/A-18

84 Navy F/A-18 fighter aircraft were approved by the conferees.

F-16 AND F-15

The conference report provides for the procurement of 180 F-16 aircraft and 48 F-15's for the Air Force.

SHIPBUILDING

The conferees approved $10 billion for the construction of 21 new ships and 5 conversions.

AIRLIFT AIRCRAFT

The conferees approved the procurement of 16 C-5B and 12 KC-10A Aircraft, and continued development of the C-17.

PAY RAISE

The conferees approved a 3 percent military pay raise, effective October 1, 1985.

OPERATIONS AND MAINTENANCE

The conferees approved $79.3 billion to sustain improvements in the readiness and sustainability of our Armed Forces.

PROCUREMENT POLICY

The conference report contains a number of provisions designed to improve the procurement process.

BASE CLOSURES

The conferees approved a provision that will expedite procedures to close nonessential bases.

OTHER ECONOMY AND EFFICIENCY MEASURES

The conference report eliminated several other congressionally imposed impediments to the efficient management of our defense program.

Mr. President, the remainder of my statement provides greater detail regarding the provisions of the conference report.

51-059 O-86-2 (Pt. 16)

STRATEGIC FORCE ISSUES

The conference committee resolved differences of over $3.1 billion between the Senate and House bills involving strategic programs. While adjustments were made in a number of programs due to budgetary constraints, the conferees agreed to maintain the momentum of the Strategic Modernization Program.

STRATEGIC DEFENSE INITIATIVE

The Senate bill provided $2.97 billion for the President's strategic defense initiative [SDI], while leaving the allocation of this reduction to the discretion of the SDI program manager. The House bill provided $2.5 billion, and specifically allocated this reduction against each of the five major program elements. The conference committee remained strongly supportive of a vigorous research effort under the strategic defense initiative, with its goal of determining the feasibility of developing strategic defenses for the United States and its allies. The conferees therefore recommended an authorization of $2.75 billion for the SDI in fiscal year 1986, and left the allocation of the reduction to the discretion of the program manager.

BINARY CHEMICAL MODERNIZATION PROGRAM

The conference committee took another important step toward restoring a credible U.S. chemical deterrent capability. Resolving the differences between the two bills on this program was one of the most difficult issues faced by the conferees. The final agreement, which required concessions from both sides, restricted the funding for the procurement of binary munitions—including components—and the associated production facilities until the President provides a certification to Congress. The President must certify that the United States has developed a plan, in cooperation with the Supreme Allied Commander, Europe, to deploy U.S. binary chemical munitions under appropriate contingencies to deter chemical attacks against the United States and our allies, and that he has consulted with NATO members on this plan.

No funds may be expended for the final assembly of complete binary munitions until October 1, 1987, and are available thereafter only if there has been no verifiable international agreement on chemical weapons, and the President makes a further certification to the Congress. In addition, the conferees adopted language expressing the sense of the Congress that unitary chemical munitions currently stored in the United States and in NATO should be replaced with modern binary munitions for safety reasons.

PEACEKEEPER (MX) MISSILE

The conferees provided $1.85 billion for the procurement of 12 MX missiles in fiscal year 1986, including initial spares, and the support equipment required to deploy 50 missiles in existing silos. The conference report includes statutory language limiting the number of Peacekeeper missiles deployed in existing Minutemen silos to 50. The conference provision is explicit with regard to the possibility of MX deployments beyond 50 should the President propose—and the Congress approve—a more survivable basing mode for the MX—the President always has the prerogative to request additional MX missiles for deployment if there is a significant change in the strategic environment—the conferees anticipate further missile procurements for the Operational Test Program and the Missile Aging and Surveillance Program, and expect that between 12 and 21 missiles will be procured for these purposes in fiscal year 1987.

ANTI-SATELLITE WEAPONS

The conference report includes statutory language that permits testing of the U.S. miniature homing vehicle antisatellite [ASAT] system against an object in space following a Presidential certification on the need for, and arms control implications of, such testing. This provision provides funding for not more than three such tests against an object in space through the end of fiscal year 1986. The conferees fully funded the administration's $149.9 million request for research and development. However, the conferees reduced the request for procurement by $65 million, and invited the Air Force to reprogram funds into the Research and Development Program for the purpose of resolving technical issues.

TACAMO (E-6A) AIRCRAFT

The Senate bill fully funded the adminstration's request of $86.3 million for research and development, and $400.2 million for the procurement of two E-6A submarine communications relay aircraft and associated spares. The House bill contained no funding for this program. In view of the importance the conferees attach to the sea-based leg of the U.S. strategic triad, and their judgment that this leg can be no more survivable or effective than the communications systems that support it, the conferees agreed to fully fund the E-6A Program.

ADVANCED TECHNOLOGY BOMBER AND ADVANCED CRUISE MISSILE

The conferees agreed to provide full funding for these programs in fiscal year 1986. The actual funding levels are classified.

SMALL ICBM

The Senate bill fully funded the administration's request for the small ICBM, or Midgetman missile. The House bill added an additional $150 million to the administration's request. The conferees agreed to provide an additional $100 million to the administration's request for the small ICBM to reduce risk in the program, including work on alternative guidance options and advanced propulsion techniques.

The conferees expressed the need for more information about this program that they expect to have available before proceeding to full-scale engineering development. The conferees directed the Air Force to report to the Committees on Armed Services by October 1, 1985, regarding tradeoffs that result from the congressionally imposed weight constraint on the missile, as well as other issues. In addition, the conferees directed that an independent review of the program be conducted by the Defense Science Board. I personally have a number of serious concerns about this program, not the least of which is its cost.

TACTICAL WARFARE ISSUES

Both the House and Senate Armed Services Committees continue to place strong emphasis on the modernization of our conventional forces. The agreements reached by the conferees will continue—and in some cases accelerate—the modernization of those forces.

ARMY

The conferees agreed on the procurement of 840 M-1 tanks in 1986, and provided advanced procurement funds for another 840 tanks in 1987. As a result of favorable contract negotiations and savings related to multiyear procurement, the conferees were able to reduce the administration's funding request for M-1 tanks by nearly $100 million without reducing the number of tanks procured.

The conferees approved the procurement of 72 Sergeant York Division Air Defense [Divad] guns for $210 million. These funds may not be expended until the Divad successfully demonstrates that it will meet system specifications during follow-on testing. The conferees also approved $72 million for the procurement of 150 field artillery ammunition support vehicles [FAASV], and $30 million for the procurement of 34 M-9 armored combat earth movers [ACE].

The conferees expressed strong support for the development of remotely piloted vehicles [RPV's], but expressed concern over the Army's current RPV Program, the Aquila. Recognizing the cost and performance problems that have hampered the Aquila Program, the conferees agreed to the Senate language directing that the program be restructured.

NAVY

For the Navy the conferees agreed to authorize 11 A-6E medium attack aircraft, 5 more than requested by the administration. A total of 84 F/A-18 aircraft were approved for 1986, along with advanced procurement funds for 84 aircraft in 1987. For F/A-18 research and development, the conferees approved an additional $7 million to continue the development of modifications that will give the F/A-18 an austere all-weather attack capability. The conferees also approved the procurement of four UH-60 Blackhawk helicopters to supplement the Navy's aging inventory of search and rescue [SAR] helicopters.

The conferees expressed strong support for the administration's efforts to fill out weapons inventories. The conferees approved the requested procurement levels for all Navy air-to-air and air-to-ground missiles with the exception of the Sidewinder which the conferees increased by 630 missiles. The conferees agreed to a funding level of $583.7 million for the development of Navy/Marine Corps, JVX—now designated MV-22 Osprey—tiltrotor aircraft. The MV-22 Osprey is expected to begin replacing CH-46 assault helicopters in 1991.

AIR FORCE

The conferees agreed to the Senate funding levels for the procurement of 180 F-16 and 48 F-15 fighter aircraft. In recognition of the savings which may be achieved from competition, the conferees approved a modification of the House provision calling for fighter competition. This modification requires the Secretary of the Air Force to establish a competition in 1986 for the procurement of future fighter aircraft. This competition shall be among all suitable aircraft including the F-20.

The conferees also agreed to the Senate funding levels for research and development of the advanced medium range air-to-air missile [AMRAAM]. Production funds of $150 million and advance procurement of $30 million were approved with the understanding that these funds would be applied to qualify the second source manufacturer—in an effort to achieve vigorous competition—and to initiate producibility improvements designed to lower the production cost of the missiles. The conferees also agreed that none of the production funds may be spent prior to a certification to the Congress by the Secretary of Defense that the total production cost of the AMRAAM Program has been capped at $5.2 billion—in 1984 dollars—for the procurement of 17,000 missiles.

The conferees agreed to the House funding level for three HH-60 Nighthawk helicopters to begin the modernization of the Air Force inventory of combat rescue aircraft. And in recognition of the need to continue the modernization of air defense systems at NATO facilities, the conferees authorized $75 million for NATO cooperative air defense efforts. These funds are to be matched by a similar commitment from our NATO allies for the procurement and manning of NATO air defenses.

SEA POWER AND FORCE PROJECTION

SHIPBUILDING

The conferees approved $10,001.2 million for 21 new construction ships and 5 conversions. The conferees agreed to fund one Trident ballistic missile submarine, four SSN-688 class nuclear attack submarines, three CG-47 class Aegis cruisers, one LHD-1 class amphibious assault ship, and 4 MSH coastal mine hunters. In addition to the long-lead funds provided for reactivation of the fourth battleship, U.S.S. Wisconsin, the conferees agreed that full reactivation of the ship was authorized if funds were available from savings in other shipbuilding contracts.

ANTISUBMARINE WARFARE AIRCRAFT

The conferees authorized 24 LAMPS Mark-III [Sea Hawk] helicopters, and 6 LAMPS Mark-I [Sea Sprite] helicopters.

The conferees also authorized up to nine P-3 Orions, but adopted a creative approach to funding these land-based antisubmarine warfare aircraft. Since overall ASW capability can be enhanced by improving existing aircraft as well as building new ones, the conferees provided the Secretary of the Navy with the discretion to shift some funds authorized for new aircraft into a program to upgrade older ones. Competitive bids will be required for the upgrade program, which effectively creates an alternative, and thus promotes competition, for the procurement funds as well.

AIRLIFT AIRCRAFT PROCUREMENT

The conferees agreed to continue funding for the multiyear procurement of C-5B cargo aircraft and KC-10A advanced tanker/cargo aircraft; 16 C-5B and 12 KC-10A aircraft will be purchased in fiscal year 1986. The conferees also agreed to support continued development of the new C-17 airlifter.

MANPOWER AND PERSONNEL ISSUES

The most significant differences between the Senate and House were in the end strength levels of military forces, in the level of reductions to be pursued in the military retirement system, and in military pay.

ACTIVE DUTY

The conferees agreed to an active duty end strength of 780,800 for the Army, 571,300 for the Navy, 606,470 for the Air Force, and 198,800 for the Marine Corps.

CIVILIANS

The conference agreement provides for a 1-year continuation of the test program which permits the Department of Defense to manage its civilian work force without an end strength imposed by the Congress, and without the use of end strengths as an administrative management tool. The Department would be required to report back to the Congress on the results of this test next year.

MILITARY PAY RAISE

The conferees approved the Senate's recommendation to provide a 3-percent raise in basic pay, basic allowance for subsistence, and basic allowance for quarters to be effective on October 1, 1985.

MILITARY RETIREMENT

The conferees agreed to reduce the authorized level of appropriations available to fund the military retirement accrual fund in fiscal year 1986 by $2.9 billion below the level needed under existing law. The Secretary of Defense will be required to submit two legislative proposals to the Congress by September 15, 1985, which, if enacted, would result in a $2.9 billion savings as required by the conference agreement. The proposals submitted by the Secretary of Defense must grandfather all retirees and those already serving in the military. One proposal, if enacted, would have to obtain the agreed upon savings without making changes in the cost-of-living adjustment mechanism now in law.

OPERATIONS AND MAINTENANCE

The conferees approved $79.3 billion for the operation and maintenance of the Armed Forces in fiscal year 1986, including civilian salaries, base operations, and training. The conference action represents a reduction of 3.2 billion from the administration's February request of $82.5 billion. Despite this reduction, the conference report will enable us to maintain the improvements that have been made in the readiness and sustainability of our Armed Forces over the past several years.

The current and projected strength of the U.S. economy, inflation reductions from previous years, and the strength of the dollar in the international markets permitted financial reductions in stock fund accounts, inflation estimates, and foreign currency funds. The savings realized from these reductions were applied to: Increase funding of maintenance and logistical support efforts; increase aircraft flying hours for all the services; increase steaming days for the ships of the Navy; increase battalion training days for the Army; add funds to real property maintenance accounts; increase depot maintenance funding; restore the recommended pay reduction for civilian Department of Defense workers; and provide funds for a number of other high priority readiness related items.

DRUG INTERDICTION

The conferees agreed to renew the Department of Defense's contribution in support of drug law enforcement assistance missions by providing surveillance, detection, and interdiction support. An allocation of $15 million will pay for Coast Guard personnel onboard Navy ships for this purpose. This effort will help fight drug traffic without granting the military authority to make arrests. The conferees hope other agreements in command, control, and coordination will make the assistance missions better coordinated and more effective.

HUMANITARIAN ASSISTANCE

The conference report contains two provisions which will provide assistance to refugees. One provision provided $10 million for transportation of humanitarian relief supplies to Afghan refugees. Another provision directs the Secretary of Defense to provide excess nonlethal, humanitarian supplies for distribution to refugees.

OTHER OPERATIONS AND MAINTENANCE RELATED ISSUES

The Department of Defense working capital funds were reduced by $200 million; funding support for the 10th Pan American Games was provided; and foreign currency funds were transferred to operations and maintenance accounts.,

PROCUREMENT POLICY ISSUES

As part of the conference report, the conferees adopted the Defense Procurement Improvement Act of 1985. The act has provisions dealing with many aspects of the defense procurement process and is intended to address some recent high-visibility problems. The following major provisions were adopted to improve the procurement process by:

First, promoting continuous competition throughout the period of time in which a weapon system or other defense equipment is being acquired, provided that such competition is cost effective, would not result in acceptable delays, and is otherwise in the national security interest;

Second, requiring the Secretary of Defense to evaluate the use of thorough "should cost" estimates for each major defense program;

Third, ensuring that military and civilian personnel in the Department of Defense with substantial defense procurement responsibility are properly qualified;

Fourth, ensuring that the career path for military officers who have specialized in defense acquisition offers sufficient opportunity for advancement and promotion;

Fifth, providing mandatory training for personnel responsible for quality assurance in contractor facilities;

Sixth, promoting increased disclosure of the activities of employees of defense contractors who were former employees of the Department of Defense, and who were directly involved in defense procurement;

Seventh, preventing conflicts of interest by employees of the Department of Defense involved in the negotiation and administration of defense contracts;

Eighth, continuing procurement technical assistance through outreach programs;

Ninth, shifting the burden of proof in certain matters in the resolution of Government contract disputes;

Tenth, providing the Director of the Defense Contract Audit Agency with subpoena authority;

Eleventh, improving the accounting for contracted advisory and assistance services;

Twelfth, making certain indirect expenses of contractors unallowable;

Thirteenth, establishing penalties for the submission of unallowable costs to DOD for reimbursement;

Fourteenth, increasing the penalties for the submission of false claims to DOD;

Fifteenth, making certain improvements in the selected acquisition report system;

Sixteenth, limiting the basis of progress payments; and,

Seventeenth, establishing a rule of mandatory debarment from defense contracting for at least 1 year for individuals convicted of fraud in defense contracting.

The conference report also includes requests for reports on several subjects including: spare parts; contractor profits; independent cost estimates; minority business contracting; and a civilian acquisition agency.

NATO COOPERATION

In the area of armaments cooperation within NATO, the bill contains two significant measures. First, the conferees agreed to provisions designed to enhance the Department of Defense's ability to enter into NATO cooperative projects for the research, development, and production of defense equipment. Specifically, the provisions provide authority for the President to enter into agreements with other NATO countries for a cooperative project, and provides authority for the Secretary of Defense to implement such agreements.

Second, the bill earmarks $200 million in research and development funding which can only be spent as part of cooperative development projects with one or more of our NATO allies. In addition, the bill earmarks $50 million for the acquisition of certain items manufactured by other member nations of NATO for side-by-side testing with comparable U.S.-manufactured items.

ECONOMY AND EFFICIENCY MEASURES

The conferees adopted a number of measures that sought to eliminate congressionally imposed impediments to the efficient management of our defense program. These changes will enable us to attain more security for our defense dollar, and it is my hope that this is just the beginning of our efforts to eliminate these impediments. Senator GRAMM will describe these provisions in greater detail in his statement. I would simply like to highlight these provisions, and commend my colleague from Texas for his strong leadership on these issues.

BASE CLOSURES

The conferees report includes a provision that will expedite the procedures by which the Secretary of Defense can close nonessential military bases. The closure of these nonessential bases will save American taxpayers millions of dollars each year.

CONTRACTING OUT

The conferees agreed to direct that the Department of Defense contract out for the performance of services and activities when it is determined, in accordance with law, that such performance is cost-effective and in the interests of our national defense. Additionally, the conferees agreed to raise the thresholds for cost comparison and economic impact studies associated with decisions to contract out in order to permit the Department to reach decisions on this issue in a more efficient manner.

WALSH-HEALY

In the Walsh-Healey and Contract Work Hours and Safety Standards Acts provisions, the conferees agreed to accept Senate bill S. 1105 as a substitute. The resulting provisions on flextime and overtime charges will apply to all Federal contractor employees, not just to those associated with the Department of Defense. The amendment will become effective on January 1, 1986.

MONRONEY

In resolving the Monroney Act differences between the two bills, the conferees accepted the Senate provisions without amendment. These provisions will prohibit the establishment of pay rates for prevailing rate employees of the Department of Defense using surveys of wages paid outside the local wage area. This change would become effective on October 1, 1985, and it will only affect new employees. Current employee wages will not be reduced by this amendment.

Together, the Walsh-Healy and Monroney Act provisions will save the American taxpayer approximately $500 million in the coming fiscal year, and further savings in the years ahead.

Mr. President, that completes my report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague, the distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee, Mr. GOLDWATER, in bringing the conference report on S. 1160, the Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1986 to the floor.

The conference on this bill was long, arduous, and covered many difficult issues.

I have been in a lot of conferences in the last 12 years, Mr. President, and I think this one was the most difficult in terms of substance, but it was the most diligent in terms of hard work and schedule. I think an awful lot of that is attributable to our chairman of the committee, Mr. GOLDWATER. He did a tremendous job.

There were approximately 1,350 differences between the House and Senate bills which the conferees had to resolve—1,000 dollar or funding differences and another 350 differences in language. The conferees met 14 different times over the last 2 weeks, and many of the meetings went late into the evening.

The spirit of compromise and cooperation which allowed the conference to complete its work is a tribute to the leadership of Chairman GOLDWATER of our committee and Chairman ASPIN and Representative DICKINSON of the House Armed Services Committee. This was the first conference for Senator GOLDWATER and Representative ASPIN as chairmen of their respective committees.

If it had not been for the work they did and also for Representative DICKINSON, we could have been on this conference for several months. As a matter of fact, for a long time, I thought we would be. Both Chairman GOLDWATER and Chairman ASPIN did an outstanding job in keeping the conference on an even keel and in establishing the frame work and procedures to resolve the knotty issues.

I want to add a personal note of thanks to the Senator from Arizona both for his service in the conference and for his work during the consideration of this bill on the floor and during the consideration of this bill in the committee. As he has already stated, we approached this with a bipartisan cooperative spirit and it could not have been done without Chairman GOLDWATER. He is frank, he is candid, he is knowledgeable, he has wisdom in these issues, and he has years of experience. Without his leadership, we indeed would not be here today with this conference report. The Senate and the Nation as a whole are fortunate—in fact, they are indeed fortunate, all of us are—to have a man of his wisdom and experience serving as chairman of the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona has outlined the details of the conference agreement, and I won't repeat what he has said. I would just like to highlight the resolution of what I consider some of the more important issues before the conference which will have a major policy impact.

TWO-YEAR BUDGET

In my judgment, one of the key decisions of the conference was the adoption of the Senate provision requiring DOD to shift to a 2-year budget cycle beginning in fiscal year 1988.

This will be a very profound change. It is a change, in my opinion, that is long overdue. All of us who deal with this bill each year are aware that the burdens of the annual budget process have become too cumbersome for Congress and also too cumbersome for the Department of Defense. Virtually all aspects of the defense budget are now subject to annual authorizations. There are nearly 2,000 procurement programs and over a thousand research and development programs. Reviewing each in detail every year is proving more and more time-consuming and unnecessary and, in my opinion, unworkable.

More important, however, by using its time to review virtually every line item in the budget, both the Congress and the Department forgo opportunities to focus on the more fundamental issues of defense policy: the establishment of national priorities and the broad allocation of defense resources toward those priorities.

We are not able to get to fundamental questions like defense strategy and defense reorganization because we are too bogged down in the details. If you take the multiplier effect for the amount of time we spend in Congress, there are literally thousands of man-years going in from the Department of Defense. So I believe this is a fundamental reform which I am hopeful the Defense Department will embrace with enthusiasm. This provision gives them 2 years to do so. It phases in this process in an orderly way.

The conference committee adopted the Senate provision which I sponsored that would require the Secretary of Defense to submit a 2-year Defense budget to the Congress for fiscal year 1988 and fiscal year 1989 at the beginning of the 100th Congress. This provision recognizes that it will not be possible to move to a 2-year budget without adequate planning and preparation. For this reason, the provision, first, expresses the sense of the Congress that, beginning in fiscal year 1988, Congress should adopt 2-year Defense budgets; second, requires the President to submit a 2-year budget, beginning in fiscal year 1988; and third, directs the Secretary of Defense to provide a report, by April 1, 1986, on the implications of moving to a 2-year budget cycle for the Defense Department. The Secretary is encouraged to develop recommendations on needed changes in current procedures and statutes in order to implement a 2-year budget process.

Mr. President, last November, Chairman GOLDWATER and I wrote the Secretary of Defense and asked that he submit a 2-year budget for fiscal year 1986. In all fairness to Secretary Weinberger, our request was made too late in the budget preparation process to be carried out this year.

The provision adopted by the conference puts the Defense Department on notice that Congress expects the Defense Department to submit a complete 2-year budget in calendar year 1987 for fiscal year 1988 and fiscal year 1989. This will begin that process in the new Congress.

NATO

I am pleased that the conferees agreed to a provision to enhance the Defense Department's ability to enter into NATO cooperative projects for research, development and production of defense equipment. The provision provides authority for the President to enter into agreements with other NATO countries for cooperative agreements, and provides authority for the Secretary of Defense to implement such agreements.

This provision will provide an important companion to the amendment on NATO cooperative research and development which Senators ROTH, GLENN, WARNER, and I sponsored in the Senate. This amendment sets aside $200 million for new cooperative research and development projects with one or more of our NATO allies. It further encourages more side-by-side testing of European-manufactured systems when comparable U.S. systems reach the operational test and evaluation phase.

These provisions were incorporated in the conference report, and I think are among the most important in terms of our alliance.

STRATEGIC PROGRAMS

On the MX missile, I think the conference reached a sensible, bipartisan compromise that will hopefully keep us from having to revisit this issue every year. The chairman has already gone into that. The conference agreement establishes a cap in permanent law on the deployment of MX missiles in existing Minuteman silos at 50. The conferees limited the acquisition of MX missiles beyond 50 to those required for test purposes only. The conferees also agreed to the production of 12 MX missiles in fiscal year 1986 and recommended that from 12-21 missiles be produced in fiscal year 1987.

If the President proposed and the Congress approved a new basing mode, more than 50 MX missiles could be deployed. But for now, the signal is clear: No more survivable basing mode, no more MX's.

The conference agreement authorizes $2,750 million for the strategic defense initiative, a reduction of $1 billion from the President's original budget request. This funding level represents an even split between the $2,972 million authorized by the Senate and the $2,500 million authorized by the House. The conferees left the allocation of funds within the SDI Program to the discretion of the program director. While I support the overall level of funding for the SDI program, I continue to be concerned about the pace and direction of the program.

On the advanced technology bomber [ATB] and the advanced cruise missile [ACM], I am pleased to report that the conference agreement fully authorizes the amount requested in the budget for the advanced technology bomber [ATB] and the advanced cruise missile [ACM], which was the Senate position. The amendments by Senator BYRD requiring all funds appropriated for those two programs to be fully used only on these programs and by Senator KENNEDY prohibiting the expenditure of funds for more than 100 B-1B bombers helped us convince the House conferees that the Senate strongly supported these programs. Both of these amendments were included in the conference agreement as well. These programs will be the cutting edge of our strategic deterrent and will provide great technological and economic leverage on the Soviets, in my opinion, both militarily and in arms control.

ASAT

On the antisatellite [ASAT] issue, the conference report provides for a "dual track" approach, balancing our need to eliminate the Soviets' monopoly in this weapons category with our interest in promoting a forward-looking U.S. ASAT arms control posture. Under the compromise approved by the conferees, the first tests against objects in space of the U.S. F-15/miniature homing vehicle [MSV] can be conducted, but only if the President submits the arms control certification required under current law. Three such tests are permitted between now and the end of fiscal year 1986. By restricting the number of tests that can be conducted, the conferees hope to give our arms control negotiators more time to achieve an agreement limiting or otherwise restricting ASAT systems.

On the very important question of chemical munitions, I hope the House will see the wisdom of the conference report, which, indeed, was a compromise between the House and the Senate. The binary chemicals munitions issue was one of the most important and difficult issues addressed by the conference committee. After more than a week of protracted negotiations, the Senate conferees led by Senator GLENN and Senator COHEN persuaded their House colleagues that NATO could not be given a veto power over a major U.S. defense program of this importance. The conferees agreed, however, that if we were not going to insist that binary chemical munitions had to be stored in peacetime in Europe, there must at least be a guarantee that the munitions could be deployed to Europe in a contingency.

The conference report prohibits the establishment of production facilities for binary munitions, as well as any long-lead procurement or assembly, until the President certifies that the United States, in cooperation with SACEUR, has developed a plan to deploy these munitions to Europe under appropriate contingency plans and that the allies have been consulted on that plan. The report also expresses the sense of the Congress that existing chemical weapons stocks in Europe should be replaced with binary munitions, but this language is nonbinding.

In virtually every other respect, the Senate receded to the House-passed restrictions on the binary program. These include a ban on final assembly prior to October 1, 1987 and conditions relating to arms control, storage, transportation, testing, performance specifications, safety and the accelerated destruction of the existing U.S. stockpile of unitary chemical munitions.

In my judgment, the lack of an adequate chemical capability is one of the Achilles' heels of NATO defenses. I urge my Senate colleagues and the Members of the House to support this compromise.

CONVENTIONAL PROGRAMS

Mr. President, it is important to note that even though this conference report provides no real growth in defense spending for fiscal year 1986 except inflation, there are significant increases in the quantities of weapons authorized for conventional procurement. This bill authorizes 18 percent more combat and support aircraft than last year, 44 percent more missiles, torpedoes, and mines than last year, and 19 percent more tracked combat vehicles than in fiscal year 1985.

One of the reasons for this is the discovery of additional funds during the course of the process in the Defense Department. Another reason was some initiatives taken in terms of retirement and others that saved considerable amounts of money.

We gave priority to retaining the highest production rates possible and sustaining procurement of improved conventional munitions. In fact, we bought more aircraft and more munitions than were originally requested by the administration in their original budget request that grew by 5.6 percent over inflation. I ask unanimous consent that summary information on major procurement programs be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my statement.

Mr. NUNN. My colleagues may ask how we can buy more than was requested while reducing the budget request by $19.6 billion? Nearly half of the $7.6 billion reduction in procurement recommended by the conferees was accomplished through financing adjustments. The administration's discovery of $4 billion in savings figured prominently in this.

We are pleased that there are substantial cost savings occurring in DOD. Credit must go to Secretary Weinberger and the services for cost reductions. But these savings and the method in which they were discovered have raised credibility problems over DOD's accounting practices. The Armed Services Committee intends to scrutinize these practices, and especially the methods used by DOD to budget for inflation.

While I am the first among my colleagues to argue that we should cut unnecessary funds before we cut required programs, the picture that emerges from conference is a mixed one. This year, the two Armed Services Committees had made recommendations to terminate a number of systems. The House was more aggressive in this regard than was the Senate. It was unprecedented to find a total of 12 major programs recommended for termination in one of the two bills. Mr. President, following is a list of major programs recommended for termination in either of the bills taken to conference:

TABLE 5.—PROGRAMS RECOMMENDED FOR TERMINATION BY THE HOUSE AND SENATE IN FISCAL YEAR 1986

H.R. 1872	S. 1160
P-3 ASW Patrol Aircraft	SH-2 ASW helicopter
E-6 radio relay aircraft	Field Artillery Support Veh.
AMRAAM air-to-air missile	C-12 utility aircraft
MC-130 special operations aircraft	9mm handguns
Joint Tactical Information Distribution System.
RAM surface-to-air missile
Joint Surveillance Target Attack System [JSTARS].
Link Spruce

Mr. President, every one of these programs was restored in conference, although some were continued with certain restrictions. Let me state that there is substantial merit in each system. I don't question that on a case-by-case basis, the conference made the right decision to continue these programs.

At the same time, the conference took action on several major new starts contained in the fiscal year 1986 budget request. In the research and development accounts, the conference funded five major new start programs that cost only $1.3 billion this year, but which will cost between $150 to $200 billion over the next 10 years. Again, Mr. President, I have for the RECORD at this point a list of the five major new starts I am referring to:

TABLE 6.—FIVE MAJOR NEW STARTS IN FISCAL YEAR 1986 AUTHORIZATION

	Fiscal year 1986 funds (millions)	Projected costs (billions)
LXH [future Army helicopter]	$125	$40
Advanced tactical fighter [AF]	170	15 to 50
Advanced tactical aircraft [N]	6	35 to 40
JVX [V-22 N/MC "tilt-rotor" aircraft]	583	23
C-17 AF transport	383	37
Total (billion)	1.267	150 to 195

These five programs represent a very large mortgage on our future at a time when we are continuing current programs, many at inefficient rates. This may have been acceptable if the budget were going to grow every year by 5 percent, but we are likely to face an optimistic ceiling of 3 percent real growth and possibly no growth over the next 5 years. We must have a better understanding of the affordability of these programs. That is why I sponsored an amendment during Senate consideration of the defense authorization bill requiring the Department of Defense to submit two modified 5-year defense plans, one at 3 percent real growth and the second at zero real growth. I am pleased that the conference agreement includes this provision; we must have this information in order to determine the affordability of the major new starts and the impacts of a constrained budget on DOD priorities.

That is why I consider the action by the conference to restore funding for the 12 terminated programs to be a mixed picture. I have no doubt that in the unique circumstances that accompanied these programs the conference made the right decision to continue all of them. In the greater picture, however, I doubt the conference made the right choice. There are two truisms that emerge from this: Congress can't terminate programs, and DOD can't resist starting new ones.

We are going to have to do both—terminate marginal programs and resist starting new ones—if we are to have a strong, stable, and affordable defense program in the future.

In the important area of operations and maintenance, the conference agreement includes reductions of approximately $4.2 billion, offset by a restoration of $1 billion to restore the funds taken out of the budget by OMB for the 5-percent reduction in Federal civilian pay originally proposed for fiscal year 1986.

A large part of the savings in the O&M area, Mr. President, were in the area of financing adjustments—lower anticipated inflation, lower fuel prices, and improvements in foreign currency exchange rates based on the continuing strength of the U.S. dollar overseas. The experience of the past several years strongly suggests that these financing savings can be made without any impact on the programs funded in the O&M accounts.

In fact, I think it is important to note what O&M programs were not cut to meet the conference committee's zero real growth target. The conference agreement does not make any reductions to the operating tempos—flying hours, steaming time, or field training exercises—requested by the services. The conference agreement even includes small increases above the budget request for depot maintenance and for real property maintenance. In other words, I think the conference agreement does a good job of meeting our budget target without cutting any important readiness programs funded in the O&M accounts. Senators DIXON and HUMPHREY deserve great credit for this achievement.

PERSONNEL

The most far-reaching action taken by the conferees in the military manpower area is the provision designed to initiate a major restructuring and reform of the military personnel management and compensation system, particularly the military retirement system.

Both the House and Senate bills reduced the funding available to the military services for payment of basic pay and the military retirement accrual changes in fiscal year 1986.

The conference agreement reduces this funding by $2.9 billion in fiscal year 1986, which is the midpoint between the House reduction of $4 billion and the Senate reduction of $1.8 billion. The conferees directed the Secretary of Defense to submit two legislative proposals to the House and Senate Armed Services Committees by September 15, 1985, to achieve this level of savings. One of these proposals must achieve the $2.9 billion in savings through changes other than changes to the current cost-of-living allowance formula.

It is very important that this provision be understood by our military men and women in service today.

The conferees directed the Defense Department to indicate what changes they would propose to achieve a range of savings in military retirement costs from $1.8 billion up to $5.4 billion in fiscal year 1986. The Department was directed to report on the recruiting and retention impact of the five different levels of savings suggested by the conferees within this range.

Mr. President, an important part of this initiative in both the House and Senate bills was the pledge that structural changes in the military retirement system will not include changes to the retirement system for personnel currently on active duty or retired. The conferees reiterated this pledge.

I think it is very important that that be understood by our military personnel who are serving and have already served our Nation and are retired.

I strongly support the conference agreement in this area. A comprehensive review and reform of the military retirement system is long overdue and I look forward to working with Senators GLENN, WILSON, and the other members of the Manpower and Personnel Subcommittee on this effort in the coming months.

The conference agreement also includes a series of provisions in the House bill making a number of important changes to the survivor benefit plan [SBP]. These changes are designed to simplify the program so that potential participants will have a better understanding of the benefits available to their survivors. The changes also include several important reforms, such as requiring spousal concurrence if a military retiree wants to elect participation in the SBP at anything less than the maximum level.

DEFENSE ACQUISITION POLICY

Both the House and Senate bills contained a number of provisions dealing with defense acquisition policy, some of them very far reaching. The conferees assigned these issues to a special panel of the conference, headed up on our side by Senators LEVIN and QUAYLE. Some of the issues in this area were debated and negotiated over the entire 2 weeks of the conference and were only resolved at the end of the conference.

The most difficult issue in this area concerned the so-called revolving door provisions in both bills. The conference agreement adopts the entire Senate formulation requiring a defense employee performing a procurement function to disqualify himself or herself from further activity with a defense contractor when there are contacts regarding post-governmental service employment with that contractor. However, for any Presidential appointee who acts as a primary Government representative negotiating a contract or contract settlement, there is a 2-year ban on accepting employment with the contractor with whom those negotiations were held.

In addition, the present law requiring former Department of Defense employees to report to the Department on the nature of certain post-employment activities has been substantially strengthened. An administrative penalty for failing to file the required reports in a timely manner has been added so as to increase the likelihood of compliance and enforcement.

Both the Senate and House bills included provisions regarding the allowability of certain costs incurred by contractors and submitted to the Government for reimbursement. Under the conference agreement, 10 categories of costs identified in the statute will be unallowable on most defense contracts. The Secretary of Defense is given the responsibility to implement this section by regulation, which may establish appropriate definitions, exclusions, limitations, and qualifications.

The Secretary is also required to identify with greater specificity and clarity whether an additional 16 categories of costs will be unallowable on defense contracts.

If the Secretary determines by clear and convincing evidence that cost submitted by a contractor are unallowable under the costs principles governing defense contracts, the contractor's cost shall be disallowed and a penalty equal to the amount of the disallowed cost, plus interest, shall be assessed. If a contractor submits a request for the reimbursement of costs which have been previously determined to be unallowable, the contractor's cost shall be disallowed and a penalty of not more than two times the amount of the unallowable cost shall be imposed.

Finally, the conference agreement requires contractors to certify, under penalty of perjury, that to the best of their knowledge and belief all indirect costs included in a cost settlement proposal are allowable under the statute and regulations.

Both the Senate and House bills included provisions to expand the use of dual sources for major systems in the Department of Defense. Under the conference agreement, the Secretary of Defense is required to prepare an acquisition strategy for each major system that generally provides for competitive alternative sources to be available for the entire period from full-scale development through the end of production. This requirement for dual sourcing is satisfied if the alternative systems, developed or produced, serve similar functions and compete effectively with each other.

Mr. President, I remain concerned about the problems we have in the defense acquisition process as well as the overall complexity of this process. I am also becoming concerned, however, that Congress is adding to these problems by increasing the amount of statutory requirements and DOD regulations in dealing with contractors.

I think we have put so many things in the statutory and regulatory checklist that we have left out the all important ingredient called common sense. I think we have taken away flexibility and authority, not in this bill but the cumulative effect of many different laws over the years.

I constantly come to the unpleasant conclusion that today's problems were perhaps yesterday's solutions. I hope that tomorrow's problems are not today's solutions, but I have to be marked down as rather skeptical in this area. I would like to find a few pilot projects and converse with the chairman on this next year where we could waive most if not all procurement regulations and see how our managers can do if we simply tell them to use good management and common sense on a few programs. I have not found those pilot programs yet but I would like to ask my chairman to help in that general approach during the next 12 months.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

The conference dealt with a broad range of policy issues included as general provisions in the two bills.

On the question of the use of the polygraph in the Department of Defense, the conferees agreed that the polygraph was a useful tool in counterintelligence investigations. The conferees also agreed that the Department of Defense should proceed slowly in this area until we had some experience with the use of the polygraph and until the Department took other measures to improve personnel security practices such as reducing the number of people with clearances and reducing the backlog in periodic reinvestigations.

The conferees agreed to create a temporary authority for the Secretary of Defense to conduct a polygraph program which includes mandatory polygraphs for persons in the Department of Defense and Defense contractors with access to special access programs and information classified at the "top secret" level. However, no more than 3,500 mandatory polygraphs can be conducted under this program in fiscal year 1986. Up to 7,000 will be permitted in fiscal year 1987. In addition, a series of reports are required on the conduct of this program. I expect that Congress will revisit this issue in the fiscal year 1988 authorization bill to determine whether the polygraph program in the Department of Defense should be continued, and if so under what rules.

The House bill included a provision barring the introduction of U.S. Armed Forces into or over Nicaragua for combat except in certain specified circumstances. The conferees were concerned that this provision may be an unconstitutional restraint on the President's powers of Commander in Chief, and questioned whether it was wise to list in law those circumstances when the United States would use force and when we would not. Finally, they were concerned about the consistency of any such legislation with the War Powers Resolution.

As a result, the conferees agreed on a sense of Congress provision that the President should not introduce U.S. Armed Forces into or over Nicaragua for combat and providing that nothing in the provision should be construed as affecting the authority and responsibility of the President or Congress under the Constitution, statutes, or treaties of the United States.

Another issue in which many members have been interested is the extent to which the Armed Forces can be used to enhance the enforcement of our drug laws and to interdict illegal drug shipments into the United States. The conference adopted several measures which will assist in this important effort. I think it is important to highlight the fact that we did not give the power of arrest to the military. That was debated long and hard, but it lieu thereof I think we put in a much more effective provision that will go I believe a long way toward helping combat drug traffic in the oceans and the surrounding areas of our territorial waters. What we did was to authorize 500 additional personnel for the U.S. Coast Guard for stationing on U.S. naval vessels in waters where drug interdiction is a possibility. These Coast Guard members would then be available to conduct arrests and searches and seizures of drug smugglers, operating from the naval vessel. The important part of this, when it is implemented, is that any drug smuggler looking at any Navy ship will have to believe that that ship has the power, with the Coast Guard personnel on board, to search and seize and arrest if necessary. I think that will serve as an additional deterrent in this very important area.

The Bennett amendment in the House bill would have permitted members of the Armed Forces to make arrests and conduct searches and seizures outside the land area of the United States. However, the conferees believe that the longstanding policy of the United States that Armed Forces not be used to enforce civil laws, as established in the Posse Comitatus Act, should be respected. We concluded that the best solution was to increase the number of Coast Guard personnel available to work on Navy vessels to conduct arrests. Other provisions in the conference report will increase surveillance and interdiction of illicit drug traffickers by Active and Reserve Forces of the United States.

The Senate bill included three provisions affecting labor costs in the Department of Defense. The conferees agreed to drop the Senate provision amending the Davis-Bacon Act and raising its threshold of applicability to DOD contracts. The conference report includes the Senate provision amending the so-called Monroney amendment which provides a wage-adjustment mechanism for DOD wage-scale employees. Finally, the conferees have agreed to incorporate reforms to the Walsh-Healy Act regarding overtime pay for Federal contracts which were recently reported favorably by the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee.

The Senate bill included a provision granting the Secretary of Defense

broad authority to close or realign military installations, and authorized $1 billion for this purpose. The conference report does not contain these Senate provisions. However, the conferees have agreed to streamline the procedural requirements with which the Department must comply when it determines to close or realign a military installation.

Finally, the Senate conferees accepted a provision in the House bill which creates a new article in the Uniform Code of Military Justice making espionage in peacetime a capital offense. In addition, standards are included in the article for the imposition of the death penalty.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, this is a massive bill. The statement of managers is over 600 type-written pages, and the bill itself is over 500 type-written pages. So clearly it will be some time before one can give a complete and thorough analysis of all of the provisions and their implications.

It is not too early to talk about the challenges that still remain even with the work this bill represents. I think all of us realize that it is very unlikely that we will ever realize the real growth in defense spending that the Pentagon's current 5-year defense plan represents. I believe we must face up to the growing prospect that defense spending has not only leveled off after years of growth, but could very well stay at basically a no-growth pattern until Congress and the American public are convinced that the deficit is being reined in and that increased defense spending is closing the gap between our strategy and our capabilities.

I must add my voice to those who expressed disappointment—I am sure we have heard from colleagues on both sides of this—with the President's position on the compromise plan that was presented by the leaders of our Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI and Senator CHILES and Members on both sides of the aisle.

I believe that this strikes a blow against the hope that many of us had for meaningful and credible deficit reduction this year. I must say that the longer the President avoids the leadership responsibilities—and I must add the leadership of Congress—in this important deficit reduction area the more difficult the job is going to be in the future. In my opinion this does not bode well for our national security and for our defense budgets in the future. I know there are many different views as to the provisions of that compromise, but I had the view, viewing it from a distance and not having been involved with it, that it was our best and perhaps final hope for a credible package this year. Again, I emphasize that we are not going to be able to sustain the momentum in the defense program as long as we have $180 billion to $200 billion deficits and I see nothing now which indicates that we are going to come to grips with that problem in the budget process in a meaningful way this year, so that is not good news for defense.

Earlier this year I suggested that in approaching the defense bill with a new realism about projected growth, there were a number of things we can do to avoid major damage to our national security down the road:

We can develop realistic criteria against which we can judge progress or lack thereof in meeting defense requirements;

We can change our military strategy to one based on realistic resources;

We can refocus the debate on defense spending from input to output;

We can cap the MX deployment in vulnerable Minuteman silos;

We can restrain the administration's request for SDI funding to a more prudent and affordable level;

We can devise a system in which the Department of Defense maximizes existing production rates and balances this with new starts;

We can and must insist that our allies shoulder a greater share of the common defense burden;

We can carefully think through whether existing agreements on strategic offensive arms can continue to serve our national security interests while contributing to the attainment of a more comprehensive and significant arms reduction agreement in the new negotiations on nuclear and space arms; and

We can carry out long overdue and badly needed reforms in the structure of the military services and the entire Defense Department.

Mr. President, we did not try to address all of these areas in this bill; we couldn't even if we had wanted to.

But this bill makes progress in addressing at least some of these issues. The conference agreement caps the MX deployment in vulnerable Minuteman silos, for example, and restrains the growth in the SDI program.

In other areas, however, such as maximizing the production rate of Defense programs and balancing current programs with new starts, this conference report is less successful.

I look forward to continuing to address these problems and challenges with my colleagues on the Armed Services Committee in the coming months. The committee is preparing to spend the next several months developing legislation to reform the structure of the military services and the entire Department of Defense.

In closing, Mr. President, I want to add a personal note of thanks to the Senator from Arizona for his service in this difficult conference. Senator GOLDWATER is without peer in this body in his knowledge and grasp of the entire range of issues affecting our national security. The Senate and the Nation are indeed fortunate to have a man of his wisdom and experience serving as chairman of the Armed Services Committee.

I also want to thank all of the members of our committee for their diligent work in this conference and throughout the year in bringing us to the point of passing this conference report. I want to particularly note the outstanding leadership of Senator WARNER and Senator HART on the Strategic Subcommittee; of Chairman GOLDWATER and Senator KENNEDY on tactical issues; of Senator COHEN and Senator EXON on the Seapower and Force Projection Subcommittee; of Senator WILSON and Senator GLENN on the Manpower and Personnel Subcommittee; of Senator HUMPHREY and Senator DIXON on the Preparedness Subcommittee; and of Senator THURMOND and Senator BINGAMAN on the Military Construction Subcommittee. The leaders of our new Defense Acquisition Subcommittee, Senator QUAYLE and Senator LEVIN, deserve a special commendation for their work in a very difficult and controversial area.

I also want to thank the staffs of both the House and Senate Armed Services Committees for their untiring and professional efforts. Led by Kim Wincup and Al Chase in the House and Jim McGovern and Arnold Punaro in the Senate, the staffs of the Armed Services committee provide superb support year round. I want to particularly thank our Democratic staff, Bill Hoehn, Jeff Smith, David Lyles, John Hamre, Bob Bell, Patty Watson, Russell Miller, Colleen Getz, Kathy Bognivitz, Shelly Turney, Pam Powell, and Monica Chavez for their work on this bill and throughout the year. I want to add a special note of thanks to Hugh Evans of the Senate legislative counsel and Bob Cover of the House for their support in writing the bill. Hugh and Bob have been doing this work for committees as far back as I can remember and they do a superb and extremely professional job.

Mr. President, this conference report represents the culmination of a great deal of hard work by many Senators. I urge my colleagues to support it.

Again I want to thank my colleague and friend from the State of Arizona for his superb, outstanding leadership and all the members of the committee for their splendid cooperation.

I also want to emphasize that Chairman ASPIN on the House side, as chairman of the conference, I think did an outstanding job in guiding this conference, in cooperation with Senator GOLDWATER. The two worked together in a splended fashion over very many difficult issues and I congratulate them both for their leadership.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I thank my friend from Georgia for his very overly kind remarks and assure him that the two of us will get together in the coming months to try to work out something, not just to help procurement but to do what we can to help get the whole defense matter straightened out. It has been since probably 1958—and we can go back to 1922—that the Congress has last exercised its constitutional mandate to oversee the military.

As a result, the military of our country needs help—not just the Joint Chiefs, not just the Secretary of Defense, not just the individual services; but it is time that Congress devotes time to helping them.

I can assure my friend from Georgia that they are aware of this. They have already made some great strides. I think we have seen the end of $600 toilet seats and $2,000 screwdrivers and the other foolishness that we put up with.

I assure my friend from Georgia that I am going to stand ready at any time to help him, and the two of us will try to help everybody else in uniform achieve that goal.

Mr. NUNN. I thank the Senator from Arizona. I assure him that the feeling is mutual, and he will have my total cooperation toward those ends.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, the conference report that we are considering today reflects several months of detailed analysis by the Senate and the House, and represents a bipartisan consensus for a strong national defense. The conference agreement approves approximately $302.5 billion for defense. This is a reduction of $19.7 billion from President Reagan's request for defense spending for fiscal year 1986.

The level of spending authorized in this bill provides no increase beyond inflation over defense spending for fiscal year 1985. The President's request contained real growth of 5.9 percent. Although the House-Senate conference on the fiscal year 1986 first concurrent budget resolution has not completed its work, the expected outcome for the national defense function is consistent with the funding level in the conference report presented to the Senate today.

Mr. President, all of my colleagues worked very hard to resolve nearly 1,400 differences in the two bills, and I would like to commend several of my colleagues for their singular efforts in completing the conference. The committee chairman and ranking member, Senators BARRY GOLDWATER and SAM NUNN, respectively, deserve special credit for their leadership and hard work throughout the conference. Senator GOLDWATER did an outstanding job during his first year as chairman of the Armed Services Committee. Senators BILL COHEN and JOHN GLENN helped resolve the issue of renewed production of chemical weapons which was one of the most controversial issues considered by the conference.

There were nearly 100 differences in the area of procurement reform that had to be reconciled, and Senators DAN QUAYLE and CARL LEVIN worked very long and diligently to resolve these highly complex procurement related issues. Senator PHIL GRAMM of Texas did an outstanding job advocating the Senate position regarding base closures and the repeal of certain provisions of the Davis-Bacon Act and the Walsh-Healey Act.

Senator WARNER worked diligently to resolve differences on the SDI and the MX missile.

Senator WILSON did a fine job resolving differences in personnel matters, especially military retirement.

Mr. President, the conference committee had to resolve $3.1 billion in differences in strategic programs; and while the cuts made by both Houses will have serious impact on certain programs, there is continued momentum in the administration's Strategic Modernization Program.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a summary of conference actions.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I. STRATEGIC MODERNIZATION

Binary Chemical Weapons.—The resumption of production of chemical weapons after a sixteen year moratorium is recommended by the conference committee. Funds were approved with certain conditions. The President must first certify that a plan exists to deploy binary munitions under various contingency plans to deter chemical attack against our forces and that the President has consulted with our NATO allies for any deployments involving NATO. Second, funds for final assembly of binary munitions components is fenced until October 1, 1985. After that date, final assembly can take place only if there has been no intervening verifiable international agreement on chemical weapons and the President further certifies that it is vital to our security and that binary weapons will meet safety and performance specifications.

Peacekeeper Missile (MX).—The conference committee approved the procurement of 12 missiles during fiscal year 1986 with statutory language limiting the deployment of MX missiles in existing Minuteman silos to 50. More than 50 missiles could be deployed, however, if the President requests and the Congress approves a survivable basing mode for the MX.

Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI).—The President requested approximately $3.7 billion for SDI. The conferees approved a total of $2.75 billion for fiscal year 1986 which provides 100% real growth over the fiscal year 1985 level for SDI. The House bill had specified reductions in the SDI account in each of the five major program elements. The Senate bill left the allocation of resources to the discretion of the program manager which was also the position adopted by the conference committee.

Small Mobile ICBM (Midgetman).—The House bill added $150 million to the Administration's request for the Midgetman program whereas the Senate bill funded the program at the requested level. The conferees agreed to an additional $100 million above the Administration request in an effort to reduce risk, work on advanced propulsion and work on alternative guidance systems. The total authorized for the program is $724 million.

II. TACTICAL WARFARE PROGRAMS

Army Programs

M-1 Tank (Abrams Tank).—The conference committee approved funds for 840 M-1 tanks for fiscal year 1986 and advance procurement funds for 840 M-1 tanks in fiscal year 1987.

Division Air Defense Gun (DIVAD or Sergeant York).—This program has been plagued by testing problems. Therefore the conferees fenced funds for 72 DIVAD guns pending successful testing that must demonstrate that the gun can meet system specifications.

AH-64 Attack Helicopter (Apache).—The Administration requested 144 Apache helicopter for fiscal year 1986. This request was approved with the provision that 18 helicopters go to the Army National Guard.

Navy Programs

Ship Construction.—The conferees approved $10 billion for the construction of 23 new ships and the conversion of four ships for fiscal year 1986. These ships include three Aegis cruisers, one Trident submarine, four Los Angeles class attack submarines and the reactivation of the battleship Wisconsin.

Anti-submarine Warfare (ASW) Aircraft.—The Administration requested nine P-3C Orion ASW aircraft for fiscal year 1986. The Senate bill approved this request. The House bill denied the request. The Conferees agreed to approve funds for up to nine new P-3Cs. The Navy has the authority, however, to use $120 million of these procurement funds to modify inservice aircraft. The conferees also approved 24 LAMPS Mark III helicopters and six LAMPS Mark I helicopters. The six LAMPS Mark I helicopters will serve as ASW assets for Naval Reserve.

Air Force Programs

Advanced Medium Range Air-to-Air Missile (AMRAAM).—The House bill provided no funds for AMRAAM while the Senate bill authorized $150 million for procurement in fiscal year 1986 and $30 million in advanced procurement for fiscal year 1987. The conference committee agreed to provide $150 million for procurement and directed that a second source be qualified to promote competition. None of the funds can be spent until the Secretary of Defense certifies that all 17,000 missiles can be bought for $5.2 billion in constant 1984 dollars. The conferees took these steps because of their concern about cost growth in the program.

Fighter Competition.—The House bill directed the Secretary of the Air Force to compete the purchase of F-16 aircraft for fiscal year 1986 against the F-20. The Senate bill contained no such provision. The conference committee directed that a competition be conducted among all suitable aircraft rather than limiting it to just the F-16 and F-20.

Guard and Reserve Initiatives.—The conferees agreed upon several measures to modernize our Guard and Reserve forces. Funds were approved to buy 14 C-130H aircraft to replace 30 year old "A" model C-130s. Eight are designated for the Air National Guard and six for the Air Force Reserve. The Army National Guard will receive $100 million for unspecified equipment and $58 million for Chaparral air defense missile systems. The Naval Reserve will receive $45 million in unspecified equipment and $25 million for UH-60 helicopters. The Marine Corps will receive $60 million in unspecified equipment and $40 million to purchase tanker aircraft. The Air National Guard will also receive $30 million in unspecified equipment, six C-12J aircraft, and $12 million to modify three C-131 aircraft.

III. OPERATIONS AND MAINTENANCE

The Administration requested $82.5 billion for operations and maintenance. The conferees agreed to fund $79.3 billion of the request. The reductions in this area were made primarily through changes in inflation estimates. The conferees feel very strongly that these accounts should be funded on a priority basis. Accordingly, the funds provided allow increased flying hours for all services, increased steaming days for the Navy and increased battalion training days for the Army.

IV. MANPOWER AND PERSONNEL

The conferees approved an active duty end strength of 2,167,370 personnel which allows for 60% of the growth requested by the Administration. The Senate bill authorized a 3% pay raise effective October 1, 1985. The House bill had a similar provision that authorized a pay raise effective January 1, 1986. The House receded to the Senate on this provision. Additionally, the conferees directed the Department of Defense to submit proposals for changing military retirement. The changes recommended by the Department of Defense must provide for $2.9 billion savings in the retirement accrual account for fiscal year 1986. The conference committee reduced the authorization for appropriation for the retirement accrual charge by $2.9 billion. The conferees were explicit that all personnel on active duty prior to the enactment of any changes will be "grandfathered" under the present system.

V. BASE CLOSURES

The Senate bill provided streamlined provisions for the closure of unnecessary bases. The House had no similar provision. The conferees agreed to remove the requirement that the Secretary of Defense make public announcement of any intention to close a base. Now the Secretary of Defense will simply submit a base closure list with the annual budget submission. The requirement that the Secretary of Defense must comply with the National Environmental Policy Act in base closures has been removed. The Senate bill also provided that $1 billion be available for construction of new facilities in conjunction with base closures. Unfortunately, the Senate receded to the House on this provision.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I join the distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from Arizona, and the distinguished ranking minority member, the Senator from Georgia, and I express appreciation to all participants in the conference. They worked very effectively—as did Mr. ASPIN and his colleagues and the gentleman from Alabama—in reaching a resolution of difficult decisions.

I thank the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND] for his reference to the various members of the committee. Throughout the long negotiations, he was present by our side to give the senior type of advice that is indispensable in reaching a resolution of these issues.

I hope the Senate will accept the recommendations of the chairman and the ranking minority member and will accept this report.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, as the only freshman member of the Senate on the Arms Services Committee and in the conference, it was a great honor for me to have an opportunity to work on the conference with our chairman, BARRY GOLDWATER, a man whose book I read—"Conscience of a Conservative"—when I was in the 11th grade, and to serve with the distinguished Senator from Georgia.

I believe we have written an excellent conference report. There are clearly areas where the House prevailed that I would have preferred the Senate prevail. I think we have put together a sound program that, on balance, represents a good stewardship of the taxpayers' money.

I am especially proud of the progress we made in promoting competition, in undertaking procurement reform, in sweeping aside provisions of the law that had prevented the marketplace from functioning to the advantage of the taxpayer.

In this bill, we repeal the Walsh-Healey provisions that have imposed a rigid constraint on overtime payments which over the next 3 years, had that change not occurred, would have cost the taxpayers $1.8 billion. I am happy to say that we have repealed that provision here, not just for the Defense Department but for all Government as well.

We have repealed the so-called Monroney amendment, which is a provision of law that imposed noncompetitive wages.

We have undertaken extensive reform related to base closure.

We have included a very strong provision that clearly contains a mandate to shut down military bases that are operating inefficiently, that clearly seeks the Pentagon to evaluate every military facility in the country and determine whether or not it is required for the national security of the Nation. We set up a streamlined process whereby that evaluation can be undertaken.

We eliminate the old two-stage notification process to Congress of a proposed base closure and go to one stage.

We repealed section 10 of the United States Code, 2687, section (b)(2), which specifically required that the National Environmental Policy Act apply to base closings. Now it will be up to those who claim environmental concerns to justify that NEPA should apply to base closing. There will be no specific requirement in law that it apply.

Clearly, by this repeal we intend to put the burden of proof on those who claim environment impact from the closure of a military base. Our objective is promote economy and efficiency.

Finally, Mr. President, I am very proud of the reform we have undertaken relating to contracting out. I never cease to be amazed that there are those in Congress who claim that they want competitive bidding and they want efficiency, but they never apply competitive bidding from the private sector as it relates to the Government.

For the first time, by any law, we have a requirement that where a cost differential of at least 10 percent exists, it is the policy of the United States to contract out.

We lower the threshold for the expedited procedure from the current 10 employees affected, or smaller, to use the short form, to 40 employees or less. I think that is a substantial change.

So this conference report will be discussed in great detail as it is implemented. But we can say one thing that is very clear and it is that this conference is probably our strongest effort ever to run the Pentagon like a business and to get a good return for the taxpayer on the taxpayers' money as it relates to defense.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I want to respond to the statement of the Senator from Texas who pointed out that the conference agreement includes a provision repealing the Walsh-Healy Act requirement that Federal contractors pay time-and-a-half for work in excess of 8 hours a day. The Senator from Texas correctly pointed out that the conference agreement repeals this Walsh-Healy requirement for all Government contracts, not just those authorized by the DOD authorization bill. It is very important that the Senate understand the reason for adopting this Governmentwide change in the defense bill.

The Walsh-Healy language originally added to the Senate-passed bill, and the companion language which amended the Davis-Bacon Act as it applied to military construction contracts, violated Senate rule 15 and would have subjected the entire Defense bill to a point of order, but for an extraordinary procedure adopted by the majority in committee. It is absolutely clear that both measures fall within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Labor and Human Resources Committee here in the Senate.

More importantly, Davis-Bacon and Walsh-Healy fall within the jurisdiction of the Education and Labor Committee in the House, and for that reason, 10 House conferees from that committee participated in the Defense conference. Insistence by the majority that these labor provisions be included in the final conference deadlocked the conference and would have cost us a bill but for a last minute compromise. Under that compromise, all language in the Senate-passed bill relating to Davis-Bacon and Walsh-Healy was dropped. However, in order to ensure that we could enact a Defense bill, the House Labor Committee conferees agreed to accept Walsh-Healy language, which was, with one minor change, identical to that contained in S. 1105, which had been reported by the Senate Labor Committee on July 24. During consideration of the first budget resolution, both the House and Senate had voted to instruct the relevant committees of jurisdiction to report legislation affecting a Governmentwide change in Walsh-Healy. This action by both bodies persuaded the House conferees that agreeing to accept the Senate Labor Committee bill enabled them to preserve an important jurisdictional point regarding Walsh-Healy while at the same time, enabling us to reach agreement on the conference report. The House also insisted, and succeeded, in requiring the Senate to recede on the Davis-Bacon amendment.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I would like to congratulate the conferees for setting aside their differences and putting together a strong defense bill which I can support. The process of forging a consensus requires compromise, and in the interest of achieving a national consensus I am prepared to support this bill. But I would be shirking my responsibility to the residents of Maryland and the citizens of this country if I did not voice some of my reservations about this bill in the hope that we can get even better legislation in the future.

I am deeply concerned about the possibility that the strategic defense initiative program, as it is currently structured, contains the seed that could carry the arms race into space while simultaneously spurring on the arms competition here on Earth. There is no doubt that the United States must continue to vigorously investigate a range of ballistic missile defense technologies as a hedge against a Soviet breakout from the ABM Treaty. But the current SDI program goes far beyond what is needed to deter a Soviet breakout. Indeed, because of many of the legally questionable prototype experiments scheduled for the late 1980's and early 1990's—experiments that come suspiciously close to crossing the line between permitted research and forbidden development—the SDI program, in its existing form, may well precipitate the unraveling of the ABM Treaty.

That is basically why I cosponsored an earlier amendment to the DOD authorization bill that would have allowed vigorous SDI research to continue, but would have delayed some of the more legally dubious prototype experiments. That amendment was not adopted by the Senate and is not reflected in the conference.

I am also disappointed that two of my SDI amendments which passed the full Senate failed to survive the conference. These amendments called for studies to investigate the budgetary and economic impact of the projected SDI program. It seems only prudent that before we invest in what former Secretary of Defense Harold Brown has estimated may be over a trillion-dollar program, we should have a solid understanding of how this investment will affect our other spending priorities—in both the defense and nondefense areas. It is economic common sense that before we make an investment, we should examine the opportunity cost of that investment. Heavy investment into research for SDI may crowd out funds from more pressing research to enhance our conventional force capabilities, a subject in which the distinguished Senator from Georgia has exhibited great leadership and interest. Such heavy investments may also create a "brain drain" from the civilian sector to the military sector at a time when we need that talent to compete with stiff competition from abroad. A study of the economic impact of the SDI Program could help us avert these potential problems. Therefore, I urge Senators to keep these studies in mind and to authorize them at any early date.

But, while I am disappointed that these measures did not survive the conference, I am heartened that the conferees have endorsed an amendment reaffirming the Senate's committment to the ABM Treaty. This is an important statement and should serve as a future guide to the SDI decisions we make.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I really did not intend to come over and speak on this subject but I am frank to say that there are many things in the conference report that defy comprehension.

Some of them are very disturbing.

They put back funds for 37 R&D and procurement programs that have been cut either by the Senate or the House.

Put back? Why? I am not sure why. But I do know that the conference report stretches out procurements in order to give the illusion of a no-growth budget. And it is disturbing to me that every time in this body we try to make some headway—some reforms with reference to Defense Department procedures, spending practices, and procurement programs—we go backward.

The Current News which is a publication of the Department of the Air Force, part 2, main edition, Monday, July 29, reproduces a headline that reads, "Defense Conferees Gut House-passed Reforms."

That headline is from the Washington Times, which I am prepared to admit is not my favorite newspaper. But they did have it right yesterday when they talked about the fact that the defense conferees gutted the House-passed reforms. The article went on to say:

Amid much sound and fury, the Senate and House conferees working on the 1986 defense appropriations bill gutted many house-passed military procurement reforms.

Look at the July 29 edition of the Department of the Air Force's Current News and you'll find a quote from the Baltimore Sun, "Navy Fears Computers May Make It Prey to Thieves."

Then they have another quote from the Washington Post:

Pentagon Refuses to Furnish a Plane to Procurement Critic Representative Dingell.

And a quote from the New York Times:

Two Sergeants Convicted in Theft of Weapons.

Another story from the Baltimore Sun:

Defense Aide Faults Fraud Prosecution—Only 11 of 400 Cases End With Court Action.

Another quote from the Los Angeles Times of July 26.

GSA Rejects $79 Vacuum Cleaner; Opts for $348 Model. Navy Man Fired, Arbitrary Probe had Sought Less Expensive Units, but Was Overruled.

The American people know that the House and the Senate met in conference on the defense bill and that the administration was involved.

They know we are talking about balancing the budget.

They hear and read about these horror stories, and about wasteful Defense Department spending.

Yet, we see it going on and on and on.

We see that the Conference Committee report goes backward, not forward, on these issues.

Let me point out that the House bill prohibited Department of Defense contracting officers from taking jobs for a 2-year period after leaving the Government with firms with which they had negotiated or whose contracts they had supervised. That sounds like a good position.

Why should somebody who had been involved in negotiating with the Defense Department firm be in a position to go out into the private sector and take a job with that firm? So there was a prohibition in the House bill saying that those contracting officers could not take those jobs for a 2-year period after leaving the Government.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Will the Senator yield?

(At this point, Mr. EAST assumed the Chair.)

Mr. METZENBAUM. I will yield for a question.

Mr. GOLDWATER. The Senator is a little bit wrong. Our bill still says that.

Mr. METZENBAUM. No.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Yes. It does.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Well, if the Senator would be good enough to point that out to me, I think what your bill says and what you have done is you have limited—I will get to that in just a moment. But I might say to my friend from Arizona that if I am wrong, I will be very pleased to have him point it out to me because I will feel so good about it I will have no difficulty in accepting and admitting my error on the floor of the Senate. But at this moment, I do not believe that is the fact.

I believe that what the Senate has done is to back away from the strong House language in order to provide to contract officers what might be described as an enormous incentive to be nice to the defense contractors—to please the contractors. That is an incentive to represent themselves, and not the interests of the Government. I have to say to my colleagues from Arizona and Georgia, both of whom are men for whom I have the highest respect, why did we back off? Why did we turn our head away from that which the House had done? Let me give you one example:

A top Pentagon procurement official recently solicited business from major defense contractors for her post-Pentagon consulting business. We all read about that individual this week. She sent letters out saying she is going into the consulting business when she leaves the Government, which I think was absolutely outrageous on her part—I cannot believe that anyone in Government would send out letters soliciting business for when he or she leaves.

That individual may or may not be covered under the watered-down revolving door provisions approved by the conference.

She might be covered because she is a high-level political appointee. And the change was made to limit this prohibition only to high-level political appointees. She is the Deputy Under Secretary for Defense for Acquisition Management, and it very well may be that she was covered.

But the point is that it may not have covered her because it applies only to primary negotiators.

I do not know if she is or is not a primary negotiator.

The real question is why did we limit it to high-level political appointees? Why not make it applicable to everyone of those officers throughout the country who is on the firing line negotiating those cotracts? Why should they not be prohibited? What makes them so sacred that they should be exempt from this prohibition that the House put into their bill? I believe that our backing off the House provision is a symbol of our unwillingness today to address what is wrong with the DOD procurement system. It is a devastating blow to those who have worked so doggedly in and out of the Department of Defense to get for the taxpayers a fair return on their defense dollar.

Let me say at this point that there are not many people in the U.S. Senate who equal the concern of the Senator from Arizona for protecting the taxpayers' dollars in the field of defense spending.

My colleague from Arizona and I wrote an 8-page letter to the Department of Defense some years ago, spelling out some of our main concerns.

He and I went into court, sued the Navy for refusing to use competitive bidding in connection with the purchase of a plane. So I have great respect for the Senator.

But somehow or other, this Department of Defense conference report backs off strong House provisions on the revolving door. Those provisions really had some substance to them. The House language would have covered thousands and thousands of procurement officers throughout the country. Now we are going to take care of a few selected individuals, high-level political appointees.

This is not a political matter to me. I do not care what the politics are of the person who is negotiating. I am more concerned about the fact that the Government gets an honest dollar's worth of material for every dollar that we spend, that we not give away our money, that the people who are doing the negotiation have integrity, that they have the confidence of the American people behind them, and that they know those people who are making those contracts can be trusted and counted upon.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Will the Senator yield.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I yield.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I think the Senator will be interested to know that on the matter that the Senator from Ohio and I went to court, we finally won. After 15 years those airplanes now have to be purchased by contract.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I could not be more pleased than to hear that from my colleague from Arizona. It shows maybe with a little persistence and 5, 10, or 15 years in between, we are able to convince the Navy to mend its ways.

I wonder whether the chairman of the committee would be good enough to respond to a question? That question has to do with the fact that he had indicated at one point that the language does cover this issue and that there has not been a backing off.

Am I not correct that the conference report limits the applicability of this matter only to high level political appointees, or language to that effect, and that the broader language that the House had brought to the conference committee was eliminated?

Mr. GOLDWATER. The Senator is correct.

The language says, "Whoever being a Presidential appointee in Federal employment acts as a primary Government representative in the negotiation of Government contracts or the settlement thereof with a defense contractor shall not, within 2 years after the termination of said activities" and so forth and so on.

I was referring to the revolving door which was the most sticky point we had. We were never able to get the House to recede. Finally, and I think it was the last decision that we reached, the revolving door stayed and it applies to high ranking officers. They are not allowed to take jobs for 2 years under extreme penalties.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Am I not correct that only those who are high-level official appointees are prohibited with respect to revolving door? I do not understand it, and frankly I have difficulty with it.

The limitations in the conference apply to—and I am picking out a number—I would guess about one-tenth of 1 percent of all those who would be involved in these negotiations or procurement provisions and 99⅘ percent would not be covered. Why did the Senate insist that the House back down on this issue?

Mr. GOLDWATER. I cannot give the precise reason because the Senators who negotiated that are not here. But this was one of 1,300 items that we had to decide. It was the stickiest thing that we had, the revolving door. As the Senator has indicated, it is probably less than one-tenth of 1 percent of all the corporate officers in this country who could ever fall under the revolving-door law or the Presidential appointment executive.

In order to reach an agreement, we finally came to an agreement with the House, but the Senators who negotiated that are not here. I think they are coming. If they are not, we will just have to let it go.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I wonder if the Senator would be good enough to advise me as to who those Senators are in order that I might inquire of them why they did what they did? The one-tenth of 1 percent about whom I am talking, to which the law would still be applicable, are not the problem. It is not a matter of who are the corporate officers; it is a question of who are the procurement officers. I am saying that it is the 99⅘ percent of procurement officers have been made exempt and can go out and get jobs with defense contractors under this language, whereas they could not under the House language.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Senators QUAYLE and LEVIN negotiated this.

Mr. NUNN. I might add that I have asked Senator LEVIN to come over, knowing you had questions on this. They did spend 50 or 60 hours negotiating this provision.

It is not as simple as might be seen on the surface. There are two component parts of this problem. One part, as the Senator from Ohio has so well identified, is the perception of conflict of interest in negotiating contracts, a very real problem. The Senate conferees, particularly Senator LEVIN and Senator QUAYLE, feel very strongly about this.

The other side of the coin is a provision so broad in its application that it discourages competent people from ever being willing to take these positions. If, by trying to prevent the perception of possible conflict of interest, you end up with a very incompetent work force in terms of those procuring governmental contracts, then you may have cut off your nose to spite your face.

If you make this prohibition so broad that it sweeps everybody in, including the 99.9 percent of the people who never discuss contracts or never discuss future employment contracts while negotiating procurement contracts, never have any indication of that, and fully and zealously guard the Government interest in this, you have to ask the question, what have you done to Government employees? What have you done to the prospects of getting top procurement people from the business world who have good judgment and business experience involved in Government in the first place?

So it is a two-edged sword and it is a much more complicated matter than simply saying we are going to eliminate conflict of interest.

I think the House had good points. I think the Senate had good points. Senator LEVIN went into this in great detail and the committee did. I am sure he can answer details of the question. I do believe you have to look at it both from the point of view of getting competent people to work in the Government and handle these very important matters and also the point of view of conflict of interest. Both have to be considered in any kind of agreement.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I appreciate what the Senator from Georgia has said, but I am not willing to agree that you cannot get competent people to work in Government unless you assure them that the day they get out of Government they can go to work for the people with whom they have just been negotiating. That is what this issue is all about. We were not saying they could not go out and get a job. They just could not go out and work with the contractors with whom they had been negotiating.

I notice that the distinguished Senator from Michigan, my good friend Senator LEVIN, has returned to the floor. I would like to inquire of him if he can illuminate for the Senator from Ohio why the Senate insisted that the House back off its strong language with respect to the prohibition for 2 years of any procurement officer going to work for a company with which that procurement officer had been dealing?

What concerns me is that the language of this conference report, which has to be interpreted as being in the bill at the insistence of the Senate, is weaker than the strong, effective language of the House. And as I mentioned prior to the time the Senator from Michigan arrived on the floor; newspapers report that the Senate gutted House-passed reforms.

The article I quoted indicated that the House had moved in the right direction. They had passed something providing a prohibition against taking jobs for a period of 2 years with a defense contractor with whom there had been contract negotiations.

That makes sense. Why should somebody representing the U.S. Government be in a position to say, "Listen, I am leaving here in about 6 months." We are talking about this contract, where we are buying some material or some guns or weaponry. "Incidentially, when I leave here, will there be anything open at Lockheed"? Or General Dynamics or Boeing or whomsoever else the defense contractor might be.

I cannot for the life of me understand why we are called upon to pass a conference committee report when our representatives have given away one of the best things that was in the bill. As a consequence, the House-passed reforms became pretty much of a nullity.

I would be very happy to hear from my friend from Michigan as to why there was this giving up or shift.

Mr. LEVIN. I thank my friend for his question. The last question asked is the critical question: Why should a Pentagon employee be able to discuss employment for himself at the same time that he or she is monitoring a contract for the taxpayers of the United States? That is the question which the Senator asked. It is a critical question.

The answer is she or he should not.

It is an absolute outrage that any person should be able to discuss employment for himself or herself at the same time they are monitoring a contract. That was prohibited in our bill. Not only was it prohibited, but you get a 10-year ban if you do it—not a 2-year ban the way the House bill provided, but a 10-year ban in the Senate bill if you discuss employment for yourself at the same time you monitor a contract for the Pentagon.

As a matter of fact, if you have any contact with the procurement process in the Senate bill and you discuss employment for yourself, you are going to get banned for 10 years.

The House bill is a lot weaker in that respect. It requires much more significant involvement in the procurement process before their 2-year ban comes into effect than we do for our 10-year ban to come into effect.

The difference is that we hinge it on the combination of discussing employment for yourself at the same time that you are involved in the procurement process for the Pentagon.

To answer the Senator's question, which is a very direct question, a very appropriate question, I give a very direct answer: It is outrageous that anybody is able to do it. You cannot do it under the Senate bill. You cannot do it under the conference agreement. If you do, you get a 10-year ban, which is like a lifetime ban at the age at which most people are able to retire. So we cover that situation, which is exactly the situation which should be covered.

I want to assure my friend from Ohio that the facts as he outlines them in his hypothetical circumstance are very effectively taken care of in the Senate bill, far more effectively than in the House bill—far more effectively, for two reasons. I repeat them because they are important. There is a lot of confusion on this issue.

The two reasons are that we have a 10-year ban in those circumstances which the Senator identified—a 10-year ban, No. 1.

No. 2, the ban applies to personnel of the Pentagon who have any contact with that contract. It is not limited to significant procurement function. Any kind of contact is covered.

Mr. METZENBAUM. But it is only applicable to major political appointees?

Mr. LEVIN. No, Mr. President.

Mr. METZENBAUM. How does it happen that the Washington Times reports—first of all, it reports that "Defense Conferees gut House-Passed Reforms." It goes on to say:

> Amid much sound and fury, Senate and House conferees working on the 1986 defense appropriations bill gutted many House-passed military procurement reforms, but left in place two important measures dealing with unallowable billings by contractors and the Pentagon's so-called "revolving door."
> The bill also includes a revolving-door amendment designed to prevent conflicts of interest when Pentagon officials leave their government jobs to to to work for military contractors.
> The provision prohibits presidential appointees from taking jobs with a military contractor for two years after they leave their government jobs if the appointee was one of primary negotiators on a contract won by that company.

It has to be a Presidential appointee who must also be one of the primary negotiators.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, may I answer the question?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Yes, Mr. President. Are they wrong?

Mr. LEVIN. They are wrong because they left out the critical thing which I just indicated to my friend. That is that the Senate provision is retained in this conference report.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Would the Senator from Michigan——

Mr. LEVIN. The 2-year ban on certain officials is on top of the Senate provision.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Would the Senator from Michigan read to me the language that we will be acting on this afternoon that covers this point that will convince me that it goes beyond the major political appointees?

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, it is a mighty long provision. I can read it. It will take me about 10 minutes.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Can we not pull out the language?

Mr. LEVIN. I shall give the page number.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

I heard just a few minutes ago that the conference report on the large military authorization bill was the pending matter on the floor of the Senate.

I wish to highly commend the Senator from Arizona who served as chairman of this entire proceeding from the time we started on the bill until now. I attended as many of these sessions as I could, including the conference in the dome of the Capitol.

Mr. President, it is the longest and I think the most difficult defense bill that we have had since I have been in the Senate—and there has been a great number of tough ones and long ones and difficult ones.

The Senator from Arizona and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN], the ranking minority member, have been of tremendous service to the country. There is no reason why I should be bragging on them, but we all thank them for service they have given to the country, assisted by unusually valuable staff. These matters are difficult. They are delicate. Many of them are secret. They are all important. Defense, of course, is the most important thing we have and we must be right in it. We have to spend a lot of money. I never did believe in spending more than you had for any purpose.

They are not the only ones who have worked long and hard. Many Senators have given a tremendous amount of time and effort in this difficult matter. As one who is in a position to judge the value of the work they have done and what it means to the country and the sensitivity of it, I wanted to make these remarks as part of our system. I know there is for all of them a sense of gratitude in the hearts and minds of the membership and the people at large for the work that these gentlemen have done. I especially thank the Senators.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STENNIS. Yes, I yield.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I wish to express my thanks to my teacher. I served under the Senator from Mississippi on the Armed Services Committee year after year after year. I learned all the hard facts of life under him, and so if there is any thanks to be offered, I say for Senator NUNN, too, I think the thanks should go to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. I learned from the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from Georgia and other members of the committee. God bless them all.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I wonder if the distinguished Senator from Arizona might yield for two or three questions, or perhaps any of the conferees who might be involved in specific subject matter.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I might say to my friend that we have the Senator from Ohio already asking questions. If the Senator would like to wait until he is through——

Mr. PRYOR. The Senator from Arkansas will be very happy to wait. I apologize. I did not know the Senator from Ohio was in the process of asking questions.

Mr. GOLDWATER. That is all right.

Mr. PRYOR. I will be glad to wait.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, for a brief moment I will suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I want to return to the subject. I have been studying the language that my colleague from Michigan has pointed out to me with respect to that which is in the bill. I want to acknowledge that, indeed, there is a 10-year provision in that language as compared to the House 2-year provision. But, all the 10-year provision amounts to is, if the defense contractor brings up the matter of employment, the Federal employee must notify the Secretary of Defense. If subsequently, that employee takes a job without the permission of the Secretary of Defense or if he takes a job and has not given the notification, the Secretary of Defense can really come down hard on him. He really can do something effective.

The Secretary of Defense has tremendous power under this bill to do something about those officials who take a job in violation of these provisions without giving notification or without having been given consent.

Let me tell you what it says, Mr. President. It says, "The person may not accept or continue employment with the defense contractor during the 10-year period beginning with the date of separation from Government service."

And then it goes on to say what really may happen. It says, "The Secretary may impose on the person an administrative penalty in the amount of $10,000, or in such lesser amount as may be prescribed by the Secretary, taking into consideration all the circumstances."

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Not yet.

Mr. LEVIN. Will the Senator yield just to agree that the word is "and" before the $10,000 fine?

Mr. METZENBAUM. "In the amount of $10,000 or in such lesser amount——"

Mr. LEVIN. No. Will the Senator agree that the person may not accept the employment for 10 years, and the Secretary may impose a fine?

Mr. METZENBAUM. OK. We are not in disagreement. I think it completes the picture. The $10,000 fine—or some lesser amount—is against the person who is taking the job.

Let us picutre how this works.

Colonel X is working on the job, and he is negotiating a contract for many hundreds of millions of dollars, or maybe even billions. The defense contractor talks with him about taking a job after he leaves the Government.

It is sort of questionable as to whether he gave or did not give the appropriate notice, and in all probability he did not. So he takes a job with a defense contractor, and it pays $150,000 or $200,000 a year. I do not think that is so high, because that is the kind of money defense contractors pay, and much more besides.

Then, all of a sudden, the Secretary of Defense learns all about it, although, in all likelihood, he would pay no attention to it, he is so busy.

So he comes around and says: "I found this out and I notice that you took that job."

He says, "Well, I did."

He says, "You didn't give me notice."

He says, "Well, I guess I sort of overlooked that."

He says, "Well, I'll have to assess an administrative penalty against you."

He says, "Mr. Secretary, I'm not sure that you have the legal right to do that. In fact, I don't work for you any more, and I don't know how you get the authority to assess me with a penalty, notwithstanding the fact that it is in the law."

I doubt very much that you can do that—that a public official, working for the U.S. Government, may assess an administrative penalty against Mr. Smith of Mr. Jones or somebody else just because he or she had once held a job in the U.S. Government.

So what happens? He says: "Well, I'll tell you what. If you don't make it for $10,000, but make it $2,500 or a couple of thousand dollars, I will pay it and we'll forget about it."

The Secretary says: "I don't want to get into a legal wrangle and have a lot of legal expenses, and that's what I'll do."

Meanwhile, he keeps the job. There is nothing that says he does not keep the job.

I do not know of any injunctive remedies here, but I doubt that the Secretary of Defense would use injunctive remedies.

We have backed away from the flat prohibition that was called for, for 2 years, in the House bill.

Senator LEVIN points out that 10 years is a lot longer than 2 years, and indeed it is. But the fact is that the 10 years is rather meaningless, whereas the 2 years were very meaningful.

Other countries, such as France, have a ban on going to work for contractors. If you go to work for a defense contractor after you work as a military procurement officer for the Government, you go to the slammer. But all we have is a questionable administrative penalty.

I stand here and I ask what is wrong with us? Why are we so concerned about what all these poor military retirees are going to do?

I will tell you what they are going to do.

They will get a job with somebody with whom they did not negotiate.

They will get another kind of job.

They do not have to work only for the defense contractors with whom they have negotiated.

It has been suggested to me, in floor conversations with my friend from Michigan, that a procurement officer may have negotiated with 300 different contractors. So be it. I doubt it, but so be it. Then, put a limitation on it—only the contractors with which he negotiated in the last 2 or 3 years. Handle it that way, if that is a problem. Or, if it is really that serious, let him go out and find a job with the hundreds of thousands of other employers in this country and not with one of those 300.

Why are we so unwilling to protect the dollars of the American taxpayers? What is there about us that makes us give away the ball when we have it won? All we had to do was recede to the House, and we would have had something that was significant. But no. We negotiated for 50 hours and wound up with a weaker bill. Why?

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield the floor to the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, because I think he has a few gems of wisdom he would like to share with us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LEVIN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. LEVIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I should like to have an opportunity to answer the question, and then I will be happy to yield the floor. But if the Senator from Arkansas was on his feet first, I have no objection.

Mr. METZENBAUM. There is no problem.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senator from Michigan proceed.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, my friend from Ohio has asked the question: Why? Why did we not just accept the House way of stopping the revolving door?

The answer is that the Senate provision was better, tougher, and fairer. That is why.

The Senate voted on this provision, against the provision which my friend from Ohio has described, by a vote of 67 to 22. So the conferees were defending a position the Senate had taken after a great deal of debate. It was not just failing to give in to the House. It was insisting upon a Senate position which two-thirds of us thought was better, tougher, and fairer than the House provision.

The Senator from Ohio said, first of all, that we did not have anything in the bill. He obviously did not like the bill as it came out of conference. He said we had nothing in there except a 2-year ban because the Washington Times said that, and I think that now he is persuaded with respect to that.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I said there was something in the bill, but I said it was limited to the political appointees.

Mr. LEVIN. The Washington Times is in error. It is not the first time.

Second, we in the Senate believed, at the time of our vote and in conference, that our provision was a better, tougher, and fairer provision. Why? We covered people that the House did not touch: we said that if you have any contact with a defense contractor, even if it is less than significant responsibility for procurement action, which is the House language, and—to use my friend's words at the time of his hypothetical question—you are negotiating with that contractor, you cannot accept employment. You cannot do it. We have a 10-year ban.

Then the Senator from Ohio says that all there is is a discretionary $10,000 fine. That is all the Secretary of Defense can do. But my friend from Ohio has failed to see the word "and" in there. The person may not accept or continue employment with the defense contractor during the 10-year period beginning with the date of the separation from Government service, and is subject to a $10,000 administrative penalty.

Then the Senator says he does not think the Secretary of Defense will seek an injunction. Why not? We have a flat-out prohibition. Why should he not seek an injunction? That is in subsection C, two paragaphs below that, that the Secretary of Defense may take action—we authorize the action—against an individual after the date on which the individual's employment with the Government has terminated. We authorize the Secretary of Defense to do that.

So, just to repeat, to answer the question which my friend from Ohio asks, we think we have a better provision.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEVIN. I yield the floor.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I ask the Senator to yield for a question.

Let us assume that somebody takes this job and violates these provisions completely—and I respect the fact that the word "and" is included.

My question to the Senator is this: Is this the only remedy that the Secretary of Defense may have to get an injunction in order to keep somebody from keeping a job they have been working on for 6 months or a year? Or are there criminal penalties for violating this provision?

Mr. LEVIN. The answer is that an injunction and an administrative penalty are provided.

Mr. METZENBAUM. No criminal penalty.

Mr. LEVIN. There is a good reason for it. We have a criminal law right now that says you may not negotiate employment for yourself at the same time you are handling a procurement function—18 U.S.C. 207. It has not worked. It has not stopped this revolving door which my friend from Ohio and my friend from Arkansas are worried about.

The revolving door smells, and we want to stop it. We want to hit the right people in the process. We think the Senate provision hits the right people. I could not agree more with the Senator. This revolving door stinks, and we should stop it. The question is how to stop it.

We had one approach; the House had another approach. We had a 10-year ban if you do not recuse yourself. We hit a much broader group of people, in a sense, than the House did because we provided that if they have any contact with a procurement function they are covered by our provision, while the House provided they had to have a certain kind of procurement responsibility. So, in two senses, our revolving door provision was broader than the House was. Theirs, in one sense, was broader because of the flat 2-year ban on all procurement officials above a certain level.

The Senate position was upheld on the floor here by a vote of 67 to 22. So we have been through this once before as to which is the most advantageous approach.

But let me tell you, we have tried the criminal approach. It has not resulted in one conviction, although we know this is going on. As least I do not believe there is one conviction that we know of that resulted from the current criminal language. We thought we would try an administrative fine and we would get the Secretary of Defense to stop these folks from going to work if they have not recused themselves and where there has been any contact between a person with an employment function and any negotiations or any discussion relative to employment.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, so we do not just have the Washington Times as the sole authority for the Senator from Ohio, let me bring in the Washington Post, as well. This what the Washington Post says:

> Another lightning rod for House critics was a conference rendering of a procurement reform that had been approved with overwhelming support as a signal of legislative pique with defense contractor abuses and Pentagon inattention. A House measure designed to stop the revolving door situation barred Pentagon officials from working for 2 years after leaving Government with any defense contractor whose business they significantly influenced. Conferees, reflecting the Senate concerns that officials could be deprived of job prospects because of some obscure decision regarding the contractor, voted to narrow the restrictions to Presidential appointees who are among the primary negotiators on any contract. They would be barred for 2 years from going to work for the contractor. Some House Members said the compromise fails to regulate the numerous officials in lower jobs who play critical roles in the weapons procurement process.

What we are talking about here is stopping the revolving door. The House had some tough language in it. The Senate language is arcane, difficult to enforce. There is not one Member in this U.S. Senate who is going to live long enough to see a Secretary of Defense go into court and ask for an injunction to keep some former employee of the Department of Defense from holding a job with a defense contractor. And I doubt that any of us will live long enough to see a Secretary of Defense fine some individual because he or she has taken a job with the defense contractor, in violation of these provisions.

I am afraid that we were making some headway through the House. I think that the House's pique with respect to defense contractors taking advantage of the Government was evident. But when we got to the conference committee? Just as in past years—I remember coming on the floor of the U.S. Senate and getting some amendments passed on issues of this kind, going over to the conference committee and, "good-bye, Charlie"—they are no longer in the conference report when they get back here. Somehow, the defense contractors always have their way. They won this battle, and let us not kid ourselves.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, needless to say, I have enjoyed this discussion.

I see that the Senator from Arizona is rising. I am glad to yield to him at this point.

Mr. GOLDWATER. What was it the Senator wanted to talk about?

Mr. PRYOR. I wanted to make a comment on this little colloquy that has been going on on the floor, and then I might like to ask the Senator from Michigan a few questions, or the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Senator LEVIN and Senator QUAYLE are the experts on this particular point. They fought through day after day and they came up with what I considered to be a very tough piece of legislation, so talk to them.

Mr. PRYOR. Well, I will be glad to talk to them, and I admire those Senators very much and I admire the Senator from Arizona.

First, I wish to make a comment on the colloquy or debate that we are holding at this moment relative to the revolving door. One, I compliment all those involved who have been involved with the revolving door issue. It has been an issue which has plagued this body and this Congress for a long period of time. In my opinion, after watching it, I hate to say as a layman, at least as one who is not on the Armed Services Committee, I do not feel that the revolving door issue in its magnitude, nor, let us say, in its impact on the defense industry and defense procurement has gotten any better. In fact, I am afraid it has gotten worse.

Hopefully, as a result of some legislation, or the press or the Congress or all of us together shining some light on this subject, hopefully it will get better. I am very hopeful it will.

I compliment all of those who have been involved in trying to shape something that will work. I also compliment the Senator from Ohio, because he has taken this issue and he has studied this issue. Evidently he does not agree with what the conference has done, and I am not saying that the Senator from Arkansas does.

But there is one thing I want to try to get straight for the record so that we all know it. My very good friend and close associate, the Senator from Michigan, Senator LEVIN, has stated several times during the last few minutes that by a vote of 67 to 22 some weeks ago, or perhaps now 2 months ago, that the Senate addressed itself to this issue and spoke on the issue of the revolving door. I do not argue that summation by the Senator from Michigan. I would like to elaborate on that vote.

At this point, the Senator from Arkansas is going to admit that the Senator from Arkansas made a mistake. The day that I brought to the floor of the Senate, along with the Senator from Iowa, Senator GRASSLEY, a massive reform bill that truly encompassed five to seven major problems in what I considered defense contracting and the relationship of our Pentagon to the defense contractor, let me tell you what my mistake was. And I will admit it to the Senator from Ohio. They say confession is good for the soul.

Where we had one up-or-down vote on the issue of revolving door, on the issue of dual sources, on the issue of more competition in contracting and right down the line, had the Senator from Arkansas realized on that day what was happening, what was going on, the complexities of this issue, the Senator from Arkansas, if he had it to do over again, would have asked for six separate votes, one of which would have been the issue pinpointed to that issue of the revolving door problem. We never had a vote just on the revolving door problem to the best of my knowledge and the best of my understanding.

So I stand corrected. I made a mistake. We should have had five or six votes that afternoon, rather than one trying to reform the whole system. We should have had a separate vote, I believe, on dual sourcing. I believe we should have had a separate vote, I say to my friend from Ohio, on the issue of more competition in contracting. I am hoping we will some day have a vote on the legislation introduced, and I hope I am still a cosponsor of, and that has been sponsored by and spoken of eloquently by the Senator from Iowa, Senator GRASSLEY, on what he calls his creeping capitalism bill to require more competition in defense contracting.

That is out of the way. I wanted to state that. I wanted to make certain that our colleagues have realized that we have never, in my opinion, this year had a specific vote up or down on the issue of the problem of revolving door.

My concern is about what the conferees have adopted without taking away one thing from the motive of the Senator from Michigan, and the Senator from Indiana, Senator QUAYLE has worked hard for procurement reform. But my concern is that we have taken in that conference some leeway with a modification in saying that in effect we have adopted a double standard, and a double standard has been applied to what I would call senior officials, or senior bureaucrats, whichever you might call them, being judged against a different ethical standard from the lower ones, or those in the lower echelons who are not Presidential appointees. What we have done is we have put a ban only on Presidential appointees, as the Senator from Arkansas understands, who are also involved in procurement and this may encompass only 5, 10, or maybe 15 individuals. I know I cannot change this right now. I think it is too late. But I would like to register my concern, and we have opened up a door. We are employing a double standard for those Presidential appointees versus those in the lower echelon.

That is my first concern. I wanted my friend from Michigan to know this. We have talked about this matter in his office. I certainly, once again, take nothing away from the motive and the spirit with which the Senator is attempting to bring about reform. I just do not agree with what the conference has done.

I have one or two other concerns I would like to express, if I might. I am not going to take but a few more minutes.

Second, I would like to state—maybe this should be in the form of a question on the issue of chemical weapons. The issue of chemical weapons, I say to my friend from Arizona—as you have known and other of my colleagues have known—has been an issue that has concerned me for some time. As I recall the other body, the House of Representatives, had a provision in one of the provisions or caveats which stated basically that if we were to produce any chemical weapons further in this country after the ban of 1969, the resumption of reductions, that we would have to clear first with NATO and that NATO member contries would have to tell this country, yes, we will store chemical weapons or nerve gas on our soil if you produce them. I understand that language has been taken from the conference report.

I am wondering if there might be a comment or further explanation from the distinguished chairman.

Mr. GOLDWATER. I will be very happy to try to explain this. I think I can. But the Senator who did most of the work, the Senator from Ohio, Senator GLENN, can stand by and correct me where I am wrong if I am wrong.

(Mr. MATHIAS assumed the chair.)

Mr. GOLDWATER. To begin with, the House for the first time in 15 or 16 years passed a bill involving chemical warfare. They have consistently turned it down. The Senator I think is fully aware of the fact that the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan has demonstrated that they have used chemical warfare. Last year or the year before, I was privileged when I served on the Intelligence Committee to have testimony on the extent that the Soviets have developed chemical warfare. I do not believe I am allowed to go too far into this because it is rather classified. But I have to tell my friend from Arkansas that we have no defense against chemical warfare. So what the House passed—and I have to say they are going to vote for that in the House—the conference committee took another important step toward restoring a credible U.S. chemical deterrent capability. Resolving the differences between the two bills on this program was one of the most difficult issues faced by the conferees. The final agreement which required concessions from both sides restricted the funding for the procurement of binary munitions including components and the associated production facilities until the President provides a certification to Congress. I want to call my friend's attention to the fact that we are talking about binary weapons. That means there are two parts to it—one to propel it, the other one to go off. Until you put the two together, they are no good.

The President has to certify to Congress and the President must certify that the United States has developed a plan in cooperation with the supreme allied commander of Europe to deploy binary chemical munitions under appropriate contingencies to deter chemical attacks against the United States and our allies, and that he has consulted with NATO members on this plan. No funds may be expended for the final assembly of complete binary munitions until October 1, 1987, and are available thereafter only if there has been no verifiable international agreement on chemical weapons and the President makes a further certification to the Congress.

In addition the conferees adopted language expressing the sense of the Congress that unitary chemical munitions currently stored in the United States, and in NATO, should be replaced with modern binary munitions for safety reasons.

I think this was a tremendous victory. I cannot think of—I can think of one other weapons system that is badly needed in NATO, but this is the one weapons system that the supreme commander has been begging for because they know that the moment the Soviets use chemical weapons we have absolutely no defense. I ask my friend, Senator GLENN from Ohio, if he would have any more comments on this.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I think the chairman has stated very well what the conference agreed to. Let me just say to my friend from Arkansas, this is a matter of safety for our own troops. I hope our friends over in the House of Representatives who are going to vote on this thing realize what they are voting on. This is not a new hideous weapons system. It is not something new. It is not new toxicity. It is not anything except safety for our own people. We have chemical weapons now. They are stored in Europe. That is no secret. I will not give more information than that. But that has been published time after time. We have them in this country. They are unitary weapons. By that we mean they are already mixed. If that weapon leaks—and some are getting old and are dangerous, some have been taken out of stockpile now—it is a danger to our own people. I do not know of anything in our whole weapons bag in this country that is more demagoged or more misrepresented than what we are trying to do in getting safer weapons to replace those that are dangerous for our own people. We have been through this on this floor ad nauseum. They have done the same thing over in the House. To say we do not want safety for our own troops mystifies the devil out of me. Yet, that is what we have said. We have said it repeatedly. We argued on this floor about it. People keep coming back and saying they are awful, hideous chemical weapons, they are terrible, and we should not do this. My God, friends and neighbors, all the people in the gallery, war is hell, as Sherman—or whoever it was—said. That includes chemical weapons.

All we are trying to do is to say we want safety for our own troops handling these things. That is what is in this bill. Along with that we said we do not want NATO having a veto over a U.S. weapons systems. To give them a veto over this would say that the United States cannot produce, we cannot provide a chemical weapon deterrent to the Soviet Union. In effect we would be giving the Soviets encouragement, and if war ever starts, they could make a chemical attack on the United States or its allies without our retaliating in kind. Is it a deterrent? We say nuclear weapons are a deterrent. We say conventional forces are a deterrent. So we want to match the Soviets in chemical weapons. We say we want a good navy. That is a deterrent, so they will never make a mistake by attacking the United States. Yet somehow, which mystifies me, we get beyond that when we come to chemical weapons, and we suddenly say it is too hideous. People may get hurt. I will tell you who is going to get hurt if we do not make binaries. It is our own troops, our own people, Senator. Those are the people in danger right now, not the Soviets. It is our own people that are at risk. They have these unitary gas weapons out there now that are beginning to leak, they are old, and they need to be replaced. We want to replace them with binaries. That keeps the toxic elements apart so that they are not dangerous for our people to store or handle.

We even put in the bill that the components will be stored in separate States, in heaven's name, in separate States. We also say that the two components cannot be shipped together in the same vehicle.

What else can we do? We are talking safety not for the Soviets; we are talking safety for our people from the existing weapons systems. Why can we not get that across? Why do people point their fingers at us and say,

"Well, he is awful, he is for poison nerve gas?" How many times have I heard that?

How many times have I been booed because I wanted safety for our own people, our own troops.

I hope the people in the House read the record of this, or I hope they are listening to this, so that they know what is intended in this conference report is safety for our people, our people, our people. I repeat it.

I do not know how we do that unless we have the binary system.

Right now we have unitary chemical weapons out there. We are not proposing a new toxic gas. We have the weapons out there now and they are endangering our own people. All we are saying is we will replace those systems one by one. For every new binary we make we will destroy more than one equivalent in unitaries. We do not want a bigger stockpile of chemical weapons, only a safer stockpile.

In World War I, the Germans used gas. We did not. Fortunately, the British and French had it in stock and they used it. The Germans stopped using it.

Mr. PRYOR. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLENN. Not yet. I am not quite finished.

In World War II we had it and they had it and nobody used it. In Korea we had it and they had it and nobody used it. In Vietnam, a different situation where they used it in a limited way. In Afghanistan, the Afghans do not have it but the Soviets do and the Soviets are using it.

I think the deterrent effect is pretty clear. Why we think our nuclear systems will deter the Soviets, our conventional weaponry will deter the Soviets, our naval forces will deter the Soviets, our air forces will deter the Soviets, but when we get to chemical weapons and they have a tremendous capability yet we don't need a chemical deterrent—that makes no sense.

It snows me why we think that. It is against every fact of warfare. Yet we cannot bear to believe that something like chemical weapons can have a deterrent effect on the Soviets.

I think the record is very, very clear. I hope my friends in the House will understand, and I will repeat it one more time for their benefit in case they read what we say today. I repeat, binary chemical weapons are for safety for our troops. We have unitary chemical weapons. They are out there now. They are unsafe. We only want to replace them with binary, weapons which are safe. That is the major purpose of what we wanted to do in this bill. Also we wanted to ensure that we did not give NATO a veto over a major American weapons system, in this case chemical weapons. If we do that, what is to prevent the Soviets from raising cain with all the groups across Europe, getting them to object to MX's, or to M-1 tanks, or to whatever they want to object to in the future? We in effect would say we cannot stand that kind of criticism so we would give in to NATO, should they object; we will let them say what weapons system this Nation cannot have, regardless of our judgment in the matter.

I do not want to see that kind of precedent set.

So we worked out this compromise. I do not think there was any one of the subpanels in the conference that had longer hours or a greater number of meetings than we did on chemical weapons. Frankly, when we started out we were poles apart from the House on this, and I doubted we could work out a compromise. But we gave some, they gave some, Senator COHEN was in the middle of these same meetings that I was, and we worked it out. I am proud that we were able to work it out. They got what they wanted in the way of consultation with NATO and on some requirements on setback for the time when chemical weapons could first be produced. We got what we wanted in that NATO does not have a veto over us, and we are still able to start construction, with some delay, soon after certifications are made, as the chairman pointed out.

We worked this thing out. We did not get everything we wanted and they did not get everything they wanted. But it is something that both the Senate and House can live with.

The main thing is we will have a deterrent against Soviet use of chemical weapons. With this bill going through, our chemical weapons will be safe for our people to handle, to store, and to work with because the toxic elements will be kept apart.

I urge my colleagues on the floor and the Senator from Arkansas to please support this. It is a delicate compromise, and it does provide a deterrent.

Mr. PRYOR. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLENN. Certainly.

Mr. PRYOR. I feel that the Senator from Arkansas owes the Senator from Ohio an apology, the Senator from Arizona, the chairman, and Senator NUNN, the ranking member of Armed Services.

In no way did I intend to get on the floor and restart or rekindle the debate on chemical warfare, nerve gas. I have debated that issue until I am sick of it. I do not want to hear of it again.

All I am trying to do is raise one issue: What happened to the provision about NATO and, second, what is going to happen now if NATO countries say, "No, you go ahead and make all the nerve gas you want. We have enough to kill 50,000 people, or everybody on Earth 50,000 times, or more, or 50 times, or more." It does not matter after you killed everyone one time.

What is going to happen if they say they will not store it on their soil?

Mr. GLENN. It will still be a deterrent against the Soviet in that we will have it in our stockpile, and it will be safe for our own troops.

Mr. PRYOR. That is the question the Senator from Arkansas was asking. I did not mean to go back into general debate on nerve gas because, do you know what? You won. That issue is over. We are going to start making nerve gas again.

Mr. GLENN. Let me say one more thing. When the people of Europe see and realize that they have the more unsafe, the less safe, unitary weapons in their midst right now, which they have—and that has been printed in the paper so I am not giving anything away—that they are less safe than the binaries we are offering them which will be safer for their own people, their own troops, I cannot imagine them not accepting it.

Mr. PRYOR. When they find out we are going to make new binary nerve gas they will flock over here by the planeload to get all we can produce so they can put it on their soil.

Mr. GLENN. If they are smart they will, because what they will be replacing are their old weapons which are not as safe for their troops as the new weapons.

Mr. PRYOR. I understand that very well. I thank the Senator.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. PRYOR. I believe I am to yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. COHEN. The short answer on NATO is that there was no NATO provisions in the Senate bill. When it comes to the question of the Senate recession, there were about 13 major recessions in this particular provision. Nine of the recessions were made by the Senate and four by the House. Three of the ones made by the House strengthened the bill. So when it comes to an analysis of the chemical weapons provision, I think there was a major concession made by the Senate in order to accommodate the House. At the same time, we were not, as the Senator from Ohio said, prepared to give a veto to NATO over major systems that may have deterrent value elsewhere, outside of NATO, such as in the Persian Gulf. But the major concession, as I said, was made by the Senate in order to accommodate the House.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I will be very brief. I stood on the floor a minute ago and I asked why did the Senate insist on its position rather than accepting the House language which provided for a fine up to $5,000 and up to 1 year imprisonment if you took a job with a defense contractor with whom you had been negotiating?

In response, my friend from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] said we did so because the Senate had voted by a vote of 67 to 22 that that was the position they wanted to take. But what we were voting on when we rejected, by 67 to 22, the Pryor amendment, was not this issue of the revolving door alone. The Pryor amendment included five or six other issues as well.

I wonder whether the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR] who was the author of that amendment, would be good enough to tell us what else was included besides the revolving door issue, at least in part, so we may clarify the fact that when the vote was 67 to 22, it was not on this item.

Mr. PRYOR. I thank the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas does not have before him all the issues involved. One issue I remember in addition to the revolving door issue was the dual-source contracting provision. Another issue dealt with competition in contracting, which was a very detailed amendment.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. QUAYLE], as I recall, argued that provision and other provisions very eloquently, and, I might say, on the other side, regrettably. But there were several other provisions in that particular amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa and myself and several others which did receive 22 or 23 votes.

In retrospect, my only point is that I wish we had singled out the revolving door issue, singled out the competition issue, and singled out the dual-source issue. I think, as we go along, we learn from our mistakes here. I hope we are big enough to admit them. Certainly, I made a tactical mistake. I wish we had had several separate votes. There was extensive debate on the several encompassed issues.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield for an observation?

Mr. PRYOR. Yes, although the Senator from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. NUNN. The Senator is probably correct in his perception about dividing out the issues of the amendment. I shall not quarrel with that. But we have to find, in the Armed Services Committee and in the Senate as a whole, a way to have fewer amendments. We had 113. If the Senator had used his tactical retrospective strategy, we would have had 119. The House had even more than that.

Frankly, when we get to conference on that many items, and we had 1,300 items in disagreement—at least 200 or 300 of them were very important, some of them technical, obviously. When you get to this stage, frankly, it is impossible—and this is why we are so fortunate to have had Senators LEVIN and QUAYLE so much involved in this. I was and the chairman, at probably any one hour of the conference, involved in 10 or 12 different issues. We have gotten to the point where this bill has become almost unmanageable, particularly when you get to conference and have that many differences.

So the Senator's idea on tactics, I hope, is not a spreading situation, because we do have to find a way to look at the number of amendments in this bill.

Mr. PRYOR. Let me say to my friend from Georgia, Mr. President, when you are spending almost $1 trillion of the taxpayers' money, I think perhaps there ought to be more scrutiny and perhaps even more amendments. Someone said the other day if this bill keeps on going the way it is, it is going to be as complicated as the farm bill before long. That is going to have a lot of amendments, too.

Mr. NUNN. We may not have a farm bill this year.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an observation?

Mr. METZENBAUM. If I may, without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. GOLDWATER. This is a conference report. It is not amendable. We have been talking about this now for 2½ hours. We have two or three very important matters that have to come up before tonight. We understand the Senators' position, the position of both of the Senators. If they come up again next year, we will certainly keep them in mind. I would like to ask the Senators if they would not let us vote so we can get on with the business of the Senate.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I assure my friend from Arizona that I have no intention of delaying this body. I just want to clarify this last point, then I shall conclude.

The Senator from Michigan made a very strong point, when I asked why, why, why the Senate had given in on this issue, or insisted upon its position, that it was because the Senate had voted to that effect. As Senator PRYOR has just indicated, there were six different items involved and I have now been able to procure those. It was dual sourcing, revolving door, quality control of contractors—requiring contractors to pay back funds for defects—burden of proof on contractors for all costs, criminal penalties for false billings, and spare-part breakout in order to encourage competition in spare-part procurement.

The Senate will not speak to this issue. We should have given in to the House; they did a better job than we did. I think the defense contractors have had their day.

Now I think I have had my day and my time. I yield the floor.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Well, I am glad.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GOLDWATER. Certainly, I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, let me address first my friend from Arkansas. He indicated the fact that his amendment contained more than just the revolving door. He is, of course, correct. My friend from Ohio is, of course, correct also in pointing that out. They both would agree and I am sure Senator QUAYLE would agree that, No. 1, revolving door was one part of that amendment which was defeated and it was the most important, most discussed issue in that amendment which was defeated 67 to 22. I think Senator PRYOR and Senator QUAYLE would confirm the fact that revolving door was a critical part of the floor debate and one of the items included in that amendment. I think it is fair to say it was defeated 67 to 22.

To be technically accurate, it was the Pryor-Grassley amendment that was rejected 67 to 22 rather than revolving door itself, but it contained revolving door.

Second, if I may, the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Arkansas should understand that even though we happen to disagree on revolving door, that should not diminish the fact that they made a major contribution and continue to make a major contribution and even though we might disagree on a better way to close that revolving door, I want to assure them I am glad they are here and I hope they continue to do that.

Finally, Mr. President, I should like to read from a Wall Street Journal article. My friend from Ohio has read the Washington Times here and the Washington Post today saying that the House caved in to the Senate. Well, now let me read the Wall Street Journal. It says here:

> Lawmakers stumbled for days over the 2-year ban offered by Charles Bennett, with Senators Levin and Quayle arguing that Presidential appointees should be exempted.

That is exactly the opposite of what we ended up with, by the way.

> But Mr. Quayle and Mr. Levin relented—

We relented, according to the Wall Street Journal—

> as it became clear that the bill might fail in the House if Mr. Bennett was dissatisfied.

So here is a newspaper article, since we are apparently relying on newspaper articles, which takes exactly the opposite position of the Washington Post and the Washington Times. They say the House caved in to the Senate, but we have the Wall Street Journal saying that Senators QUAYLE and LEVIN relented to the House. So pick your newspaper, I will not. Let me assure everybody I will not pick between these august newspapers.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, the Senator has finished?

Mr. LEVIN. Almost, Mr. President; 10 more seconds.

Representative BENNETT is apparently satisified with the outcome of this. He was the sponsor in the House of the revolving door and the other reform amendments. I think the fact that he has been quoted to the effect that he is satisfied with the solution in conference speaks well of the compromise we made.

I thank my friend, the Chairman.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, the yeas and nays have been ordered. I wonder if the Presiding Officer would put the questions?

Mr. QUAYLE. First, Mr. President, may I just associate myself with the remarks made by the Senator from Michigan?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. QUAYLE. He is absolutely right. The major contentious point at the conference was the revolving door, despite all the other procurement issues, and they were many. In fact, I do believe that it was a principle issue. We went up in the committee and on the floor here to look at that 2-year provision. We thought it was bad public policy. We have drawn it as narrowly and tightly as possible in the conference as a compromise with the House. If I had my way, that amendment would not be in there. I think we have looked at this in a substantial way. I think the Senate, in fact, was correct in its first analysis and its first legislative try at this.

Mr. President, I support the conference committee report on the defense authorization bill for fiscal 1986. The report is a result of 3 weeks of very difficult negotiations with our counterparts on the House side. Although there are some matters in this package with which I disagree, I feel that this report can be supported by all the Members of the Senate.

In my view, the most contentious issues in the conference were the defense acquisition policy provisions. We had nearly 40 differences between the House and Senate in this very complex area. Before I present the details of these final provisions, I want to commend and thank my colleague, Senator CARL LEVIN, for his tireless work in the more than 40 hours of negotiation that it took to resolve these issues. Without his close involvement, we would not have been able to resolve the acquisition policy matters in the way we did.

Because of the large number of issues in disagreement between the House and the Senate in the defense acquisition policy area, I will only focus on the most controversial.

We had a major difference in our approach to requiring multiple sources for major weapon systems and other defense equipment. The provision approved by the Senate focused on establishing and maintaining two or more sources for the production of major systems and equipment. The House provision would have extended this requirement to the full-scale development phase of major programs and required the Secretary of Defense to follow very rigid criteria for waiving these requirements. In addition, the House would have placed a statutory limitation on the numbers of waivers that the Secretary could grant in a fiscal year.

Although I felt that our original provision had most effectively addressed the multiple source issue, some accommodation to the House position was necessary if we were to finish the conference. The conferees agreed to accept the House position on requiring multiple sources during the full-scale development phase, as well as production of major defense systems and equipment. However, we did succeed in giving the Secretary of Defense additional flexibility in applying the multiple-sourcing requirements and the conferees agreed to remove any limitation on the Secretary's use of his waiver authority.

Another area of major disagreement was the allowable cost provision. The Senate had approved a provision that would have required the Secretary of Defense to clarify in regulation the allowability or unallowability of certain indirect expenses submitted to the Defense Department for reimbursement. The Senate provision also would have provided the Secretary of Defense the authority to assess increased penalties against contractors knowingly submitting unallowable costs for reimbursement. The House allowable cost provision would have placed rigid categories of unallowable indirect costs directly in statute and applied criminal sanctions to those defense contractors knowingly submitting such unallowable costs for reimbursement.

Despite our serious concern with the need to crack down on defense contractors who continue to submit unallowable costs for reimbursement, the Senate conferees had very serious reservations about mandating categories of unallowable indirect costs in statute without giving the Secretary of Defense some flexibility to deal with situations unforeseen by Members of Congress. The conferees therefore agreed to place the categories of unallowable costs in statute, but included the authority for the Secretary of Defense to modify them as necessary in the implementing regulations. The conferees also agreed to drop the criminal penalties in favor of the stiff administrative penalties provided in the Senate provision.

By far the most contentious issue was the so-called revolving door issue. The Senate provisions would have addressed the issue of conflict of interest by employees or officers of the Department of Defense negotiating employment with defense contractors over whom they have substantial procurement responsibility by a comprehensive disqualification requirement. The House provision would have applied a flat 2-year prohibition on any employee or officer in the Department of Defense taking a job with a defense contractor over whom they had substantial procurement responsibility.

I remain convinced that our disqualification requirement was the most equitable and effective means of addressing the conflict-of-interest problem. It became apparent, however, that disagreement on this issue could result in the breakup of the entire conference. For that reason, the Senate conferees very reluctantly agreed to a limited two-prohibition ban on certain DOD employees.

Mr. President, the defense acquisition policy subcommittee is now in the process of setting an agenda for the review of acquisition issues throughout the remainder of this session of the 99th Congress. The experience with the various procurement provisions that were introduced on the floor of both the Senate and the House has convinced me of the great danger in legislating without the benefit of adequate committee review and consideration. It is my hope that our subcommittee agenda this year will allow us to more effectively direct any legislative action on this very complex area of defense acquisition.

Besides defense aquisition issues, the conference also reached a number of critical agreements concerning strategic arms. Perhaps the most important of these concerned the President's strategic defense initiative [SDI]. The conference agreed to authorize the SDI at $2.75 billion in fiscal year 1986 and eliminated all House restrictions on the allocation of these moneys within the SDI account.

The compromise funding level for SDI and $250 million more than what the House bill authorized for SDI and represents a real increase over last year's authorization of $1.4 billion for SDI. It would be a mistake, however, to think that the conference gave SDI or the administration a blank check.

While the articulation of administration policy with regard to SDI has matured considerably and, in my opinion, very positively, toward emphasizing how SDI can strengthen deterrence and help protect key United States and NATO military assets, the specific programs to implement this policy are either missing or not properly supported. The conference report asks a number of specific questions that the Strategic Defense Initiative Office [SDIO] must answer in detail. Certainly, without a better match between programs and policy, funding for the SDI next year will be in trouble.

I, for one, am most concerned that SDIO has focused far too much on achieving the distant prospect of nearly perfect defenses against threat of an all-out Soviet attack and too little effort on developing near-term ground-based preferential defenses against the much more pressing threat that Soviet missiles now pose to key United States and allied military assets.

Stated simply, the United States should at least attempt to develop the sort of antitactical ballistic missile systems [ATBM's] that the Soviets have already developed and are deploying, SA-10's and SA-X-12's. Indeed, if we do not, the existing theater asymmetrics in Europe and the Far East will only get worse, increasing the Soviet incentive to strike first in a crisis in these critical regions.

In this regard, I was pleased that the conference requested a study on the possibility of developing near-term defenses for our key military assets and our ICBM's. The conference specifically asked that this study consider the adequacy of our own Anti-Tactical Missile [ATM] Program.

Although not explicitly mentioned in this request, using active defenses to make MX less vulnerable clearly was in mind. The conference report tentatively limited the number of MX's deployed in existing silos to 50 until a more survivable basing mode is proposed. Devising a new basing mode may take time. The conferees recognized this and made clear provision to keep the MX Program going in the interim. In specific, the conference stipulated that between 12 and 21 MX's will be procured in fiscal year 1987 for testing purposes.

As important as active ground-based defenses may be to securing the future of MX, they may be equally important to the viability of the small ICBM [SICBM]. The conference limited additional money for this program to $100 million rather than the $150 million that the House bill called for.

Although the conferees were anxious to have a few more survivable land-based missile and hope that the SICBM might fit this bill, they questioned whether or not the congressionally mandated size—30,000 to 33,000 pounds—and warhead limits—one per missile—made much sense. In specific, the current weight limit on the SICBM may prevent the missile from being able to penetrate even crude Soviet missile defenses and may make the cost of deploying prompt U.S. land-based warheads prohibitive.

The conferees also were concerned about the feasibility and cost of relying solely on mobility to make this new missile survivable The cost of making mobile launchers hard enough and of manning these launchers has driven the price estimates for SICBM well beyond those for MX. For these reasons I believe the conference was wise in directing the Air Force to review these problems and report to the Committees on Armed Services by October 1, 1985. As with MX, we may well find that fixed basing or limited mobility and some form of active defense is the best basing mode.

Until our land-based missile force is modernized, our sea-based missile force will be relatively important. Recognizing this, the conference agreed finally to fund the advanced procurement of E-6A's, submarine communications relay aircraft. These planes are critical if we are to communicate effectively with our ballistic missile and attack submarines. Currently, we rely on C-130's, which are too limited in range and lift capability to sustain its communications mission for a sufficient period of time. Procuring the E-A will remedy this problem. Certainly, it makes little sense to spend $60 billion to buy the new Trident submarines through the 1990's and not have the ability to command and control them.

The conference, of course, did not limit itself to addressing strategic nuclear issues; it also was concerned about conventional weapons and increasing NATO cooperation. One of the most important actions the conference agreed to was an amendment I offered to give the President new powers to encourage greater United States-NATO arms cooperation. Currently, our NATO allies are cooperating in the research and development of several key weapons systems on nearly a 50-50 basis with the United States. Yet, under existing law these allies cannot produce these weapons without going through a complicated procedure reserved for underdeveloped nations who want simply to buy complete weapons systems from the United States. The language that the conference agreed to will remedy this problem and open the way to more joint development of weapons systems with our allies.

Mr. President, these are some of the highlights of the conference committee report. The report deserves the Senate's support and I hope will serve as a guide to both the House and Senate Appropriations Committees when they mark up later this year.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President I would like to seek clarification of section 1612 of the Department of Defense fiscal year 1986 authorization from the distinguished Armed Services Subcommittee chairman, Senator HUMPHREY.

Is it the chairman's understanding that the intent of section 1612 is to prohibit any action being taken by the President to modernize the national defense stockpile by reducing stockpile goals below those that were in effect on October 1, 1984?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho is correct. The language contained in section 1612 as offered by the House and concurred in by the Senate would prohibit the President, before October 1, 1986, from taking any action to implement or administer a lowering of the goals for strategic and critical materials in the stockpile below those in effect on October 1, 1984, unless the appropriate committees of Congress authorizes such reductions.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, i thank the distinguished subcommittee chairman of the Armed Services Committee for that clarification.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, this conference report deserves comment. Though surely not to everyone's satisfaction, it does reflect the benefits of the conference process. In a number of respects, the conference report is superior to the bill which passed the Senate. I would like to highlight certain of these improvements.

MX

First is the MX. Barring an unexpected breakthrough in basing modes, the Congress has capped the MX Program at 50 missiles to be deployed only in present silos. Not only does this cap the number of missiles, it also puts a ceiling on ultimate costs for MX and we can also hope that it will bring to an end the divisive and turbulent debate over this missile—a debate whose principal value was to illuminate the dangerous nature of these missiles to our nuclear deterrence.

SDI

The administration's request for funds to support research for the space based defense initiative was so large as to raise serious questions as to whether this money could possibly be spent wisely. The judgment of both the House and Senate was that the figure was too high and the final authorization figure is more than 25 percent less than the administration requested. It is important that SDI research be carefully controlled to ensure that it does not become a pot of gold for defense contractors and also to ensure that SDI development and testing strictly conform with the provisions of the ABM Treaty. I am confident that the decision of the House and the Senate puts the administration on notice that Congress will hold the SDI Program to these standards.

The ASAT Program continues to be a cause of concern to the Congress. There is the feeling that a too enthusiastic and premature testing program could damage the prospects of reaching an agreement with the Soviet Union controlling the development and employment and employment of ASAT's. This report permits three tests against an object in space during fiscal year 1986 providing the President certifies the need for, and arms control limitations of such testing. This agreement no better surely than the unlimited Senate provision relative to ASAT.

The compromise position taken on chemical weapons cannot please those who desired a ban on the production of new chemical weapons. But its surely better than the Senate position which placed few conditions on the production of binary weapons.

I am especially pleased that we have authorized the expenditure of $100,000 to pay the expense of an mutual, exchange visit program between senior United States and Soviet civilian defense officials and military officers. I submitted this proposal to the Congress because I am certain that personal knowledge and face to face communications between these senior officials in both governments can be of vital importance during periods of tension between these two nations and can reduce the risk of miscalculation.

UCMJ DEATH PENALTY

The conference agreement creates a new peacetime espionage offense under the Uniform Code of Military Justice which authorizes a sentence of death. I have opposed reinstituting a Federal civilian death penalty for several reasons which also apply to establishing a death penalty under the military code.

First, capital punishment is irreversible and our system of justice is not error proof. Dozens of capital cases have been documented where people have been sentenced to death who were later found to be innocent.

Second, in those States which currently authorize the death penalty for serious crimes, the death penalty continues to be applied in a discriminatory manner, against minorities and those who are too poor to afford the best legal representation. Third, there is no persuasive evidence that the death penalty deters crimes. In fact, States with capital punishment have murder rates twice as high as the States that do not have capital punishment.

Mr. President, in addition to these general reasons why I oppose capital punishment, there are specific reasons why we should not enact this provision. The espionage provision in the DOD authorization bill includes statutory procedures for implementing the sentence of death, while the UCMJ has 13 other capital offenses that will not be covered by the statutory procedures in this provision. At a June 26, 1985 hearing on espionage, I asked Chapman Cox, general counsel at DOD, whether there was any reason why the Congress should not adopt statutory provisions establishing procedures for capital cases. Mr. Cox stated:

> We believe that the sentencing procedures as provided for by the Congress under the Uniform Code of Military Justice are the right ones for the military system. We believe it should be the President who establishes the guidelines and procedures that meet the needs of the armed forces, as Commander-in-Chief, for sentencing in all of the Military Justice Code.

An additional reason why it is not wise to adopt statutory procedures for the crime of peacetime espionage is that the Supreme Court has not yet addressed the question whether congressional action is constitutionally required to establish necessary procedural protections in capital cases. The Department of Defense maintains that action by the Congress is not necessary and that it is more appropriate for the executive branch to establish procedures for the military. But in adopting statutory procedures for peacetime espionage which are different from those which apply to all other capital offenses in the Code, Congress is expressing a preference for statutory procedures. On this point, Mr. Cox stated:

> . . . we now have these procedures in the Code with respect to all of our capital punishment. If you as a Congress impose the statutory system on one punitive article, you create doubt that the other procedure is constitutionally valid. We would strongly urge you against doing that

Thus, in approving this provision establishing different procedures for peacetime espionage than are applicable to all other capital offenses under the military code, we will be creating confusion and a lack of uniformity in the military justice system. Additionally, congressional approval of statutory factors for the crime of peacetime espionage may prejudice the Government's position that the executive branch, rather than the Congress, should establish procedures for capital offenses under the military code. That is why Secretary Weinberger wrote to Chairman Goldwater after the McCollum amendment was approved by the House and stated that "* * * constitutionally sufficient guidelines already exist in R.C.M. 1104 of the Manual for Courts Martial. The rules in the manual, which reflect the standards to which we hold military personnel, are preferable to those in the House bill." The wiser course of action would have been to adopt the amendment to the DOD authorization bill approved by the House 1 day before the McCollum amendment was approved. That amendment called for a study of capital punishment in the military. Instead, we are taking hasty action which is inappropriate where the issue involves life and death.

Also, by establishing capital punishment for peacetime espionage, we will lose any opportunity to obtain valuable information from those convicted of espionage about their spying activities. Furthermore, once a convicted spy is executed, the Government will not be able to make a trade for Americans being held in foreign nations. In 1978, the United States traded convicted Soviet spy Robert Thompson—a U.S. citizen who worked as an Air Force clerk—for an American student and an Israeli pilot. Thompson spent 13 years in prison for espionage before he was traded to the Soviets.

In 1962, the United States swapped a KGB colonel, Rudolph Abel, for Francis Gary Powers, a U-2 pilot who worked for the CIA. William Donovan, Abel's defense attorney, argued during his trial that Abel should not be sentenced to death because it might be possible to swap Abel for an American later. Donovan told the sentencing judge that "* * * it is possible that in the foreseeable future an American of equivalent rank will be captured by Soviet Russia or an ally; at such time an exchange of prisoners through diplomatic channels could be considered to be in the best interest of the United States." Donovan proved to be right. Because the judge did not sentence Abel to death, the United States was able to trade him for Gary Powers 5 years later.

In summary, Congress is acting too hastily in response to the Walker case without taking the time to consider the consequences which will result from having two separate procedures and guidelines for capital offenses under the military code. The espionage provision will create confusion, lack of uniformity, and call into question the constitutionality of the procedures for capital cases contained in the Manual for Courts Martial. Those who are charged with peacetime espionage will be subject to different procedures than those persons who are charged with wartime espionage. Furthermore, the decision to enact a peacetime espionage statute is inconsistent with national security interests, because it may limit our ability to obtain valuable information about espionage activities and will prevent us from trading persons convicted of espionage in the United States for American citizens being held in other countries.

NATIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY ACT AND BASE CLOSINGS

Mr. President, I was also deeply involved in the debate over the conference action to strike the explicit reference to the National Environmental Policy Act from the revised base closing provisions.

For a variety of substantive and procedural reasons, I opposed many of the changes to the base closing statute and military construction procedures that were adopted by the Senate Armed Services Committee. When this issue was considered by the Senate, I voted to strike the committee-reported section, but supported the straightforward, well-reasoned and significant procedural reforms offered by the ranking member of our Armed Services Committee, Senator NUNN, and the ranking member of our Military Construction Subcommittee, Senator BINGAMAN. I am sorry that that amendment failed to pass on a tie vote.

In the authorization conference, a subpanel met to consider the Senate's proposal to streamline the base closing provisions. I believe that the conferees have done a good job of focusing their statutory revisions on procedural matters, and have provided a reasonably expedited process by which the Secretary of Defense may propose, and the Congress will have a meaningful opportunity to consider, individual base closing and realignment recommendations.

In revising the statutory provisions in title 10 regarding base closings, the conferees have deleted the explicit reference to the National Environmental Policy Act.

Mr. President, when the subpanel made its report to the full conference on this matter, there were explicit representations made to the full conference, that the conferees' action did not intend to alter the application of the National Environmental Policy Act to base closing. I supported the conference agreement on this portion only because of the assurances that our action would not affect the applicability by its own terms of the National Environmental Policy Act to base closings and realignments.

Mr. President, this Senator will be carefully watching the Department's implementation of this important provision.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the conference report on S. 1160, the fiscal year 1986 Defense Authorization Act. I want to join my colleagues in commending the senior Senator from Arizona and the senior Senator from Georgia for their leadership in the Conference Committee's deliberations. On the whole, we reached fair and responsible compromises with the House conferees on the 1,350 items that were in disagreement between the two bills, and we did so more rapidly than anyone could have realistically expected at the start of the conference.

Mr. President, I would just like to comment briefly on a few of the results of the conference.

I think the conference report vindicates the view that several of us expressed earlier this year that we could adopt a zero real growth budget level for defense, as our Federal budget crisis requires, but still be able to continue our defense modernization at a rapid pace.

For example, the conferees were able to authorize 29 more combat aircraft than were requested this year, and 83 more than were approved last year. In the shipbuilding account, the only reduction from the President's request was for two mine countermeasure ships which were postponed for a year largely because of problems in the program. The threat-based conventional munitions accounts—missiles, torpedos, and mines—were approved almost in their entirety, with increases for some programs offsetting reductions in others. The same could be said of the Army weapons and combat vehicles account. The bottom line is that the conferees were able to fund the high priority modernization programs of the services at the $302.5 billion spending level.

Mr. President, I also want to highlight the conferees' action on three specific issues: university research, military base closures, and polygraphs.

The conferees authorized $75 million above the President's $971 million request for DOD support of basic research. The $75 million addition is to be spent on a university research initiative in which we would like to see all the technical agencies of the U.S. Government participate. The additional funding will help address the crisis of obsolete instrumentation in our university laboratories and will help educate additional American graduate students in the physical sciences and engineering.

I welcome this initiative. Over the past 2 years DOD support for its technology base programs had fallen even while overall DOD research budgets continued to grow. It was important to reverse that trend and, even in this year of no real growth in the overall defense budget, to reassert the need for DOD to do its share to maintain our scientific infrastructure, especially in our universities.

Mr. President, the compromise the conferees reached on streamlining the military base closure and realignment process was a very fair one. The compromise provision largely parallels the proposal put forward by Senator NUNN and myself when the Senate debated the defense authorization bill in May. Most importantly for me, the conferees agreed to preserve the authorization and appropriations process for military construction projects associated with base closures and realignments. We streamlined the notice process, reducing it to a one-step process from the current two-step process, and required base closure and realignment notices be submitted with the President's budget request. We reduced the paperwork required to be submitted with the notices from "detailed justifications" to "evaluations" of various factors.

The conferees did not go as far as Senator NUNN and I had proposed with regard to the National Environmental Policy Act. We had proposed to waive judicial review of NEPA, except for the question as to whether an environmental impact statement was required. The Gramm provision included in the Senate bill waived NEPA entirely for base closures when there is a federal deficit. However, the House conferees rejected any language waiving NEPA (or parts of NEPA) in the case of base closures. They agreed to delete the specific reference to NEPA in section 2687 of title 10 of the U.S. Code in the belief that this would not affect the need for the Defense Department to comply with NEPA in the case of base closures and realignments.

I believe that the base closure compromise is a sound one. I agree with Senators GOLDWATER and GRAMM that the impediments to closures of unneeded bases had become too severe. This bill should restore the balance between the executive and legislative branches that existed prior to 1976 when a restrictive base closure provision was first enacted. It should allow base closures to be successfully implemented as they were in the overwhelming majority of cases prior to 1976.

Mr. President, the conference also reached a responsible compromise on the utilization of mandatory polygraph examinations for counterintelligence purposes in the Defense Department. In the wake of the Walker espionage case, the House had passed a sweeping measure which would have granted DOD permanent authorization to subject all employees and contractors with security clearances to these examinations. It would have required polygraph examinations for those in special access programs. It would have placed no limits on the number of polygraph exams to be conducted in the Department. The Senate Armed Services Committee had included a provision in the Senate bill which authorized a 1-year continuation of a 3,500 person test program on the use of the polygraph examinations in the special access programs of the Department of Defense. The conference, with the senior Senator from Georgia taking the lead in framing the final compromise, decided that a measured approach was appropriate, that we should not remove all constraints on the use of polygraphs by the Defense Department. The conferees agreed that the test program should be expanded to include those with access to top secret information as well as those in special access programs. In fiscal year 1986 up to 3,500 tests may be conducted under this program with up to 7,000 tests in fiscal year 1987. A series of reports are required on the conduct of this program to help future Congresses decide on whether to extend the mandatory counterintelligence polygraph program.

I am convinced that this measured approach is the proper one to follow.

We should not turn to the polygraph instrument as a technical fix for our counterintelligence needs. The problem is much more complex than that and can not be solved so simply.

To conclude, Mr. President, the conference report in my view represents a solid and responsible effort to deal with our Nation's defense requirements. I do not agree with every element of the report, nor would any other member of the Conference Committee. But, on balance, we arrived at a sound defense program, one that I am pleased to endorse to my colleagues.

APPLICABILITY OF NEPA TO BASE CLOSINGS

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, Senator GRAMM was on the floor to describe, among other things, how the conference report handles the question of the applicability of the National Environmental Policy Act, known as NEPA, to questions involving base closings.

As the Senate knows, curent law explicitly requires full compliance with NEPA by the Department of Defense when they propose closing military bases. This provision was enacted in 1977. Even before passage of this section, however, the Department of Defense had to consider NEPA when proposing base closures, but the environmental law's application was more limited and depended on factual questions in each individual base closure.

The conference chose to delete the explicit requirement of current law. There seemed to be some feeling among the conferees that the existing provision would force the Defense Department to provide a full environmental impact statement for every base or facility closure, no matter how limited. Frankly, I do not agree that current law has that kind of impact. What is important, however, is that the conferees did not intend to exempt the Defense Department from NEPA, but rather simply to return to the situation where the need to provide a full environmental impact statement would depend on the facts and circumstances of the individual case.

While I was not on the floor to hear Senator GRAMM's earlier remarks, my understanding was that he made the same essential point. I do not believe he intends, and in my opinion, a majority of the conferees of both the House and the Senate do not intend, for the Defense Department to ignore NEPA requirements. I believe the real intent of the conferees was to ensure the continued application of NEPA to base closures, but to ensure that full-blown environmental impact statements, and the procedural protection for communities around those bases this process implies, is used only in cases where the environmental impact of the base closure is significant. I have no doubt, for example, the NEPA would fully apply to any attempt to close Great Lakes Naval Station, and that both the House and Senate conferees would want it to apply to a base closure as large as that one. There are many smaller bases and facilities, however, where full environmental impact statements are not necessary.

What the conferees intend, in my view, is for the Defense Department to carefully consider each base closure they might propose, and to apply the complete NEPA procedure in cases where there may be significant environmental impacts resulting from the closure, but not to feel compelled to use the full-blown process where environmental impacts appear to be minimal.

I want to make it clear, Mr. President, that my acceptance of this provision is based on that understanding. If the Defense Department should attempt to go forward on base closures with major potential environmental impacts, and that clearly includes impacts on the communities around those bases, without full consideration of and compliance with the applicable provisions of NEPA, then it will be my intention to bring this issue back before the Senate for further consideration. I am convinced that the Congress would never vote to exempt base closures from NEPA, and that the provisions in the conference report before us today do not accomplish that objective. The Defense Department should have no doubt of congressional intent in this matter, and of how serious an issue it is.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise to commend the conferees for bringing the Senate this conference agreement on the DOD authorization bill. I know the conferees worked long and hard to forge this agreement, solving many difficult policy and program differences. As one who has also been working toward a conference agreement for nearly 2 months now, I think I can speak authoritatively about how hard it can be to get an agreement.

The conference agreement based on CBO's best judgment, equates in a functional total of $303.1 billion, only slightly over the target for defense passed by the Senate.

Once again, I congratulate the distinguished chairman [Senator GOLDWATER] and the members of the committee for their work in arriving at this conference agreement. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting it.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM FOR 1986

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I wish to compliment and congratulate the managers of this conference report, the distinguished chairman of the Armed Service Committee, Mr. GOLDWATER, and the distinguished ranking Democrat on that committee, Mr. NUNN, for their excellent work on this measure. The range of issue addressed in this measure, and the over 1,300 separate matters which had to be resolved by the conferees, testifies to the critical importance of this measure and the skill, energy, and endurance of our conferees.

I am pleased that the funding level approved by the conferees on this measure, which combined with the effects of other defense funding legislation, is some $302.5 billion, reflected the Senate position. This figure represents a zero-percent real growth level for 1986 over 1985, which is a substantial reduction from that proposed by the administration, and represents the lowest real growth in Pentagon programs since the Reagan administration took office. I hope that this outcome will deliver a strong message to the Pentagon leadership that it is imperative to implement major reforms in the way DOD business is done, to end its outrageous pattern of profligate waste. The long trail of costing scandals, and questionable budgeting procedures, has served to erode much of the national consensus underlying a vigorous defense program.

It is my hope that such reforms will, in the long run, enhance our national security by stretching the defense dollar further and achieving better results for the money provided in our authorization and appropriations measure. For our part, I believe the Senate can take pride in the significant number of important changes in the Pentagon procurement process that have been mandated by this measure. Needless to say, we expect them to be implemented vigorously. I greatly appreciate the favorable consideration that was given to a number of proposals that I made in this area and that were approved on the floor when the Senate considered its authorization measure this past May.

These provisions given final approval in the conference report are intended to increase significantly the capabilities of the Defense Department to protect the hard-earned taypayer dollars invested in the weapons and operations of our Armed Forces.

Specifically, the conferees approved my proposal to increase from $10,000 to $1,000,000, the maximum fine which may be imposed on a defense contractor who knowingly submits a false, fictitious, or fraudulent claim for Government payment.

Increasing by 100 times, this maximum criminal fine under the Federal False Claims Act should represent a more effective deterrent to such abuses by multibillion-dollar defense corporations, whose profits often are millions of dollars,

The conferees also approved my amendment to grant subpoena power for certain contractor records and documents to the Director of the Defense Contract Audit Agency, the Pentagon agency with the primary responsibility for guarding against cost abuses.

This provision is intended to increase DCAA's capabilities to scrutinize contractor cost proposals and to reduce delays contractors often seek to create in settling such charges.

Also approved were my amendments establishing an additional penalty on contractors for submitting inaccurate, incomplete, or outdated cost and pricing data, charging interest on penalties for violations of certain cost regulations, and increasing the interest rate that may be imposed on contractor repayments of money owed the Government.

These procurement reform provisions are part of a major package of reforms in this conference report—reforms which are aimed at eliminating the waste, fraud, and abuse the American people have heard so much about in defense programs.

The committee is to be complimented, in particular, for these reform initiatives, and I would like to single out for special praise for his leadership in this area, our distinguished colleague from Michigan, Senator CARL LEVIN.

Senator LEVIN, the ranking minority member of the committee's Defense Acquisition Policy Committee, has been in the forefront of procurement reform efforts, especially in the area of increasing competition in defense procurement, from his first year in the Senate. This was long before procurement reform became the popular crusade it now is. He is to be particularly commended for his continuing leadership in this complex area so important to protecting our taxpayers and strengthening our military capabilities.

Mr. President, the conference report before us also makes important changes in the defense budget priorities proposed by the administration for fiscal year 1986. The conferees have struck a better balance between maintaining our strategic nuclear forces and improving our conventional military capabilities, which are in greater need of strengthening.

In this regard, I am also gratified that the conferees accepted my amendments on our Nation's Strategic Bomber Program. The amendments provided that the Stealth programs are of such a critical nature to our strategic triad that they should be full funded, and that the funding cannot be reprogrammed or used for any other purpose. I note that the conference did in fact fully fund those programs. The amendments also expressed the sense of the Congress that the B-1 Program should be capped at 100 aircraft, and we would not welcome a Pentagon request for any additional B-1's. Indeed, the conference also accepted an amendment by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. KENNEDY, which I strengthened by way of a modification on the Senate floor, that the Pentagon may not expand any funds for research, development, design, demonstration, or procurement of more than 100 B-1 bombers—including any derivative or modified version of that aircraft. The clear intent of the decisions by the conferees is that a fully funded Stealth Program is expected, and the earliest operational capability of that aircraft is desired.

By these actions, the conferees have stated clearly that the most cost-effective way of maintaining our nuclear deterrent strength is to deploy the Stealth bomber as soon as possible.

The conferees also are to be commended for adding $100 million to reduce the risk in the program to develop the midgetman small intercontinental ballistic missile. This missile has greater potential to be a more survivable deterrent weapon than does the vulnerable MX missile.

The conference report also contains $2.75 billion for the strategic defense initiative, or Star Wars Program, a much more reasonable funding level than the $3.7 billion originally proposed. The final amount provided a vigorous research program which can be managed much more effectively and with far less risk of wasted resources.

Regarding improvements to our conventional forces, the conferees made a wise decision to authorize increases in our combat readiness accounts for aircraft flying hours, ship steaming days, unit field exercises, depot maintenance, and real property maintenance. These activities are critical to maintaining and improving our daily combat readiness.

The conferees also authorized 18 percent more combat and support aircraft, including the additional C-130-type aircraft I supported for our Reserve Forces, 44-percent more missiles, torpedoes, and mines, and 19-percent more tracked combat vehicles than in the current fiscal year.

I also was pleased that the conferees decided to adopt the Senate position granting a 3-percent increase, effective October 1, 1985, in basic pay, basic allowance for subsistence, and basic allowance for quarters for military personnel. Our patriotic and high-quality military men and women deserve this pay raise for their many sacrifices in the defense of our country. This pay raise only partially restores the lost resources they have suffered in comparison to salaries they could earn in civilian life.

Finally, I am pleased to note that the conference accepted in its entirety the amendment I offered to require the President to report on the dangers to the national security associated with the loss of domestic ferroalloy production capacity. The ability to make feroalloys from the raw materials is an essential component of our defense preparedness. I am pleased that this important problem will be addressed. Our security depends upon a sound industrial base, no less than upon adequate military strength.

I urge adoption of this conference report.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I support the conference report on the DOD Authorization Act, although I have many serious reservations about several of the provisions—particularly those relating to SDI, chemical weapons, MX and antisatellite weapons. Nonetheless, I believe that the conferences made important improvements in this legislation, and I believe that it deserves the support of the full Senate.

I will not repeat at length my concern about the SDI and ASAT programs and the dangers they pose to stability and deterrence. While the conferees did reduce funding for SDA, and limit the number of ASAT tests, these two programs will continue to go forward at a pace and in a manner that could jeopardize the ABM Treaty and begin a new round of escalation of the arms race in offensive and defensive weapons.

By any objective assessment, the current SDI regime will surely and inevitably break the ABM Treaty before the conclusion of the period of so-called research. Even before any technical violations occur, however, is the more fundamental problem that the SDI Program represents a kind of anticipatory breach of the ABM Treaty, a clear signal to the Soviet Union that, if our scientists are successful in their research, we intend to deploy a system that would abrogate the treaty. Under these circumstances, it is difficult to imagine why the administration would think that the Soviets should be willing to constrain their own ABM efforts—much less reduce their offensive weapons—while we move full bore ahead with ours.

If we are serious about getting the Soviets to address their apparent violations of the treaty, such as the Krasnoyarsk radar, we should be prepared to limit our own efforts and abide by the limitations of the treaty—in letter and spirit.

The ABM Treaty has been one of our most successful arms control agreements. Without it, any hope for significant reductions in offensive arms will be erased.

I am deeply troubled by the conferees decision to allow the Air Force to proceed with testing the F-15 antisatellite system. We have a unique opportunity to conclude a treaty that would dramatically restrict antisatellite weapons, and so help assure the survivability of our critical early warning, communication, navigation, and intelligence satellites.

The Soviet Union now possesses only a rudimentary low-altitude ASAT system which poses no threat to our most valuable high-altitude satellites. Moreover, the Soviets have not tested their system in some time. We can take advantage of the de facto moratorium and seek to at least try and negotiate a treaty—or move ahead with our test program and perhaps jeopardize any hope for an end to the arms race in space.

I oppose the decision to resume production of new chemical weapons. Although I share my colleagues concern about the Soviet chemical weapons program, I am not convinced that our deterrent is so degraded that we should undermine the credibility of our chemical arms control proposal in Geneva by joining those who continue active chemical weapons programs. In addition to jeopardizing the success of the proposed treaty tabled by Vice President Bush, our decision to resume chemical weapons production will almost surely raise the likelihood of chemical weapons proliferation and use by other nations.

While I continue to be concerned about these important strategic programs, I take heart in the work the conference committee has done with the remainder of the bill. The legislation provides important funding for vital conventional weapons programs that form our best hope to reduce our reliance on a nuclear response. Important research and development efforts have been preserved that will allow us to take advantage of our technological superiority to outthink and outmaneuver our opponents on the modern battlefield. A small but significant step has been taken in attempting to redress our dramatic shortfall in munitions—though much more needs to be done.

Most important of all, are the people programs—without which all the sophisticated weaponry would be for naught.

In particular, I want to call my colleagues' attention to a number of important provisions of this bill that affect military personnel and their families. First, the bill preserves the 3-percent pay raise for the full fiscal year—the position of the Senate (the House delayed the pay raise till January 1, 1986). The conferees adopted a number of provisions that will ease the financial burden of travel and PCS moves on the military family—the costs of which are not now adequately reimbursed by the military. The conferees agreed to initiate a dental benefit plan under CHAMPUS—a provision sponsored in the House by Congresswoman SCHROEDER and which was a part of my own bill, S. 1123, the Military Family Act. Several other provisions of that legislation—concerning spouse employment, education for dependents, and increased attention to the problems of families were also retained in the conference report. Many of these legislative provisions were offered in the Senate by the chairman of our Manpower Subcommittee, Senator WILSON, and myself. Taken together, these provisions show a growing awareness of the importance of the military family to the readiness and morale of our forces. I am also pleased that Chairman WILSON has agreed to hold hearings on the quality and availability of military medical care, and would give specific attention to such pressing areas as coverage for organ transplants, and protection against the costs of catastrophic illness. I want to commend Senator WILSON, who has shown great leadership in this area.

There are many other important provisions in this legislation. Significant procurement policy reforms have been adopted, including measures that would help eliminate conflict of interest and restore public confidence in the procurement process. Increased attention to competition—as evidenced by the decision to establish a competition for fighter aircraft in fiscal year 1986—is a welcomed development. The hasty revision of base closing law adopted in our committee has been substantially and sensibly rewritten. The Senate has agreed to drop its provision which would have undermined the Davis-Bacon Act. This provision, which survived in the Senate only by virtue of a tie vote on my amendment to delete it, did not follow the normal committee process, being adopted instead without hearings and without the benefit of consideration by the committee of jurisdiction—the Labor and Human Resources Committee. In addition the conferees dropped the Armed Services Committee provision on Walsh-Healey in favor of the more carefully crafted version adopted by the Labor Committee.

In conclusion I want to commend our chairman, Senator GOLDWATER and our ranking minority member, Senator NUNN, for their diligent efforts in bringing back to the Senate this conference report. It has been a great pleasure to work with them in helping to draft this legislation which is so vital to our national security.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I want to thank all the members of the Senate Armed Services Committee for their diligence in producing a DOD authorization bill. In cooperation with their colleagues on the House Armed Services Committee, the conferees demonstrated great determination in refraining from any significant cuts in the military budget that would have impaired this Nation's defense. That, Mr. President, is sound defense policy.

The task the conference committee had before them was a challenging one. Many issues divided the conferees. Nevertheless, they came up with a defense authorization bill that will maintain the progress that this Nation's military has made over the last 4 years. Difficult issues, like binary chemical weapons. MX, SDI, ASAT, were dealt with an unusual, yet refreshing, bipartisan manner. Perhaps the most important part of the bill included changes in the way the Pentagon purchases equipment and services. Much was accomplished given the pressure to reduce the Federal deficit.

There are many individuals, from both sides of the aisle and Chambers who deserve a great deal of credit. However, the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, Senator GOLDWATER, deserves a great deal of the credit. For he, in cooperation with Senator NUNN, ranking minority member of the committee, insured that we would have a good, practical piece of legislation—one that supports our national defense.

The conferees, reflecting the prevailing views of both Chambers, have shown resolve in completing the task of rearming America as we try to establish a fiscal year 1986 budget. It proved that we can work together on issues that sometimes divide us. I hope this cooperation can extend to other issues facing this Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I want to correct report language associated with an amendment of mine on the recording of should cost information. This amendment is section 917 of the conference report.

Mr. President, I should like to read a paragraph in the report language pertaining to my should cost amendment. I quote from page 6646 of the July 29, 1985 RECORD:

> This provision is intended to require no new additional information from contractors, only that contractors—and I want to emphasize these words

> —provide to the Department of Defense information they already gather and correlate. The Department of Defense has indicated that this legislative requirement will necessitate the development of new systems and procedures for recording data related to defense contracts. Because no implementation date is specified, it is understood that these requirements apply to negotiated major system contracts and the major subcontracts entered into after the date of enactment of this legislation. In addition, it is recognized that regulations implementing this language must, in accordance with Public Law 98-577 and Public Law 98-525, be published for public comment for at least 30 days prior to their implementation.

In response to these points, I should like to make the following comments.

Mr. President, where in the amendment does it say: "Provide to DOD?" Or even correlate? There is no requirement to provide information to the Department of Defense in this amendment. The amendment reads, "cause to be recorded." I want to make perfectly clear for everybody in this body that the Department of Defense has acknowledged this point in testimony—that "provide to DOD" is not part of the amendment.

The second point I want to make is that no new systems are required for recording. The amendment allows that the recording be done by the contractors, as it is currently done. We want to make that very clear. When our amendment was adopted, we were not asking for a whole bunch of new information, or something out of the clear blue sky. We were asking for information that already exists.

The third point I want to make is this: The requirements of the amendment do not apply to only—and I quote the report—"negotiated major systems contracts and the major contracts entered into after the date of enactment of this legislation."

In fact, the requirements apply to all contracts, past, present, and future, including those currently in development and production.

The report language acknowledges that the information exists presently. The report language already recognizes that. Obviously, that information is based on past and current contracts, and that is the express intent of this legislation.

Furthermore, the amendment—and I should like to read the first paragraph of the amendment that the Senate receded to—defines covered contracts as follows:

> A contract that is awarded by a defense agency using procedures as defined in chapter 137 of this title, and that is subject to the provisions of section 2306 of this title, including contracts for full-scale engineering, development or production.

I say to the Senate that it seems clear to me that this paragraph covers a contract so awarded, whether past, present, or future.

I should also like to quote from House debate a statement by Representative RUSSO of Illinois:

> This amendment would apply to both ongoing contracts and future contract negotiations.

Thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS], is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NICKLES). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 94, nays 5, as follows:

NOT VOTING—1

Symms

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I sought recognition at this time in order that I may ask the distinguished majority leader—there are a goodly number of Senators on the floor—as to what the program is for the rest of the day, tomorrow, and the rest of the week, if the distinguished majority leader can tell us.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, if the distinguished minority leader will yield, we will take up the resolution for the conference of test-ban treaty by agreement. I am not certain whether there will be amendments to that or how long the debate might occur. I assume there will be, sooner or later, a record vote requested on that amendment. Then we hope to turn to five items that we think we have an agreement on, veterans' judicial review, 1-year extension of the so-called ICE Program, Handicapped Children's Protection Act, Indian education bill, and veteran's health care. We would like to do those this evening. They can be done very quickly. Then I hope to bring up the Compact of Free Association tonight, but I now understand that there is some confusion on the administration's position. There are different agencies which have different views. I am advised by the distinguished chairman of the committee, Senator MCCLURE. that is probably not going to be possible. Is that correct?

Mr. MCCLURE. Will the Senator yield? I thank the Senator for yielding. I think there is some doubt right now as to whether we will be able to get to it today, but before the end of the day, we ought to know whether it will be possible at all to get to it this week.

Mr. DOLE. It may be that we will find another item to bring up this evening. I am advised by the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee that he would like very much to bring up the energy appropriations bill, energy and water appropriations bill, at the earliest possible time. We hope to have some disposition of that.

I am about convinced that there is no way we will report out a farm bill, and the only way we will get action or even discussion on a farm bill is to try to amend the bill that is on the calendar. So that might happen tomorrow. I know there will be opposition to that. But I think we ought to know where the opposition comes from. And, in addition to that, to the balance of the week, supplemental appropriations conference report, I will be making a unanimous-consent request on the Japan trade bill, South African conference report, if that is available, and perhaps the budget resolution conference report to fill out the balance of the week.

Mr. BYRD. What about the legislative appropriation? That was reported on the 25th.

Mr. DOLE. The chairman did not indicate. He may have meant to include that. I can check that. I understand that does not take a great deal of time.

Mr. BYRD. Does the distinguished majority leader expect to keep the Senate in late today or can you tell us about when the Senate might go home for the day?

Mr. DOLE. If we can complete action on the Mathias-Kennedy resolution fairly quickly, then I think we can turn to the unanimous-consent items and probably announce no additional rollcall votes tonight.

Mr. KENNEDY. If I can have the attention of the majority leader, we are quite prepared to enter into a time limit with the majority leader. I think we can dispose of this in less than an hour if the majority leader wants to propound a unanimous-consent agreement, and limit it even to a half hour. I think we can accommodate the Members in terms of the time. I have four or five Members who indicated they would like to speak, but I think they would speak very briefly and we could accommodate the calendar.

Mr. DOLE. I doubt we can reach a time agreement at this time. I have been notified by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming that he is not interested in a time agreement. I have just been advised by the chairman that he may have a substitute. Senator LUGAR may have a substitute. So perhaps we might as well commence action on that item to see where it goes.

Mr. BYRD. So the distinguished majority leader is saying, if I understand him correctly, that there will likely be another rollcall vote or votes before the Senate goes out for the evening and mainly in connection with the resolution that is offered by Mr. KENNEDY.

Mr. DOLE. That is correct.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT REQUEST—S. 1404

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, before we turn to the resolution of Senators KENNEDY and MATHIAS, I would like to propound a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate proceeds to the consideration of Calendar No. 226, S. 1404, a bill to require the President to respond to unfair trade practices of Japan, it be considered under the following time agreement: 1 hour of debate on the bill to be equally divided between the chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. PACKWOOD], and the ranking minority member [Mr. LONG], or their designees; 1 hour of debate on all first-degree amendments, to be equally divided; 30 minutes on all second-degree amendments, to be equally divided; 10 minutes of debate on any debatable motions, appeals, or points of order, if submitted, to be equally divided;

That no motions to recommit shall be in order; that no other amendments except those dealing with the subject of trade with Japan shall be in order;

And that the agreement be in the usual form, with respect to the division and control of time.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I am reluctant to object, I will have to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

COMPREHENSIVE NUCLEAR TEST BAN TREATY RESOLUTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order the clerk will report S.J. Res. 179 by title.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S.J. Res. 179) requesting the President of the United States to resume negotiations with the Soviet Union for a verifiable comprehensive test ban treaty.

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I offer this resolution in behalf of myself and the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), as well as Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. KERRY, Mr. MELCHER, and Mr. CRANSTON.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. BUMPERS) be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleagues in offering this joint resolution expressing the sense of Congress that—in light of this week's United States and Soviet proposals on nuclear testing—the President should propose to the U.S.S.R. an immediate resumption of negotiations to achieve a verifiable comprehensive ban on all nuclear tests. These negotiations were broken off in 1982.

Last year, the Senate adopted a similar resolution offered by Senator MATHIAS and myself by 77 to 22. Every President since President Eisenhower has supported and worked for a comprehensive test ban. They all shared the conviction that a comprehensive test ban is essential to halting the nuclear arms race. It is not a partisan or ideological issue. Just yesterday, Senator MCCLURE from Idaho—with whom we often differ on arms control—expressed his support for this concept included in this resolution.

The United States made a commitment to a comprehensive test ban—in the Limited Test Ban Treaty of 1963 and the Non-Proliferation Treaty of 1968. Recent events—including the beginning of arms talks in Geneva, the announcement of a summit this fall, and now the exchange of United States and Soviet proposals on testing—represent a new, more promising climate for arms control. And a comprehensive test ban offers an early opportunity for a meaningful agreement. Substantial progress was made in the late 1970's toward concluding a comprehensive test ban. The Soviets at that time even agreed during those discussions to on-site inspection.

I had the opportunity at that time to be a Senate delegate to those arms control talks and even sat in while the negotiations were taking place. Very substantial progress was made during those negotiations. The talks themselves were interrupted in 1979, but they were not terminated until 1982.

The Soviets also agreed to accept the placement sensors within the Soviet Union and the United States. There was a discussion about exactly what number and types would be necessary in order to give adequate verification. But the issues of verification were very considerably discussed. Although no outcome was actually reached, these items were very much on the minds of the negotiators.

Our resolution does not seek unilateral or unverifiable measures. We believe that an effective test ban treaty must include appropriate verification, and that negotiations are essential to ensure adequate verification. But nothing can be achieved if both sides do not sit down and talk. The people of the world have every reason to expect the United States to respond to the Soviet Union's proposal by offering a suggestion that could mean real progress toward reducing the danger of nuclear war. As we approach the 40th anniversary of the Hiroshima bomb on August 6, there would be no more fitting commemoration than an agreement to resume negotiations to end nuclear testing for all time.

I would point out, Mr. President, that at the present time we do have negotiations on a number of arms control issues ongoing. Those negotiations include the issue of Star Wars, theater nuclear weapons, as well as strategic weapons. So those are being negotiated at the present time.

I, for one, wish there had been greater progress. But nonetheless I think all of us are very hopeful that as a result of the pre-summit negotiations and perhaps at the summit itself there might be some additional breakthrough on those particular areas which are in active negotiation.

But there are effectively no serious negotiations involving nuclear testing.

Mr. President, a comprehensive test ban concept which has been endorsed by every President since President Eisenhower. It seems to me, Mr. President, that it would be appropriate, given the actions which have been taken this week by the United States and the U.S.S.R. on nuclear moratorium. None of us who are supporting this particular proposal are making a judgment about what Secretary Gorbachev's motivation is in making his proposal. We have also seen the initiatives by the United States to invite inspection for American testing in the United States. It does seem to me that given these developments that adoption of this resolution would be an important and vital signal that we in the United States are deadly serious on the question of trying to reach a test ban, with all of its positive implications in terms of proliferation of nuclear weapons, and its implications for limiting the future escalation of the arms race. This circumstance offers an opportunity that should not be dismissed out of hand.

All we are asking for is negotiations. This resolution is not unilateral in any respect. It asks for negotiations and there is every hope that, with those negotiations, we could achieve a successful resolution as to how we might be able to bring about a cessation of nuclear tests, which assuring adequate verification to preserve our security interests. If we were able to do so, Mr. President, I quite sincerely doubt that there could be any step taken that would be more meaningful in terms of making an important contribution to slowing down the arms race.

Mr. MOYNIHAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the resolution and ask unanimous consent to be included as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I would like to state a very simple, very direct proposition to this body and, in turn, to the executive.

It is an extraordinary fact that, by 1979, just a few years back—6 years ago; we could reach back and touch it—the United States and the Soviet Union and the United Kingdom could be said to have, in effect, reached agreement on a comprehensive test ban treaty. The negotiations had been going on a long while, as the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts observed. They began with President Eisenhower, and continued intermittently through five succeeding administrations. By 1979, agreement had been reached among the three powers that they would enter into that test ban and each party would allow monitors on its soil, placed by the other parties to the agreement, to verify the matter.

The issue was why do you have to have seismic instruments on the soil of the other country? Simply because, at the lowest levels of explosions, the external seismic devices are not reliable. This is a fact of geology and physics and understood. And, in a quite extraordinary departure, the Soviet Union agreed to have 10 devices placed within its borders. We did the same. There remained to be negotiated just how many would be placed in the United Kingdom.

It is a fact that the United Kingdom does not carry out explosions within that small island. The number of monitors, and their location, was a matter of negotiations—two, three, four, whatever—but the issue was clearly within the power of the negotiators to resolve, having already reached the basic agreement between the Soviet Union and the United States to exchange national technical means.

It happened, Mr. President, that in 1979, President Carter, thinking to advance the SALT II agreement, decided not to press to completion a comprehensive test ban treaty such that it might be signed and brought to the Senate. He felt that the one would interfere with the other and that the strategic arms treaty was more important.

It may have been, but nothing came of it. SALT II, too, never even came to the floor after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. But there remains on the record this extraordinary near agreement. Surely we ought to resume negotiations toward a comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. President, in conclusion I wish also to mention, as the 40th anniversary of the August 6, 1945, Hiroshima explosion approaches, an essay published recently by Dr. Glenn Seaborg, the discoverer of plutonium. The second of the two weapons used in World War II, on August 9, 1945, was a plutonium weapon.

In 1942, Dr. Glenn T. Seaborg led a team of scientists who successfully isolated plutonium, the explosive ingredient in the first of many such nuclear weapons. For this work Dr. Seaborg was awarded the Nobel Prize for chemistry. He later served for a decade, 1961 to 1971, as Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission.

In an essay published in The New York Times on July 16, Dr. Seaborg renews his call for the adoption of a nuclear test ban treaty. He writes that:

> While other scientific discoveries in the past may have had an equal or greater effect on man's existence, . . . no other exploded in his face as did . . . plutonium. . . . Plutonium today serves as an explosive ingredient in tens of thousands of nuclear weapons. . . . I am afraid there is too large a probability that these will be unleashed unless substantive progress in arms limitation and cutback is achieved. In my opinion, the initial most effective and easily defined step in this direction is a verifiable ban on all testing of nuclear weapons—a comprehensive test ban.

Few persons can speak from such a wealth of experience and attention to the subject of nuclear weaponry. Dr. Seaborg's words ought to be considered carefully.

In the context of this 40th year, he has specifically said that no more important measure is available that could be taken than to agree to comprehensive test ban. The powers involved have almost reached that point. They have committed themselves to do so under the nonproliferation treaty and the Limited Test Ban Treaty of 1963. We have, in effect, committed ourselves to such measures. We owe it to ourselves, we owe it to the 100-odd nations that joined in the nonproliferation treaty, we owe it to mankind to pursue these matters. We are so close to success, it would be absurd not to press further the last few miles of negotiations.

I commend Dr. Seaborg's essay to the attention of the Senate and ask that his article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From The New York Times, July 16, 1985]

MAN'S FIRST GLIMPSE OF PLUTONIUM

(Glenn Theodore Seaborg directed the group of chemists who isolated plutonium and other transuranium elements, and for this work he and Edwin M. McMillan shared the 1951 Nobel Prize in chemistry. Dr. Seaborg, chairman of the United States Atomic Energy Commission from 1961 to 1971, is now a leading proponent of a nuclear arms test ban. He is a member of the National Commission on Excellence in Education.)

(By Glenn T. Seaborg)

Other scientific discoveries in the past may have had an equal or greater effect on man's existence, but no other exploded in his face as did the first man-made element, plutonium. The announcement to the world of its existence was in the form of the nuclear bomb dropped over Nagasaki.

My colleagues and I synthesized, identified and determined the key nuclear properties of plutonium in late 1940 and early 1941 in Berkeley using the cyclotrons of the late Ernest O. Lawrence. My co-workers were Joe Kennedy and Ed McMillan, junior faculty members, Emilio Segre, a research associate, and Art Wahl, a graduate student.

The experiments, performed at our own initiative before the United States entered World War II, were part of our regular academic research program, and the results were voluntarily withheld from publication and kept secret when their importance became apparent to us.

On the stormy night of Feb. 23, 1941, Art Wahl performed the oxidation that gave us proof that what we had made was chemically different from all other known elements. It was the first realization of the alchemist's dream of large-scale transmutation, the first synthetic element seen by man.

That experiment, and the first chemical identification of the element with the atomic number 94, took place in Room 307 of Gilman Hall. This form of the element was known as plutonium-238.

Almost concurrent with this work was our successful attempt to synthesize and determine the essential nuclear properties of the form of major importance, plutonium-239. In an experiment on March 28, 1941, we demonstrated that this undergoes fission with slow neutrons with a large probability, revealing that it had the potential for serving as the explosive ingredient of a nuclear bomb.

We first suggested a name for this element in a report to the Uranium Committee in Washington in March 1942. I remember very clearly the debates within our small group as to what that name should be. For a while—in retrospect, very foolishly—we considered such names as "extremium" and "ultimium," on the basis that this must be the heaviest element that it would be possible to synthesize. (How silly such a name would seem today when scientists have succeeded in synthesizing elements up to and including that with the atomic number 109.) Noting that natural uranium, number 92, had been named after the planet Uranus, and that McMillan had suggested that the next element, number 93, be named neptunium after Neptune, the next planet after Uranus, we decided to name our element after Pluto.

We debated whether that name should be "plutium" or "plutonium," the sound of which we liked much better. We decided to take the name that sounded better, and which, I believe, is also etymologically correct. There was also a great deal of debate about what we should suggest as the chemical symbol. Although it should more logically have been "Pl," we decided on "Pu" because we liked the sound of it much better. We expected a much greater reaction than we ever received to this suggestion.

I moved to the Metallurgical Laboratory of the University of Chicago on April 19, 1942, my 30th birthday, to work on the chemical processes that would be used for the extraction of plutonium from uranium and the highly radioactive fission products following its synthesis through the nuclear chain reaction. Here we worked with cyclotron-produced plutonium on a scale of less than one-millionth part of an ounce. We were all very excited when we saw the first speck on Aug. 20, 1942, and when we were able to weigh one ten-millionth of an ounce of it on Sept. 10, 1942.

Most of our tiny Chicago supply of plutonium was lent in the summer of 1943 to Los Alamos for a crucial experiment. In returning the sample to the Metallurgical Laboratory, advantage was taken of my presence in Santa Fe on a short vacation trip, in order to save the time which would have been lost in a cumbersome official transfer of the material. A Los Alamos physicist, Robert Wilson, met Mrs. Seaborg and me at breakfast at about 5 A.M. in a Santa Fe restaurant, having escorted the sample from Los Alamos with the implied protection of a high-powered rifle. I then transported the sample by train in my suitcase, without benefit of firearms, back to Chicago.

Many of us found it necessary on an almost routine basis to circumvent misguided, progress-impeding security rules in order to get our job done in the limited time available. However, these were not actions that could have revealed substantive secret information, and, as is well known, the wartime development of the atomic bomb was extraordinarily successful from the standpoint of keeping it secret.

Unfortunately much outmoded security apparatus is in operation today. It would be a major scandal if the public were informed of the amount of time, effort and money wasted today to protect trivial, harmless and even publicly known information that is still classified as confidential and secret.

Plutonium today serves as an explosive ingredient in tens of thousands of nuclear weapons in the possession of both the East and the West, poised for obliterative use in a dangerously unstable situation. I am afraid there is too large a probability that these will be unleashed unless substantive progress in arms limitation and cutback is achieved. In my opinion, the initial most effective and easily defined step in this direction is a verifiable ban on all testing of nuclear weapons—a comprehensive test ban.

It is a source of frustration to me that so many ardent and well-meaning proponents of arms limitation do not concentrate on this as a first step, but rather lend their efforts to objectives that will require very laborious effort toward much better definition and which should more logically follow as succeeding steps on a longer time scale.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I also support the Kennedy-Mathias resolution. Let me just read the Resolved section of the resolution. It is very brief.

That it is the sense of the Congress that at the earliest possible date, the President of the United States should propose to the Soviet Union the immediate resumption of negotiations toward the conclusion of a verifiable comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. President, we are on the spot. The Premier of the Soviet Union, Mr. Gorbachev, has announced a suspension of testing by the Soviet Union beginning August 6. He has done that as the basis for beginning negotiations with this country on the Test Ban Treaty. We have a promise—this country has made a pledge. I want to read to the Senate the pledge we made, ratified by the U.S. Senate.

In 1963, we adopted a limited test ban treaty. In the preamble to that treaty, this Nation agreed to the following assertion:

Seeking to achieve the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time, determined to continue negotiations to this end—

Determined to continue negotiations to this end. That was a pledge, the word of this country. Let me underline that, Mr. President, because in 1974 we made it even more explicit.

In the 1974 treaty, we had a treaty that limited the size of underground explosions. In that treaty between the two superpowers, we moved out of the preamble right down to the articles of agreement. Paragraph 3 of article 1 of the treaty reads as follows in its entirety—it is very brief, one sentence.

The parties shall continue their negotiations with a view toward achieving a solution to the problem of cessation of all underground nuclear weapons tests.

Mr. President, we promised that; we pledged it. It seems to me the word of this country is being challenged. We made that commitment. We are not asking that any particular agreement be accepted. We are simply asking that our President appoint negotiators.

Obviously, we must be completely satisfied that the treaty is verifiable. This is not a unilateral action. It would be entirely within the power of the President of the United States once those negotiations are started to reject an agreement. We are simply asking that negotiations begin. And we have a promise to do that.

It seems to me, Mr. President, this is the least the United States can do in view of the fact that twice—not once but twice—we have made this commitment. Our word is at stake. We ought to keep our word.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I also rise in support of the resolution and applaud the distinguished Senators from Massachusetts and Maryland for bringing this very timely resolution before the Senate. We have a test ban treaty, which the Senator from Wisconsin has alluded to, that was signed in 1963. It is what we call the Limited Test Ban Treaty, but it really is a ban on atmospheric testing. But underground testing has continued.

Do you know how many there were in the world last year? Between the United States and the Soviet Union, 43 nuclear explosions underground, and 17 already this year. And that doesn't include the French, British, or Chinese. We first began to get upset about the effects of nuclear testing back in 1959 when we took that first, small, embryonic step and signed what we call the Antarctica Treaty, which, among other things, banned all nuclear tests in Antarctica. It does not sound very important but that was a remote area which people were looking at, at the time for doing nuclear testing.

Then we followed that by the well-documented Limited Test Ban Treaty. That was the time when President Kennedy brought great favor on the United States by stepping out with confidence and stability and perception and said: "We are going to quit testing in the atmosphere and, Mr. Khrushchev, we invite you to follow suit." The Soviets at that time were agitated, and they said: "This is fine for you because you are way ahead of us." And so they went ahead with testing and then they quit, and then a treaty conference was convened and within 8 weeks, we had a very significant treaty signed with the Soviet Union and, to my knowledge, it has never been violated by either side.

And then in 1967, because we were beginning to send vehicles into space, people knew the mindset of some people would be, "Let's start testing in space; there is no prohibition against it there." So, in 1967, we negotiated a ban on space testing and deployment of nuclear weapons. It did not take very long, but it was an important step in this whole picture.

Then, in 1974, we signed the Threshold Test Ban Treaty which said no more underground testing of nuclear bombs with explosive power in excess of 150 kilotons. Even though we had been abiding by it, that treaty has never been ratified by the U.S. Senate. And then we followed that, in 1976, with what we call the Peaceful Nuclear Explosion Treaty, which would extend the limits to all nonweapons nuclear explosions—and it, too, has not been ratified by the U.S. Senate.

And, in 1982, the United Nations, everybody's favorite whipping boy, voted 111 to 1 to ban all nuclear testing of all kinds. Guess who was the one? One hundred eleven to one. The United States voted no, with 35 abstentions. And in July 1982, at the same time as the famous walk in the woods by the Soviet Ambassador to the intermediate arms talks with our own Ambassador Paul Nitze, took place, the United States announced it would not resume negotiations on a Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty, and we have not been back. A comprehensive test ban treaty has been sought by every President since President Eisenhower, except the present occupant of the White House.

Mr. President, I wish sometimes, as I suspect some of my colleagues do, that I were President for a day or two. First of all, if I had been President the day before yesterday, I would have preempted Secretary Gorbachev because I would have made the offer of a testing moratorium to him first. A linchpin of Soviet foreign policy is to drive a wedge between the United States and our NATO allies. How do you think it is going to play in Western Europe for Secretary Gorbachev to say, "We are going to ban all nuclear testing for 5 months," and we say, "We will never do that, but we will let you come over and watch us explode one."

Can anybody tell me what sense that makes? Who is supposed to be impressed with such an offer? They do their own underground tests. They do not need to come to monitor one of ours. But if I were President today and had already been preempted by Secretary Gorbachev with this bold move on his part, I would have said, "Mr. Secretary, I will see your 5 months and raise you three," and see how he responded to that. He is new. We are not dealing with the Moscow geriatric unit any longer. The Soviets have by their standards—and incidentally, according to mine any more—a very young leader, and a Politburo being filled with like kind.

Now, I do not really know ever quite what Soviet intentions are. It pays to have a very healthy skepticism and questionable attitude about Soviet conduct in military and foreign affairs. But here is a new leader of the Soviet Union taking a very bold step and saying, "We are not going to test anymore for 5 months. How about joining us?" And we sputter around and say, "No, we know you just conducted some tests recently and you probably got all the information you need, but we have some more tests we want to do." In the scheme of things, I ask you, Mr. President, what could that possibly amount to? The answer is, "Not very much." You may say, "Well, we can't verify such a treaty." And yet studies show that we most certainly can monitor explosions of under 150 kilotons. As a matter of fact, we are developing the technology where we can even monitor 1 kiloton explosions. And as our electronics and other technologies improve at their current rapid pace, we'll probably be able to do even better than that. But why get into all of that? Why not negotiate that? Why not do what the resolution calls for and send an Ambassador back to the negotiations, and because of that deep distrust between the United States and the Soviet Union and who will violate it and who will not, let them negotiate a treaty that requires whatever it takes to verify the treaty.

It is my belief that we now or soon will have the technology of verifying such a treaty. And so I say why not. We are not even saying, "Yes, we are going to abide by the moratorium." What we are saying is, "Let us send somebody back to Geneva and sit down and start talking about the possibility of eliminating these underground tests." There again in the scheme of what is going on in the nuclear arms race it is not very much. It is what Neil Armstrong I guess would call, "One small step for mankind." But I can tell you that if the people of Hiroshima, who on August 6 are going to be memorializing their own holocaust, had a chance as citizens of that city to sit in the U.S. Senate on this one very insignificant small step, it would not take them very long to cut through the rhetoric and the politics of this issue, and I feel certain that my colleagues will do likewise. I certainly so urge them.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, my colleagues—and I shall be very brief—I join in support of this resolution and will add a few words to what my colleague from Arkansas has just said. We are on a course that has to be reversed. As a matter of fact, when I first really sensed what kind of a world we are living in was in Senator BUMPERS' State of Arkansas about 4 years ago.

An Air Force sergeant was walking along and accidentally dropped a wrench. A series of things happened. A Titan missile went up in the air, landed in a wooded field some miles away, and the newspapers reported that it was a 9-megaton warhead.

I got to thinking: I do not really understand what the heck 9 megatons is. So I asked our Congressional Research Service. I said, "Tell me in terms I can understand what 9 megatons means."

They gave me two answers. One is that if you take all the bombs of World War II, including Nagasaki and Hiroshima, they total about 2 megatons. Or, No. 2, in TNT equivalency terms, if you see a car go up in El Salvador or Lebanon, ordinarily that is 1, 2, or 3 tons of TNT. In TNT equivalency terms, a megaton is a railroad freight train, loaded with TNT, 300 miles long; 9 megatons, 2,700 miles long—almost from Los Angeles to Washington, DC.

As everyone in this body knows, we have a lot of warheads much bigger than 9 megatons. The United States today has about 9,500 large strategic warheads. The Soviets have about 9,000. We have, in addition, between us, about 30,000 smaller, tactical nuclear warheads.

We have the ability, within a matter of hours, to create a world where never again is the laughter of a child going to be heard and never again is there going to be a blade of grass grown. Somehow, we have to move away from this course, which is a catastrophic course.

I am a realist. I have been one of those who supported the Trident missile. I support the cruise missile. I did not support the MX and some of the other things.

We cannot just unilaterally disarm. But this resolution says, "Let us agree."

I happen to think that the Senator from Arkansas was absolutely right. Secretary Gorbachev scored a PR victory yesterday, and we should go one up on it. We should say, "Let's not only take the 5 months, but we will volunteer to take sensors in our country if you will do the same."

So far as the technology and the verifiability are concerned, I was one of the delegates to the special U.N. session on disarmament back in 1978. Without getting into classified information—it is probably no longer classified—at that point we could monitor all but the tiniest explosions, and we certainly have not gone backward since then. At that point, the Soviets were willing to put sensors in their country if we did it in ours. This is a minimal kind of step.

What we need, it seems to me—the basic thing we need—is to change the atmosphere.

Some in this Chamber are much more knowledgeable than I. I see the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WARNER], a former Secretary of the Navy, and he knows a lot more about these things than I do.

I think the real question today is not SS-20's, Pershing 2's, and all the other technicalities. The question is, How do we change the atmosphere so that we can move in a constructive direction, so that Soviets and the United States do not misunderstand each other and accidentally bring curtains for everyone?

This is a very modest resolution. It says: "Let's have the United States and the Soviet Union sit down, and let's try to work out a comprehensive, verifiable ban on tests." I think it makes sense. It is so overwhelmingly logical that I hope this body accepts it, and accepts it with not just a 51-to-49 vote but with a resounding vote.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

AMENDMENT NO. 557

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR] proposes an amendment numbered 557:

Add at the end of the Kennedy-Mathias resolution the following new section:

The Congress finds that:

August 6 marks the 40th anniversary of the detonation of the nuclear bomb at Hiroshima;

The Soviet Union has announced its intention to begin a five-month moratorium on nuclear testing on August 6;

A complete cessation of nuclear test explosions must be related to the ability of the United States to maintain credible deterrent forces;

Any test ban agreement must be verifiable and must be made in the context of deep and verifiable arms reductions;

The United States has concluded, based upon a thorough evaluation of the evidence, that the Soviet Union has repeatedly violated the Limited Test Ban Treaty and likely violated the Threshold Test Ban Treaty;

The President has now invited a Soviet team to observe and measure a nuclear test at the Nevada Test Site, without a requirement of reciprocity, or any other conditions;

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 558

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I sent a perfecting amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR] proposes an amendment numbered 558:

At the end of the Lugar amendment, add the following:

It is the sense of the Congress that at the earliest appropriate date, following certification by the President that, in the context of the requirement to maintain a viable nuclear deterrent, of assuring Soviet compliance and of achieving deep reductions in nuclear arms, substantial progress has been made on the verification of nuclear weapons testing, to include onsite monitoring, the President should propose to the Soviet Union the timely resumption of negotiations with the objective of concluding a verifiable comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, let me explain, first of all, the procedure and then make a comment on the substance of these amendments.

The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts and others have offered a joint resolution with regard to a nuclear test ban treaty. The amendment that I offered to that resolution is, in fact, six clauses that state findings. This is additional language to that offered by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts in at least three areas. In short, his language is now a part of the resolution, but I have added three clauses.

In addition to that, I have offered a perfecting amendment, which is the gist of the resolution, that I would substitute for the Kennedy resolution. As opposed to substituting it, I have in fact added to the Kennedy resolution. Indeed, in both cases, Senator KENNEDY and others have added a thought, and the import of what I have attempted to do is to add additional thoughts to that.

The net effect to all this, on which Members may wish to vote in due course, would be, in my judgment to give a more accurate viewpoint of the stance of the Senate if we are to offer advice to the President.

Mr. President, I have taken this action because it seems to me, as stated in the last three findings of the first Lugar amendment, that any test ban agreement must be verifiable and must be made in the context of deep and verifiable arms reductions.

These are the two basic objectives that we are after. They must be constant, at least constantly in front of us, so that we do not get off the track in terms of our basic objectives.

We have proposed to the Soviet Union on many occasions that we believe that deep reductions of weapons are important. We hope that at some point they will wish to enter into negotiations that are serious to destroy substantial numbers of nuclear weapons. But we have also been constant in demanding verification, and that I think has to be uppermost if we are to be offering instructions to our President or suggestions or urgings, as the case may be.

We have also tried to say, at least in this amendment, that the United States has concluded unhappily, based upon a thorough evaluation of the evidence, that the Soviet Union has repeatedly violated the Limited Test Ban Treaty and has likely violated the Threshold Test Ban Treaty.

That is important, Mr. President, to lay before us. We get into these broad discussions of a better world and how it might be achieved through treaty. Sometimes we become very forgetful of even recent history. The facts are the Soviets have violated these treaties. This is an important point, if you are taking a look at the overall picture. It underscores the need for verification.

I submit beyond that, Mr. President, it underscores the very real problem we have that after violations occur, it is not self-evident precisely what is to be done. These treaties are not self-enforcing, not a police force to blow the whistle.

Before in some type of general way we begin offering instructions to our President and ask him to offer them to our negotiators, we better pin down history and pin down precisely what we are after.

I think we ought to recognize this particular exercise comes literally within 48 hours after our President has made a significant proposal to the Soviet Union that he has in fact invited a Soviet team to observe and to measure a nuclear test at the Nevada test site without a requirement of reciprocity or any other condition.

Indeed, Mr. President, I listened to commentators last night on the major television shows; trying to fathcm why we would offer something without reciprocity. It seemed inconceivable that our President would offer something, put something on the table, without wanting to know precisely what there was in return.

Let me just say that anyone offering advice to the President today on how to be more effective, how to be more magnanimous really ought to consider what the man has done in the last 48 hours and that ought to be up front in our findings, not some vague thought that the President has been derelict in pushing these things along. The President is way up front. It ought to be our purpose today to celebrate that fact rather than to leave some vague connotation that this President does not know how to go about negotiating, that he has to be urged and jabbed and pushed by this body. That is nonsense.

So the import of the first Lugar amendment is just to call attention in case Members have not noticed that the President has now invited a Soviet team to come to Nevada on our soil.

Mr. President, the Soviet Union has not ever invited us to do the same. Many Members would anticipate that they might have if they were serious about the whole verification process, but they have not. Perhaps they will as a reciprocal action. I just think it is very important before we get into gratuitous advice, before we begin to spread the thought that somehow this body is out of kilter to the Chief Executive, we better listen to what the President is saying and applaud that fact, and the Lugar amendment does that, and those who vote for that will join in that applause.

Now, Mr. President, as the perfecting amendment reads, and Members have heard the clerk recite it, we do indicate if we must, Congress at the earliest appropriate date will do some urging with the President, but we add these following words:

. . . following certification by the President that, in the context of the requirement to maintain a viable nuclear deterrent, . . .

And that we must maintain in the particular world in which we live . . .

. . . of assuring Soviet compliance and of achieving deep reductions in nuclear arms, substantial progress has been made on the verification of nuclear weapons testing, to include onsite monitoring. . . .

Precisely the invitation that the President has made to the Soviets to come to Nevada to do that.

Mr. President, I think that this is a perfectly straightforward proposition. I would not have chosen this particular time to offer advice to the President. Some have chosen that time and, therefore, we are responding.

I might mention for the sake of Members who are attempting to follow this issue that I have visited with the National Security Council, asked their counsel on this particular issue, and they have offered these thoughts which I have incorporated in this language.

This does not come off the top of my head or with any pride of authorship but rather as a considered thought by our administration as to what would be useful if we must offer advice at all.

But I ask, Mr. President, that Members seriously consider the thought that the adoption of a simple resolution we heard before would undercut the serious and considered proposals the United States has made and made up front and bilateral discussions with the Soviet Union calling for a strenghtened verification of the nuclear testing field.

Furthermore, under current circumstances and given the scale and the scope of Soviet modernization programs, the U.S. restraint, the U.S. testing is necessary to ensure continued credibility and effectiveness of the U.S. nuclear deterrent.

Let me just say that in my judgment, Mr. President, the Kennedy-Mathias, et al., resolution, without the amendments, seems to me to fail to recognize the willingness of the President to go the extra mile in inviting the Soviet experts to observe and measure a nuclear test in order to make progress in resolving serious verification concerns.

Mr. President, this administration is determined to make progress in the area of nuclear testing limitations and will continue to seek ways in which we can correct the serious vertification problems associated with the Threshold Test Ban Treaty and its companion, Peaceful Nuclear Explosion Treaty. If we are to ratify the treaties and implement their verification provisions, there is no assurance these problems will be resolved, notwithstanding the Soviet's contentions to the contrary.

While the United States has been unable to reach a definitive conclusion due to verification uncertainties and ambiguities the evidence does indicate likely Soviet violations of the Threshold Test Band Treaty's 150 kiloton threshold for a number of tests, and the evidence is clear that the Soviet Union has repeatedly violated the Limited Test Ban Treaty.

In an effort to improve our ability to monitor Soviet testing, the United States has sought so far unsuccessfully to engage the Soviet Union in discussions about verification improvements. The Soviet agreement to such negotiations would represent an important step toward developing more effective limitations in the nuclear testing field.

Mr. President, let me adjust these thoughts in concluding this initial argument: The Comprehensive Test Band Treaty continues to be the long-term objective of this administration's arms control policy, when considered in the context of a deep and verifiable arms reduction, improved verification capabilities, expanded confidence-building measures, and the maintenance of effective deterrents, but it is important to keep all of that context in mind if we are to make an important statement and offer consequential advice to the Chief Executive.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LUGAR. Yes; I will be very pleased to yield for a question.

Mr. WARNER. I think the Senator has made a very valuable contribution not only to the pending measure before the body but also in his statements. But I would like to have just a clarification of the second part of the amendment. The phrase is in here of "assuring Soviet compliance." Was that directed to any particular area or overall compliance with arms control agreements?

Mr. LUGAR. It is in the language offered as a part of the general context of considerations. It would be overall assurance. I have mentioned specific problems with the two types of treaties that we have discussed today.

Mr. WARNER. But this is in here for the purposes of broadening it?

Mr. LUGAR. That is correct, broadening our consideration to keep our eye on deep cuts. That really may or may not be a part of the intent of the original authors, but I have added it to that without striking anything that they have said, simply that we may keep ahead of us our overall goal.

Mr. WARNER. So the word "compliance" is all ratified treaties?

Mr. LUGAR. That is correct.

Mr. WARNER. And the second phrase "to include onsite monitoring," could the Senator broaden that? I understand technically what it means.

Mr. LUGAR. Well, the whole concept of onsite monitoring, as the Senator from Virginia knows, includes a number of different ideas. This is not a limiting phrase, but it offers at least any number of possibilities.

Mr. WARNER. That was the precise question. Is it intended to be a limiting phrase or goal?

Mr. LUGAR. It is a goal and it includes any number of tactical steps that one might find leading to that.

Mr. WARNER. I thank the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LUGAR. I thank the Senator for his questions.

I yield the floor.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I am pleased and honored to join once again with the senior Senator from Massachusetts in introducing the joint resolution calling upon the President to resume comprehensive test ban negotiations with the Soviet Union. It is a very simple concept. There is no novelty about it. I think it is well understood in the Senate and it is well understood beyond the Senate. We seek simply to begin to talk again about a comprehensive test ban. So this resolution contains no surprises.

Last year, the Senate, by an overwhelming majority, 77 to 22, voted for a provision containing the same language as the resolution now before us; a provision calling on the President to resume comprehensive test ban negotiations.

The Senator from Indiana, the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, by offering his amendments, has expanded this concept to go beyond comprehensive test ban. I welcome his interest in the broad area of arms control. But historically, the comprehensive test ban has been treated separately. And—as much as I hope that we will some day go as far as the Senator from Indiana has proposed toward achieving reduction of the nuclear arsenals—I think we would be well-advised today to keep to this well-trodden ground that we understand and we know as the comprehensive test ban.

I regret that we have to go over this ground again. I further regret that, by not having acted to resume negotiations for a comprehensive test ban, we have provided the Soviet Union with yet another excuse to portray the United States as the obstacle to peace in the nuclear age.

This call for renewed comprehensive test ban negotiations is based on really an astonishingly simple principle that nations can more easily resolve their differences when they are communicating in a businesslike manner than when they are not. Yesterday's flurry of American and Soviet proposals on the subject of nuclear tests is a promising sign that both sides seek some eventual limitation on nuclear testing. But I think, Mr. President, that the exchange which took place yesterday also demonstrates what can happen when both sides try to communicate by means of the media. Already each side has rejected the other side's proposal and branded it as mere propaganda.

What we are calling for today in this resolution is simply the resumption—not even the new beginning, but the resumption, of old business—the resumption of a businesslike dialog on the important issue of the comprehensive test ban. We are asking the President to go back to the negotiating table for a dialog that was broken off, as the Senator from Massachusetts said, in 1982.

The President's invitation to the Soviet Union to observe and to measure with its own instruments one of our tests clearly demonstrates a belief that cooperative measures can lead to improvement of verification capability. So why should we not get together to discuss cooperative measures that can improve our verification capabilities.

The Soviet Union has already accepted the principle of onsite inspections during past negotiations. I think that fact addresses itself to one of the points in the amendment that has been offered by the Senator from Indiana, because we are all very clear that verification has got to be an integral part of any agreement. It has been agreed on all sides that there will be onsite verification. And if it is agreed on all sides that there is going to be onsite verification, that means adequate onsite verification. I can see no harm, and a great possibility of good, in trying to work out mutually acceptable verification arrangements.

Now, I am mindful that the Senator from Indiana has called on us to address the steps taken by President Reagan. But the history of the comprehensive test ban negotiations is a history longer than that of a single Presidential term, longer than the history of a single administration. The United States pledged to seek a Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty in 1963, when the Limited Test Ban Treaty was signed. But even before that, President Eisenhower—certainly, of all American Presidents, a president who understood the meaning of war, a President who understood what the dawn of the nuclear age meant to warfare—President Eisenhower adopted a policy of seeking a comprehensive test ban. And when, in 1963, we signed the Limited Test Ban Treaty, the preface to that treaty set forth the fact that both sides agreed to seek:

> The discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time.

That is the official commitment of the United States of America. We asserted that both parties were "determined to continue negotiations to this end." I will repeat that, "Determined to continue negotiations to this end."

Now, that pledge to the world was not a passing or an idle thought on the part of the U.S. Government and the people of the United States. That pledge was explicitly reaffirmed and prefaced in the Non-Proliferation Treaty and again in 1974 when the United States and the Soviet Union signed the Threshold Test Ban Treaty. So this is something that we have promised the world again and again and again in the most solemn manner that a nation can undertake to make a promise.

And we have a national interest beyond our own nuclear survival in keeping our promise. The world is approaching the nonproliferation review conference this year, but will also approach the expiration of the Non-Proliferation Treaty in a few years' time. We must consider the smaller nations of the world, the nations of the world that are now nonnuclear, the nations of the world that have so far abided by the Non-Proliferation Treaty. These powers have made in the Non-Proliferation Treaty, the kind of solemn pledges that the United States made when we promised as solemnly as we can that we will at least continue to negotiate for comprehensive ban. If these nations see that we are ignoring that promise, repudiating that promise, I think the world can have very little hope that the commitments made under the Non-Proliferation Treaty will survive.

So there is more at stake here than simply our own desire to reduce the number of nuclear tests. Again, let me give some of the background. It took the Cuban missile crisis of 1962 to shock both sides into the realization that it could happen. The Senator from Mississippi I know well remembers those days in 1962 when we in Washington, I think for the first time, realized that it could happen. We realized that we were for the first time within the bombsights of nuclear bombs, that the nuclear age had dawned with a vengence, and that the dome of this U.S. Capitol was in the bombsight. It was in the shock of that realization that we first accepted the concept of the Limited Test Ban Treaty. Unfortunately, our sustained efforts to continue negotiations toward a verifiable Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty were broken off in 1982. Let us hope that it will not require another experience like the Cuban missile crisis before we shed our complacency and resume comprehensive test ban negotiations.

I am not suggesting that a comprehensive test ban will end the arms race. But I think it can slow it down. I would submit to the Senate that if we had signed a comprehensive test ban agreement in 1963, we might very well have prevented the development of MIRV'd missiles, which most nuclear stategists agree today have led to a more destabilizing nuclear environment than would otherwise exist. The distinguished Senator from Mississippi who has served with such distinction as chairman of the Armed Services Committee can confirm or question this proposition.

We did not heed the warnings of the former Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Brooke, who laid that proposition before the Senate with great force and persuasiveness but without enough votes. Indeed, we are now engaged in an effort to develop a single warhead, mobile missile, the so-called Midgetman, and the whole Midgetman effort is designed to undo the instabilities that were created by MIRV'd technologies—instabilities that could have been avoided if we had reached a comprehensive test ban agreement in the early 1960's.

In addition to stifling the development of destabilizing weapons, a comprehensive test ban agreement would strengthen our efforts to curtail the proliferation of nuclear weapons. As I have said, this September the nations of the world will meet in the Third Review Conference of the nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty. At that time, the 126 signatories to the Non-Proliferation Treaty will examine the effectiveness of that treaty. At the 1980 review conference, the nonalined Third World nations called for an immediate moratorium on nuclear weapons testing.

Not only did the Soviet Union and the United States ignore that plea, but 2 years later the United States withdrew from the comprehensive test ban negotiations. That decision could well make the United States the focus of international anger at the upcoming conference.

The Non-Proliferation Treaty will expire in 10 short years unless the parties agree to extend it. A world in which nuclear weapons are allowed to spread even farther than they now have will be a much more fearful place. We have to set an example to the world by redoubling our efforts to prevent nuclear testing which will be a key step in preventing the spread of nuclear weapons.

Unfortunately, despite the obvious benefits of the comprehensive test ban treaty, the administration has not decided to resume comprehensive test ban negotiations. It has been argued that a comprehensive test ban is not verifiable and, therefore, should not be the topic of negotiations.

I would argue exactly the opposite to my friend, the Senator from Indiana. If you have a question about verification, you should not resist negotiating but you should negotiate all the faster and all the harder. Only through negotiations can we attempt to work out mutually acceptable verification procedures. That such procedures can aid the verification process is illustrated by what has happened this very week when the President of the United States offered to the Soviet Union the opportunity for verification by being physically present at nuclear tests.

The administration has also argued that continued nuclear testing and continued modernization of the weapons arsenal are required to keep the Soviet Union at the negotiating table in Geneva. In other words, that argument must run something like this: That we have to build in order to reduce. But instead of pursuing this policy which seems so contradictory to so many, we would propose that the President should simply resume negotiations for a comprehensive test ban. The people of the world look to America for leadership in the field of arms control. And we must not fail them. We must not fail ourselves. I have great hope that the comprehensive test ban negotiations could produce an agreement that would bring an end to nuclear testing, and that would lead to a safer world. But we will never know that a world free of nuclear testing can be realized if we refuse even to negotiate with the Soviet Union on this critical issue.

I hope, therefore, Mr. President, that the amendments of the Senator from Indiana would be rejected. The very simple, familiar resolution which the Senator from Massachusetts and other cosponsors have joined in offering to the Senate, the same words that were adopted by a vote of 77 to 22 in the Senate last year, should be adopted and should provide us with new hope for progress in the reduction of the specter of nuclear danger in the world.

Mr. BUMPERS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I hope that the Senate will not bog down in rhetoric and partisan debate on something where they really have no place. I can think of a lot of things that I would like to say in a partisan vein, but it certainly would not help the present situation any. My concern is genuine. The resolution is a simple, straightforward resolution that I must say I simply cannot fathom—the concern and the efforts to trivialize it, or to put it in a much larger context and do something with the resolution which serves nobody's useful purpose.

It seems to me it sort of goes to the argument I can remember Averell Harriman made one time, that the mentality of some in this country is that if the avoidance of nuclear war is good for the Soviet Union, it must be bad for the United States.

Mr. President, I just want to remind some of my colleagues here of President Eisenhower's attitude about a very similar situation, when he was confronted with a new Soviet leadership following the death of Josef Stalin in 1953. Stalin had died. At that time they had a troika leadership before Khrushchev had come to power and solidified his position.

In a great speech that President Eisenhower made, called "The Chance for Peace," delivered before the American Society of Newspaper Editors on April 16, 1953, he cataloged the Soviet sins, the sins of Stalin, and said something I said in my previous statements, namely, that a good, healthy skepticism of Soviet intentions based on past Soviet conduct is certainly in order.

But then he went ahead to say:

> So the new Soviet leadership now has a precious opportunity to awaken, with the rest of the world, to the point of peril reached and to help turn the tide of history. Will it do this? We do not know. Recent statements and gestures of Soviet leaders give some evidence that they may recognize this critical moment. We welcome every honest act of peace. We care nothing for mere rhetoric. We are only for sincerity of peaceful purpose attested by deeds. . . . This we do know: A world that begins to witness the rebirth of trust among nations can find its way to a peace that is neither partial nor punitive.

He goes ahead to say:

> As progress in all these areas strengthens world trust, we could proceed concurrently with the next great work, the reduction of the burden of armaments now weighing upon the world. To this end, we would welcome and enter into the most solemn agreements.

Then he lists what the State Department would call confidence building measures, step by step building a trust between the United States and the Soviet Union.

You do not have to give anything away. You do not have to be a dove. You do not have to be naive or myopic.

The Senator's resolution is not all bad, his substitute and his perfecting amendment. But I would like to say that is we adopt the substitute and the perfecting amendment, you are saying:

> No, we are not going to negotiate with the Soviet Union and the reason we are not is because we have to have overall reductions and agreements, and it must all be verifiable and so on, before we can even sit down and talk with the Soviet Union about such a very small step in moving toward those larger agreements that we all look forward to and which the Senator from Indiana has alluded to in his perfecting amendment.

I disagree with the Senator, just to use his words, when he said the President made a significant offer to the Soviet Union. I disagree. I do not consider that a significant offer. I think it is a nice offer to say, "Come over and watch us set off an underground explosion." But I cannot believe that anybody would really be very impressed with that. That is not what you call onsite inspection.

If you want to put sensors all over the United States and the Soviet Union, if you want to get into how you verify this agreement, that is a whole other subject.

The Senator alluded to multiple violations of the Limited Test Ban Treaty and probable violations of the Threshold Test Ban Treaty.

There is all kinds of evidence, and I will not burden the RECORD with it. The Lawrence Livermore Laboratory said, "Yes, according to the way we keep records there is a possibility that the Soviets have violated. But according to the same records, so have we."

I do not want to be cast in the role of defending Soviet violations. Maybe they have and maybe they have not. The President said they had, but he did not offer any evidence.

Here is an article from Science Magazine dated May 1985 where it says, "Several new reports prepared by"—who? The Department of Defense, the Central Intelligence Agency, those advisory panels that have recommended that the Government promptly revise its method of estimating the yields of Soviet nuclear tests which are limited by treaty to 150 kilotons. If the revisions were made, it would appear that the Soviet Union was substantially in compliance with the treaty.

Here is an article as early as 1983 in the Washington Post, where the most respected seismologist in the United States said:

> The allegations made by President Reagan and others are based on a seismatic over estimation of the relation between seismic magnitude and explosive yield, an effect attributed to the different aspects of the Soviet and U.S. test sites.

Another respected scientist who is part of the Defense Department said:

> Based on both seismic body and surface wave magnitude estimates the U.S.S.R. seems to be complying with the 150-kiloton limit.

We even show violations for some of our own shocks, added a man named Robert Alewine in another presentation. One of our own shocks looked as high as 265 kilotons, and the Russians called us on that one.

Those are arguments. As I say, I do not want the Senate to get bogged down with the present things saying they violated the treaties. Scientific knowledge does not bear it out.

They have made an offer; we have a new leader. Who knows where this might lead? What do you lose by talking?

Finally, what has changed since the Senate last year adopted virtually the very same resolution as Senator KENNEDY and Senator MATHIAS are offering now? What has changed since last year when the Senate voted 77 to 22 for almost the identical measure?

Mr. President, unless someone else chooses to speak at the moment, I will suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WALLOP addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the perfecting amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, since I note there is some negotiation going on to see if agreement can be reached on perfecting amendments—and I hope it can be reached—let me make a comment or two on some assumptions that are made by the perfecting amendment, assumptions that are made, I hear, in discussions on the floor of the Senate.

First, the reality is that these tests are now verifiable. One of the reasons that I introduced an amendment on the Defense Department authorization bill, that I am pleased was adopted, asking for annual reports to Congress of arms verification research is that, frankly, probably as most Members of this body, I have not been brought up to date on what is happening in this area. But as of 7 years ago, as I mentioned earlier, I was one of the delegates to the U.N. special session on disarmament. We had the ability to detect at that point all but the tiniest explosions. That verification process, obviously, has improved. So, there is no reason not to go ahead, particularly if the Soviets are willing to put sensors in their country, as we have indicated we would be willing to do. At one point, the Soviets were willing to do that.

The second assumption that concerns me is that we have to reduce our arms before we can go ahead and negotiate this kind of thing. Obviously, I would like to see reduction. We all would like to see reduction. But what is needed now is to take some initial small steps toward some reconciliation. What is asked by the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Maryland is that we take these small steps, that we sit down and talk. I think it makes eminent good sense and I hope we move in that direction.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I think there is only one point which I would raise with respect to the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR] and the amendment thereto. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and it is therefore impossible to offer a further amendment at this point with respect to the underlying language. Until a vote is taken on the second perfecting amendment to the resolution, no further amendment may be offered. I know that it is possible, in a more indirect parliamentary way, to reach the same effect by another parliamentary means. But let me suggest the reason I would even discuss whether or not there should be an attempt made to amend further.

I want to point to one effect of the Lugar language in both the first- and second-degree amendments and to express at least some mild disagreement—not necessarily opposition.

In the first amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. LUGAR], it is required that progress shall be made on the other talks that are going on in Geneva. It does that in the fourth paragraph of the "Whereas" clause. It says that any such test ban agreement must be made in the context of deep and verifiable arms reduction. In other words, we should not attempt to make progress on this front until we have demonstrated progress on all fronts.

In the second perfecting amendment of the Senator from Indiana, it is required that there be a certification by the President that also ties it to the achievement of deep reductions in nuclear arms and substantial progress on verification.

Mr. President, I understand the desire to require that the Soviet Union be forthcoming before we enter into another, different round of talks, that the precondition should be made that the Soviet Union do something, that we should not just unilaterally move forward and start something. I guess I would say that I see no harm in trying to achieve something on a more limited scale, even though we are not able to achieve it on a large scale.

I am perfectly in agreement with the Senator from Indiana that, indeed, we do not want to be in the position of even appearing to be telling the President of the United States that he is not doing something which he ought to do. I do not take this resolution in the sense of criticism of the President's position; I take it in the sense of an expression on the part of the Senate that, since the Soviet Union has taken a step of offering a moratorium—which I happen to believe may be more show and rhetoric than it is substance; we should not overemphasize that—but nevertheless, they have taken that step, and the President of the United States has already responded by, in effect, saying we are going to take a deep and careful look at that question.

That I see this resolution not as criticism of the President's action but of support for the President's actions to date in that respect when he invited the Soviet Union on a unilateral basis to come and observe, to permit on-site inspection at the point where we are conducting underground testing. That is something we have sought for a long time from the Soviet Union, and I would say that that is not a perfect guarantee; that, indeed, we know what they are up to, because they might invite us to send observers to the wrong place in the meantime, telling us they are not doing it anywhere else but we with some knowledge that they might be doing it somewhere else. So, I think there is an opportunity for the Soviets to play games with it and I would not want to overemphasize or overstate what it is that this might accomplish. It might accomplish nothing more than misleading the American public. I would not want to do that. I am sure the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Maryland do not want to mislead the American public as to what the prospects are. So, I think we have to be careful not to overstate what this would mean if adopted, if, indeed, it were followed through, and if, indeed, negotiations were undertaken, and perhaps, even if, indeed, we were able to get the kind of agreement that this body could encompass and embrace.

There are many, many pitfalls in this process, and I do not want to overstate the value of the adoption of either the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts and the distinguished Senator from Maryland or of the amendments which have now been offered by the Senator from Indiana, because both or either could be deceptively misleading if misunderstood. They do not promise the world and if adopted by this Senate, are not a criticism of the President of the United States, and if adopted by the Senate and implemented by the President of the United States, might achieve virtually nothing. But neither do I believe that the precondition of movement on the part of the Soviet Union is absolutely necessary.

The President has already taken that high ground by inviting their observers to the point of our tests without precondition on the part of the Soviet Union. And as I said yesterday, if this called for us to join in a moratorium, as the Soviet Union has proposed, I would oppose it, because I would not believe that that moratorium as it might be propounded and as offered by the Soviet Union has any very real substance or meaning.

Before we enter into that kind of agreement for a moratorium and joining the Soviet action, I think we should demand meaningful guarantees that, indeed, that particular action would have substance in the ongoing dialog. I do not believe the simple moratorium by itself would have that kind of substance and meaning.

So I could support the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana, and I could support action which would remove from that proposal the linkage which is now there by way of precondition. It would seem to me that without that linkage, it is still a worthwhile effort so long as we do not be misled by what it would do or might do with respect to the prospects for achieving any kind of arms agreements between ourselves and the Soviet Union.

Mr. MATHIAS. Will the Senator from Idaho yield?

Mr. McCLURE. I will be happy to yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. MATHIAS. No. 1, I want to thank the Senator from Idaho for very thoughtful comments with which I agree. I think removing linkage will enhance the entirety of public perception of this issue because it is a rather simple issue. It is a historic issue. It is one which has standing in our generation. I think to the extent that is can be viewed in that clarity and simplicity the public will understand it better.

I think the Senator has done two other important things; one, in pointing out none of these efforts are in any sense hostile to the President of the United States because the active participation of the President of the United States, both as to making determinations and decisions and as to implementing them, is an essential feature of any policy upon which the United States may embark. So it would be folly to attempt anything and certainly nothing is being attempted which would force the President's hand; that this is in the constitutional sense advice to the President, advice which we not only may offer but which as a matter of conscience we are called upon to offer.

Finally, I would say the Senator is right to point out that there should not be unlimited expectations from any proposal of this sort, yet, and my question to the Senator is this, is he aware how close we actually came to a comprehensive test ban? It had been largely agreed by the Joint Chiefs, the leaders of the U.S. Armed Forces, those in whom we place our trust in matters of defense, that it was a desirable step. Great Britain, which had a role to play in the comprehensive test ban negotiations, was very well advanced in a national position leading toward acceptance. We were very close. And for reasons that had no relationship to the comprehensive test ban, again getting to the Senator's very wise points about the problems of linkage, for other reasons these negotiations were disrupted. And had they not been disrupted by external events, we might have been farther down this road, we might have actually achieved a comprehensive test ban, and that while everyone agrees it would not end the world's woes, it might put an end to a few of them.

Mr. McCLURE. I thank the Senator for his comments.

Let me underscore just a couple of other points before I yield the floor.

First, and I call your attention to some charts which I have asked be brought in and are placed in the rear of the Chamber, chart No. 1 substantiates what the President has found in his reports to the Congress on Soviet arms control violations both of January 23, 1984, and February 1, 1985, that the Soviet Union is likely to have violated the 150-kiloton yield limit on underground nuclear weapons testing of the Threshold Test Ban Treaty. In my judgment, and I share this judgment with the President and the experts who advise him, there have been over 16 Soviet underground nuclear weapons tests since 1978 which have estimated yields above 150 kilotons, according to press reports.

The purpose of these Soviet excess yield nuclear weapons tests is probably to validate and develop a much more lethal warhead for the new Soviet SS-24 and SS-25 mobile ICBM's and the SS-N-23 heavy SLBM.

I am not talking about the violations now in the development of those weapons systems. I am talking about the purpose of the underground tests and why it is likely that those tests were conducted and likely that they exceeded the Threshold Test Ban Treaty limits.

The SSX-26 and the SSX-27 ICBM's will probably also require new and larger yield warheads as well. Those underground tests which we are concerned about are related directly to the new weapons development, which should be a matter of concern to all people everywhere in the world.

The second chart shows that there is strong justification for President Reagan's February 1, 1985, report to Congress that the Soviets have violated the 1963 Limited Test Ban Treaty by venting radioactive debris beyond their national boundaries. There have been over 30 cases of unambiguous, conclusive cases of Soviet extraterritorial venting. There are now over 100 probable extraterritorial ventings.

Mr. President, the third chart summarizes the President's report to Congress on "Soviet Arms Control Violations of January 23, 1984"; and it shows the President's judgment that the Soviets are "likely" to have violated the 150-kiloton yield limit on underground nuclear weapons tests. There have been over 16 reported cases of Soviet excess-yield tests since 1978. That is not a matter to be taken lightly, because it indicates that they are in a weapons development mode that will change the balance of nuclear terror in the world. This judgment of likely Soviet violation of the Threshold Test Ban Treaty was reconfirmed by the President's February 1, 1985, report to Congress on Soviet arms control violations.

The fourth chart at the rear of the Chamber shows the official U.S. Defense Department judgment that between 1917 and 1962, the Soviet Union violated over 50 international security treaties. The State Department agreed in a 1959 report. The U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee also agreed in 1957 and 1962 reports.

There were no more official U.S. Government reports on Soviet arms control or treaty violations between 1962 and 1984, until President Reagan's January 3, 1984, report to Congress on "Soviet Arms Control Violations." Using official unclassified U.S. Government documentation, it is possible to conclude that the Soviets have violated virtually every international security agreement they have signed since the 1917 revolution.

One exception stands out. The Soviets complied scrupulously with the notorious August 1939 Hitler-Stalin Pact, but this treaty led to the dismemberment of Poland and the outbreak of World War II.

I cannot help but refer to an earlier comment by President John F. Kennedy in 1961 in reaction to the Soviet breakout from the Atmospheric Nuclear Testing Moratorium. He said: "If the Soviets fool us once, it's our fault. If they fool us twice, it's also our fault. Never again will we agree to an uninspected moratorium."

Mr. President, it may well be asked, in the face of that record of violations, why we would even seek any further agreement with the Soviet Union. We should seek compliance with the existing agreements.

However, I think the very subject we are talking about also indicates why we should seek further agreement, because if there is ambiguity in the Threshold Test Ban Treaty that yields the kind of disagreement among experts as to what our seismic information tells us about the yield of underground tests, then it should be clear that one way of knowing more about what we are doing and what they are doing is to get onsite inspection.

It may be that the negotiations over a comprehensive test ban would yield a result that ends such tests.

I would guarantee to anyone listening that I am going to be very skeptical and very dubious about whether or not such an agreement is verifiable and whether it guarantees that we would know and, if so, what we would do about it. But I also think it is quite possible that in the process of inviting onsite inspection, and in the process of undertaking further negotiations, we might well get the Soviet Union, if not to comply, at least to invite us to do onsite inspections and verifications which might lay to rest, once and for all, the question of whether or not they are or have been violating the Threshold Test Ban Treaty. We need better information, and they are not permitting us to get better information.

So the debate rages on, and some people demand evidence of the caliber that will stand up in court, before they will conclude that the Soviets have been cheating, if not outright violating the Test Ban Treaty.

The significance of those underground tests cannot be overstated.

You cannot build new weapons until you test them. As a matter of fact, the Soviet Union record on that is that they are very conservative in that respect. They do not build and deploy weapons until they have had a testing regime.

We are very much concerned about what those tests mean, in terms of their ability to break out, even if they have not yet violated in terms of weapons agreements—to break out in a new generation of weapons that we are suddenly confronted with and have massively increased yields.

The Threshold Test Ban Treaty was designed to limit that opportunity for testing. In my judgment, it is being violated. In my judgment, we should be insisting that the Soviet Union comply with it.

In that connection, we should be seeking onsite inspection, so that we could verify whether or not they are complying and, even if they have not been complying in the past, to make certain that they comply in the future.

That is essential to the security of this country; because, while they are probably violating that yield limit, I do not believe there is any question in the minds of anybody in this Chamber that we are complying with the limits of the Test Ban Treaty. Therefore, if they are permitted to violate and we do nothing about it and we comply, they gain military advantage over time as a result. But I do not believe that it hurts us to undertake an effort which might lead to increase verification of past treaties and the possibility of new limitations that would be in the interests of the United States.

Again, Mr. President, I do not want the public to be mislead by the promise of such a negotiation. I do not believe that the public should be permitted to indulge in the hope or the speculation that the mere passage of a resolution in the Senate of the United States is going to change Soviet behavior. I do not want the passage of the resolution to indicate to our negotiators that we are in favor of an agreement for the sake of an agreement. We are not. Certainly, this Senator is not.

The agreements we have had in the past were designed to limit the proliferation of nuclear weapons; but they have permitted, not limited, the raid expansion of the number and the caliber and the threat of nuclear weapons much more on the Soviet side than on the side of the United States.

I think we must seek new means by which we persuade the Soviet Union to join us in the deep and verifiable cuts in nuclear weapons which the President is already seeking by means of the talks now underway in Geneva. Mr. President, I think that this resolution, rather than frustrating that effort, might well enhance the effort which the President has already undertaken. I highly commend the President for the efforts he is taking. But this Senator is going to demand real and concrete results, not just paper agreements that might jeopardize our security rather than enhance it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mr. WILSON. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, I rise in support of the substitute offered by the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee to the Kennedy proposal that the United States enter into a comprehensive test ban negotiation.

I do so, Mr. President, for the very simple reason that there can really be no contest of the wisdom of the Senator from Indiana in his insistence upon verification of nuclear weapons testing, including onsite monitoring because sadly as Santayana has told us, "Those who ignore the lessons of history are doomed to relive them and repeat them."

History speaks to us quite eloquently on this point. The most eloquent test obviously should come from someone who himself proposed in the name of ridding the world of monstrous weapons that there should be a comprehensive test ban treaty and then lived to see his own good faith repudiated by the violations of the Soviet Union.

President John Fitzgerald Kennedy put it eloquently and simply when he said in announcing the resumption by the United States of necessary nuclear testing,

> We know enough about broken negotiations, secret preparations and the advantages gained from a long test series never to offer again an uninspected moratorium.

Yet, Mr. President, that is precisely what we are offered now, another uninspected moratorium, and another moratorium on nuclear testing even if only for a 6-month period would not appear to be productive of the ends which President Kennedy sought so long ago. A moratorium would not move us closer to resolving those verification problems which have been so intractable. Even a limited moratorium might create the false and potentially dangerous impression that a comprehensive test ban could be verified, and the belief that a moratorium for a limited period of time would create good will and momentum to achieve a negotiated agreement is contradicted by history as that bitter experience with the first Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty makes so clear.

We know now that even an inspected moratorium would not give us confidence that the ban was being observed.

Comprehensive and reliable verification procedures have remained elusive through the decades of test ban proposals that have followed the 1958 moratorium.

If we cannot be sure then, Mr. President, we cannot afford to indulge in vainglorious good intentions. There is simply too much at stake.

When he announced the resumption of United States testing, President Kennedy did so sadly but with a clear conviction that our failure to do so would likely be misinterpreted. What he said on this occasion on March 2, 1962, was that a failure to resume testing would have indicated to the Soviets not good will but a failure of political will, of political nerve.

And the President drew lessons from that failed moratorium that we cannot, that we dare not forget. He said:

> (The Soviet Union) could well be encouraged by such signs of weakness to seek another period of no testing without controls—another opportunity for stifling our progress while secretly preparing . . . for the new test series that might alter the balance of power. With such a one-sided advantage, why would they change their strategy, or refrain from testing, merely because we refrained? Why would they want to halt their drive to surpass us in nuclear technology? And why would they ever consider accepting a true test ban or mutual disarmament?

Mr. President, President Kennedy learned, the United States learned on that occasion the hard way. We put forward good faith. The response from the Soviet Union was bad faith and violation of that Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty. We have no reason to suppose that anything has changed.

So sadly, the Senator from Indiana is right in his insistence upon substantial progress in verification of nuclear weapons testing as a condition to our resumption of any negotiations with the Soviet Union for a Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty.

Until that is in sight, Mr. President, for us to engage in that would be to repeat a tragic mistake of history with perhaps yet more tragic consequences.

Mr. President, we cannot afford vainglorious good intentions.

I urge my colleagues to support the substitute offered by the distinguished Senator from Indiana.

Mr. President, I shall also ask unanimous consent that a letter from the director of the Los Alamos National Laboratory, Donald M. Kerr, be entered in the RECORD. It states Director Kerr's opposition to the resumption of a nuclear test ban or a Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty in terms that are well worth reading. I will not take the time of the body to read this letter in full. I urge my colleagues to read it in the RECORD and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LOS ALAMOS NATIONAL LABORATORY,
Los Alamos, NM, April 13, 1984.

Hon. JOHN W. WARNER,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Strategic and Theater Nuclear Forces, Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR WARNER: The development of a stable, peaceful relationship with the Soviet Union and a mutual reduction in the number of nuclear weapons and the threat of nuclear war are goals which all Americans share. Progress toward these goals would be assisted, I believe, by the negotiation of carefully crafted, unambiguous arms control agreements.

The differences in the principles and objectives of our societies are large. Agreements between the United States and the Soviet Union that rely heavily on trust and good will, or on confidence that both parties have similar interests, have more often than not generated distrust, fear, and even increases in armaments, rather than any long term amelioration of relations. But by negotiating meaningful treaties that can be verified with confidence, we might begin to create the conditions that can lead to improved relations and to secure arms reductions. A moratorium on nuclear testing would not be such an agreement in itself, and would not be likely to lead to successful nuclear arms control.

We should not forget that one of the most forceful demonstrations of the unfortunate consequences that can follow from imprecise arms control arrangements was itself a moratorium on nuclear testing—that which the US and the Soviet Union entered voluntarily, and without verification measures or negotiated agreement, in 1958. That moratorium was broken by the Soviet Union in 1961, when it began a large, secretly prepared nuclear test series. On March 2, 1962, President Kennedy announced his decision that the US must resume nuclear testing. A failure to do so, he said, would have indicated to the Soviets not good will, but a failure of will. Kennedy drew lessons from that failed moratorium that we must remember:

"(The Soviet Union) could well be encouraged by such signs of weakness to seek another period of no testing without controls—another opportunity for stifling our progress while secretly preparing . . . for the new test series that might alter the balance of power. With such a one-sided advantage, why would they change their strategy, or refrain from testing, merely because we refrained? Why would they want to halt their drive to surpass us in nuclear technology? And why would they ever consider accepting a true test ban or mutual disarmament?"

Demonstrations of American good will in seeking arms control proved not to be enough. We concluded that only demonstrations of America's determination to protect itself and its allies—while seeking genuine, verifiable, and constructive arms control—offered hope for progress toward improved relations with such a state as the Soviet Union.

Another moratorium on nuclear testing, even if only for a six month period, would not appear to be productive of these ends. A moratorium would not move us closer to resolving those verification problems which have been so intractable. Even a limited moratorium might create the false and potentially dangerous impression that a comprehensive test ban could be verified. And the belief that a moratorium for a limited period of time would create good will and momentum to achieve a negotiated agreement is contradicted by history. As President Kennedy concluded, "We know enough about broken negotiations, secret preparations and the advantages gained from a long test series never to offer again an uninspected moratorium." But we know now that even an inspected moratorium would not give us confidence that the ban was being observed; comprehensive and reliable verification procedures have remained elusive through the decades of test ban proposals that have followed the 1958 moratorium.

We also must confirm another of President Kennedy's judgments on nuclear testing and test bans: a comprehensive test ban, by itself, is an unsatisfactory form of arms control. Like him we are dedicated to reducing the risk of nuclear war. But a test ban is only one step in that direction, and is not only useless but actually may be dangerous if not accompanied by complementary arms control measures. "Until mankind has banished both war and its instruments of destruction," Kennedy said, "the United States must maintain an effective quantity and quality of nuclear weapons . . . Only though such strength can we be certain of deterring a nuclear strike, or on overwhelming ground attack, upon our forces and allies."

A moratorium or test ban would gradually, unpredictably, and unequally reduce our ability to rely, with confidence, on our nuclear forces. Without substantial concurrent progress toward banishing war and our reliance on nuclear deterrence, this reduction in confidence in the nuclear forces would weaken our ability to sustain peace and freedom. Concerns with the effects on our deterrent of a test moratorium or ban were illustrated when the US resumed testing in 1962. Not only had the Soviet Union greatly improved its own nuclear technology and gained unprecedented insight into nuclear effects, but some US weapons had developed serious faults.

The two nuclear weapon design laboratories established procedures to approve any alterations to nuclear weapons entering the stockpile during the moratorium. Under these procedures a change to improve safety was made to one weapon system. When this modified weapon was tested after the moratorium, its performance was a small fraction of the anticipated yield. As this case showed, even the best human judgment applied to nuclear weapon design and performance, without actual tests, sometimes fails. Some argue that the uncertainty this introduces is valuable, since it may decrease the willingness of either superpower to rely on nuclear weapons. However, for many years our security and that of our allies must continue to depend on the deterrent effect of our nuclear weapons. Such uncertainty can only undermine our security. As President Reagan noted in his April 6, 1984, speech at the Center for Strategic and International Studies. "Too many forget John Kennedy's warning that only when our arms are certain beyond doubt can we be certain beyond doubt they will never be used."

Issues that affect our nuclear deterrent must be approached with care, foresight, and an appreciation of hard won lessons of history. We cannot afford mistakes. A six month moratorium on nuclear testing would not improve our security. It would be far more constructive, in this period of strained relations with the Soviet Union, to seek agreements on crisis management aimed at reducing the risk of nuclear war. These might be crafted in a manner which would not raise issues of verification. Success in this area might then lead to possibilities of further agreements to restrain deployment, production and ultimately testing of nuclear weapons systems.

Sincerely,

DONALD M. KERR,
Director.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, once again I am happy to cosponsor a resolution calling for the resumption of negotiations for a Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty. This resolution comes at a time when the Soviet Union has proposed a moratorium on nuclear testing and the United States has invited Soviet officials to observe a nuclear weapons test within the United States. These initiatives may provide the opening that is needed to resume negotiations of a treaty that could potentially curb the qualitative arms race and provide the momentum for other measures of restraint. I hope that President Reagan will heed the call of Congress to take advantage of these initiatives. An overture made in good faith would determine whether the Soviet Union is serious in their proposals to stop the testing of nuclear weapons.

I believe that a verifiable Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty would promote the security of the United States in a variety of ways. The most obvious being that it would halt one aspect of the qualitative arms race. If the United States and the Soviet Union could not test their nuclear devices, neither country could make potentially destabilizing qualitative improvements in their nuclear weapons. For example, the testing of smaller and more accurate warheads would be banned. As a consequence, the threat of the Soviet Union placing many more warheads on their large land-based missiles would be reduced. A Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty would stop menacing Soviet developments while preserving the technological edge the United States enjoys in their nuclear warheads.

A Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty would also demonstrate that the superpowers were serious about arms control. Without such a signal it may be very difficult to persuade nonnuclear nations to ratify the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty. Many nations have resisted ratification of this treaty because of the lack of control on the part of the U.S.S.R. and the United States. A test ban treaty would signal resolve and could lead to greater adherence to the Non-Proliferation Treaty.

In the long run, the inability to test nuclear weapons will lessen our confidence in the reliability of the nuclear stockpile. While we would lose some confidence, it should be noted that much of the testing to determine the reliability of our warheads is done through the disassembly and careful scrutiny of these weapons. This does not involve any nuclear testing. The lack of testing may lead to insufficient confidence to launch a first-strike preemptive attack, but it would not degrade our confidence in our proven nuclear stockpile to the point where we could not rely on those weapons for a second-strike retaliatory response to a Soviet attack. Thus, a Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty could enhance crisis stability.

Of course, any agreement which we reach with the Soviet Union must be adequately verifiable. Arms control treaties are not based on trust. Banning all testing of nuclear weapons poses complicated verification tasks. Previous negotiations on nuclear testing did make some progress in establishing necessary principles of verification. For example, the Soviets agreed in principle to seismic monitoring stations on Soviet territory and occasional on-site inspections. Whether they would agree to such provisions again is open to question. If we are successful in reaching an agreement on a Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty, however, we must be very careful to ensure that mechanisms exist to verify the treaty and provide satisfactory recourse in the event of violations. The Soviet Union has not had the best track record of compliance with various arms control treaties and the United States must ensure that any treaty we negotiate with them is amendable to verification.

In any event, the resolution before us today simply calls for the resumption of negotiations. We can go nowhere with arms control of any kind if we refuse to talk to other nations. I hope that we will resume these negotiations in a good faith attempt to curb the qualitative arms race.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I have been in discussion with the principals involved in this debate, and it is a very important matter, but in an effort to reach some resolution, I have been advised that the principals would be willing that the resolution be referred to the Foreign Relations Committee and that the resolution, or the resolution as amended, would be reported by the committee on or about October 1 of this year and that the majority leader, in cooperation with the principals, would make a good-faith effort to schedule it shortly thereafter. I have no problem with that. It there is no objection, I propound that unanimous consent request.

Mr. KENNEDY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, there will be no more rollcall votes tonight.

TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE MEDICARE PROGRAM

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, 20 years ago today, President Lyndon Johnson went to Independence, MO, to sign into law a far-reaching program to guarantee access to high quality, affordable health care for millions of America's senior citizens. The new program was called Medicare. Its passage changed forever the way the Nation provides and pays for health services.

With former President Harry S. Truman at his side, Lyndon Johnson proclaimed that "No longer will older Americans be denied the healing miracle of modern medicine. No longer will illness crush and destroy the savings that they have so carefully put away over a lifetime so that they might enjoy dignity in their later years."

The origins of Medicare go back 50 years to the signing of the Social Security Act which President Franklin Delano Roosevelt called "a cornerstone in the structure which is being built, but which is by no means complete."

In 1943, Senator Robert F. Wagner Senator James E. Murray, and Representative John D. Dingell Sr., introduced the first Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill, proposing a broadening of the entire Social Security Act, including a compulsory national health insurance system financed by a payroll tax.

President Truman fought for health insurance programs, but it was not until Lyndon Johnson made passage of Medicare his highest legislative priority in 1964 that Medicare became a reality. The result was a program that went beyond what even LBJ had envisioned. Congress designed a three-part program. Part A, a program financed through payroll taxes, covered hospital bills. Part B, a voluntary program to cover physicians' services, was financed partly out of the Treasury and partly by the premiums paid by beneficiaries. Finally, Medicaid was created as a State and Federal partnership to help finance the health care needs of low-income citizens of all ages.

In the 20 years since the enactment of Medicare, many seem to have forgotten why such a bold program was needed at all. The basic problem was a lack of adequate health insurance coverage for Americans over age 65. In fact, only 20 years ago, less than half of the 19 million elderly had health insurance. For those with coverage, most commercial policies paid only about $10 a day for hospital room and board charges.

I ask unanimous consent that the remarks made at the signing ceremony by former President Truman and President Johnson be entered in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the text was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, July 31, 1965]

TRANSCRIPT OF REMARKS BY TRUMAN AND JOHNSON

TRUMAN'S REMARKS

I'm glad you like the President. I like him, too.

Mr. President, Mrs. Johnson, distinguished guests.

You have done me a great honor in coming here today and have made me a very, very happy man.

This is an important hour for the nation. For those of our citizens who have completed their tour of duty and have moved to the sidelines, these are the days that we are trying to celebrate for them. These people are our prideful responsibility and they are entitled, among other benefits, to the best medical protection available.

Not one of our citizens should ever be abandoned or sent for the dignity of charity. Charity is dignity when you have to have it. But we don't want these people to have anything to do with charity and we don't want them to have an idea of hopeless despair.

Mr. President, I'm glad to have lived this long and to witness today the signing of the medicare bill, which puts this nation right where it needs to be to be right.

Your inspired leadership and responsiveness and the responsive, forward-looking Congress have made it historically possible for this day to come about.

I thank all of you most highly for coming here. It's an honor I haven't had done to me for—well, quite a while, I'll say that to you.

So here he is, ladies and gentlemen, the President of the United States.

JOHNSON'S ADDRESS

President and Mrs. Truman, Secretary Celebrezze, Senator Mansfield, Senator Symington, Senator Long, Governor Hearnes, Senator Anderson, Congressman King of the Anderson-King team, Congressman Mills, Senator Long of the Mills-Long team, our beloved Vice President, who worked in the vineyard many years to see this day come to pass, and all of my dear friends in the Congress, both Democrats and Republicans.

The people of the United States love and voted for Harry Truman, not because he gave them hell but because he gave them hope. And I believe today that all America shares my joy that he is present now when the hope that he offered becomes a reality for millions of our fellow citizens.

I'm so proud that this has come to pass in the Johnson Adminstration. But it was really Harry Truman of Missouri who planted the seeds of compassion and duty which have today flowered into care for the sick and serenity for the fearful.

Many men can make many proposals. Many men can draft many laws, but few have the piercing and human eye which can see beyond the words to the people that they touch.

Few can see past the speeches and the political battles to the doctor over there that's tending the infirm and to the hospital that is receiving those in anguish or feel in their hearts painful wrath at the injustice which denies the miracle of healing to the old and to the poor.

And fewer still have the courage to stake reputation and position and the effort of a lifetime upon such a cause when there are so few that share it.

But it's just such men who illuminate the life and the history of a nation, and so, President Harry Truman, it is in tribute not to you but to the America that you represent that we have come here to pay our love and our respects to you today.

CITES TRUMAN STATEMENT

For a country can be known by the quality of the men at honors. By praising you and by carrying forward your dreams, we really reaffirm the greatness of America. It was a generation ago that Harry Truman said, and I quote him:

"Millions of our citizens do not now have full measure of opportunity to achieve and to enjoy good health. Millions do not now have protection or security against the economic effects of sickness. And the time has now arrived for action to help them attain that opportunity and to help them get that protection." Unquote.

Well, today, Mr. President and my follow Americans, we are taking such action 20 years later. And we're doing that under the great leadership of men like John McCormack, "our Speaker; Carl Albert, our majority leader; our very able and beloved majority leader of the Senate, Mike Mansfield, and distinguished members of the Ways and Means and Finance Committees of the House and Senate of both parties. Democratic and Republican, because the need for this action is plain and it's so clear, indeed, that we marvel not simply at the passage of this bill but what we marvel at is that it took so many years to pass it.

And I'm so glad that Alme Forand is here to see it finally passed and signed.

There are more than 18 million Americans over the age of 65. Most of them have low incomes. Most of them are threatened by illness and medical expenses that they cannot afford.

And through this new law, Mr. President, every citizen will be able in his productive years, when he's earning, to insure himself, against the ravages of illness in his old age. This insurance will help pay for care in hospitals, in skilled nursing homes or in the home. And under a separate plan it will help meet the fees of the doctors. Now here's how the plan will affect you:

During your working years, people of America, you will contribute through the Social Security program a small amount each payday for hospital insurance protection. For example, the average worker in 1966 will contribute about $1.50 per month. The employer will contribute about a similar amount and this will provide the funds to pay up to 90 days of hospital care for each illness plus diagnostic care and up to 100 home health visits after you're 65. And beginning in 1967 you will also be covered for up to 100 days of care in a skilled nursing home after a period of hospital care.

And under a separate plan, when you're 65—that the Congress originated itself in its own good judgment—you may be covered for medical and surgical fees whether you're in or out of a hospital. You will pay $3 per month after you are 65 and your Government will contribute an equal amount. And the benefits under the law are as varied and broad as the marvels of modern medicine itself.

HOPES TO REMEDY DEFECTS

And if it has few defects, such as the method of payment of certain specialist, then I am confident those can be quickly remedied, and I hope they will be.

No longer will older Americans be denied the healing miracle of modern medicine. No longer will illness crush and destroy the savings that they have so carefully put away over a lifetime so that they might enjoy dignity in their later years.

No longer will young families see their own incomes and their own hopes eaten away simply because they are carrying out their deep moral obligations to their parents and to their uncles and their aunts. And so longer will this nation refuse the hand of justice to those who have given a lifetime of service and wisdom and labor to the progress of this progressive country.

And this bill, Mr. President, is even broader than that. It will increase Social Security benefits for all of our older Americans. It will improve a wide range of health and medical services for Americans of all ages.

In 1935, when the man that both of us loved so much, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, signed the Social Security Act, he said, and I quote him: "A cornerstone in the structure which is being built but it is by no means complete."

But perhaps no single act in the entire Administration of the beloved Franklin D. Roosevelt really did more to win him the illustrous place in history that he has as did the laying of that cornerstone.

I'm so happy that his oldest son, Jimmy, could be here to share with us the job that is ours today.

And those who share this day will also be remembered for making the most important addition to that structure—and you're making it in this bill—the most important addition that's been made in three decades.

Because history shapes men, but it is a necessary faith of leadership that men can help shape history. There are many who led us to this historic day not out of courtesy or deference but from gratitude and remembrance which is our country's debt, and if I may be pardoned for taking a moment I want to call part of the honor roll.

The able leadership in both Houses of the Congress. Congressman Celler, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, introduced the hospital insurance in 1952, Alme Forand from Rhode Island, then Congressman, introduced it in the House.

Senator Clinton Anderson of New Mexico helped medicare through the years in the Senate. Congressman Cecil King of California carried on the battle in the House. The legislative genius of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. Congressman Wilbur Mills, and the effective and able work of Senator Russell Long together transformed this desire into victory.

And those devoted public servants—former Secretary—Senator Rubicoff; present secretary Tony Celebrezze; Under Secretary Wilbur Cohen; the Democratic whip of the House, Hale Boggs, on the Ways and Means Committee, and really the White House's best legislator Larry O'Brien, gave not just endless days and months and yes, years of patience, but they gave their hearts to passing this bill.

KENNEDY IS RECALLED

So let us all remember those who sadly cannot share this time for triumph, for it is their triumph, too. It is the victory of great members of Congress that are not with us, like John Dingell Sr. and Robert Wagner, late a member of the Senate, and James Murray of Montana.

And there is also John Fitzgerald Kennedy, who fought in the Senate and took his case to the people and never yielded in pursuit but was not spared to see the final concourse of the forces that he had helped to loose.

But it all started really with the man from Independence, and so as it is fitting that we should—we've come back here to his home to complete what he began.

President Harry Truman, as any President must, made many decisions of great moment, although he always made them frankly and with a courage and a clarity that few men have ever shared.

The immense and the intricate questions of freedom and survival were caught up many times in the web of Harry Truman's judgment. And this is in the tradition of leadership.

But there's another tradition that we share today. It calls upon us never to be indifferent toward despair. It commands us never to turn away from helplessness. It directs us never to ignore or to spurn those who suffer untended in a land that's bursting with abundance.

I said to Senator Smathers coming out today—the whip of the Democrats in the Senate and who worked with us on the Finance Committee—this legislation—I said the highest traditions of the medical profession are really directed to the ends that we are trying to serve.

And it was only yesterday, at the request of some of my friends, I met with the leaders of the American Medical Association to seek their assistance in advancing the cause of one of the greatest professions of all, the medical profession, in helping us to maintain and to improve the health of all Americans.

NOTES YEARS OF STRUGGLE

And this is not just our tradition or the tradition of the Democratic party, or even the tradition of the nation. It is as old as the day it was first commanded. "Thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, to thy needy in the land."

And just think, Mr. President, because of this document and the long years of struggle which so many have put into creating it, in this town and a thousand other towns like it, there are men and women in pain who will now find ease. There are those alone in suffering who will now hear the sound of some approaching footsteps coming to help. There are those fearing the terrible darkness of despairing poverty, despite their long years of labor and expectations, who will now look up to see the light of hope and realization.

There just can be no satisfaction nor any act of leadership that gives greater satisfaction than this. And perhaps you alone, President Truman, perhaps, you alone, can fully know just how grateful I am for this day.●

Mr. BAUCUS. Today, Medicare coverage provides basic health protection to 98 percent of the Nation's nearly 30 million senior citizens. That achievement alone explains why Medicare has become one of the most durable legacies of the Great Society. Within the past 20 years, the health status of elderly Americans has improved dramatically as Medicare has grown from a limited acute care progam to one that provides cost-effective home health care and rehabilitative services as well as access to the latest advances in medical technology.

In 1985, our Nation faces new health challenges. First, we face the challenge of financing Medicare at a time of severe budget constraints. Medicare has become an expensive national commitment, as Medicare outlays this year are projected at about $70 billion. And second, we must ensure that Medicare beneficiaries, the retired Americans that Medicare was designed to protect, will not incur excessive out-of-pocket expenses that erode their access to vital health services or threaten the dignity of their retirement years.

With the enactment of the new prospective payment system for hospital care in 1983, Congress took a dramatic step toward controlling soaring health care expenses while introducing more rational incentives for efficiency in health care delivery. We will have to refine this system and find similar new approaches for other parts of the Medicare Program if we are to ensure the continued solvency of the Medicare trust funds.

America's seniors have been well served during the last 20 years by hardworking members of the Finance Committee, especially our distinguished chairmen who have served since Medicare's enactment, Senator Harry F. Byrd Sr., Senator LONG, and Senator DOLE. As the senior Democrat on the Senate Finance Subcommittee on Health, I look forward to doing my part and working with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to ensure that Medicare continues to meet the health needs of future generations of working Americans. And I am proud to join my colleagues in wishing Medicare and its 30 million beneficiaries a happy 20th anniversary and good health.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, today marks the 20th anniversary of Medicare and Medicaid. Two decades ago, over half of our Nation's elderly had no health insurance and many more had insufficient and inadequate coverage. Since the enactment of Medicare and Medicaid, we have made tremendous progress in broadening the access to health care services and in providing adequate health care coverage for millions of Americans. Today, as we celebrate this important anniversary, it is essential that we mark the critical progress we have made and recognize the work yet to be done in assuring the highest quality medical care for all Americans.

The participation of the Federal Government in providing financial access to health care for our seniors has not always been supported. However, two decades later even the most vocal opponents in the past now proclaim Medicare a tremendous success. Few would have anticipated the growth of the Medicare Program over the years. A look back at the Federal expenditures reflects this growth. In 1967, the program cost $4 billion. In 1983, Medicare expenditures equaled $58.8 billion and accounted for 17 percent of our Nation's total health care costs. It is estimated that in 1986 the costs will approach $67 billion. The number of recipients has also increased substantially. In 1967, 20 million senior citizens had access to health care through the Medicare Program. In 1973, Medicare coverage was extended to Social Security Disability Insurance beneficiaries [SSDI], and there are presently 27 million elderly and 3 million disabled individuals enrolled in Medicare.

Medicare is composed of two parts. Medicare part A—hospital insurance—provides for inpatient hospital services. Those individuals eligible for benefits in the Social Security Program become entitled for Medicare part A upon reaching 65 years of age or 24 months after receiving SSDI benefits. This part of Medicare is financed through the Medicare Trust Fund and is financed through a payroll tax levied on employees, employers, and self-employed individuals. Services provided include the costs of inpatient hospital care—excluding deductibles and coinsurances—skilled nursing facilities [SNF], home health care and hospice services. Medicare part B—supplemental medical insurance—is a voluntary supplemental insurance plan which provides physician fees and related benefits to those entitled to part A. These services include surgery, consultation, office visits, physical therapy, diagnostic, and x-ray services, and durable medical equipment. Part B is financed through a combination of premiums and funds from general revenue.

Medicare has made a tremendous impact on providing access to health care coverage for our Nation's senior citizens. Most elderly persons have health care coverage through the Medicare Program or through health insurance availability through employment. Unfortunately, this is not the case for millions of other Americans. The Census Bureau recently estimated that 35 million individuals in this country are presently uninsured and lack a financial source of access to health care. This represents over 15 percent of our general population. However, less than 200,000 of our elderly population or only 0.7 percent of our seniors are uninsured. This is Medicare's greatest accomplishment when one reflects on the health care status of our seniors prior to the creation of the program.

Even with all the advances we have made in the area of providing health care services to our senior citizens, the 20th anniversary is in some ways a bittersweet commemoration. Despite the marked improvement in access to health care services for our elderly citizens, recent changes during this administration has represented a major shift in scope and direction and threatens to reverse two decades of progress of improving access for our senior citizens. In every year since this administration has been in office, there has been legislation adopted which has significantly cut into the Medicare Program. Medicare was cut $15 billion in the first term of the current administration. The cutbacks would have exceeded $30 billion if Congress had not resisted such devastating reductions. The House of Representative's Committee on Ways and Means recently estimated that without any new proposed cuts, Medicare spending will be reduced by almost $45 billion through 1988. In fiscal year 1986, Medicare is once again being scrutinized for further spending reductions to help finance the ballooning budget deficits, rather than being reformed to improve the quality of health care or to securing the financial integrity of the program.

Despite tremendous improvements, Medicare now pays for less than one-half of the health care bills that our seniors are faced with. In addition, seniors today pay in out-of-pocket health care costs an amount equivalent to what was paid prior to the creation of the Medicare Program. In addition, Medicare fails to provide certain essential services, such as nursing home care, coverage for such vital services such as vision, hearing, and dental care, and catastrophic health care protection. Many of these services are only available through the Medicaid Program and then only after total impoverishment. A recent study revealed that two-thirds of all single and one-third of all married elderly who enter nursing homes for long-term care face destitution within 13 weeks of care.

In addition to Medicare, today is also the 20th anniversary of the enactment of Medicaid. The Medicaid Program was enacted as a jointly funded, Federal-State program to provide the financing of health services for our Nation's poor of any age including our senior citizens, disabled persons, and those children and parents receiving benefits through the Aid to Families with Dependent Children [AFDC] Program. The Medicaid Program, like Medicare, has significantly enhanced access to our health care system for those individuals eligible for benefits. Today over 22 million low-income persons are receiving Medicaid benefits. Yet like Medicare, recent changes have reversed the trend of increasing access to health care services for those in need. The Government Accounting Office [GAO] recently demonstrated that close to a half a million families were removed from Medicaid after enactment of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act [OBRA] of 1981. It is also estimated that less than half of the poor and near poor in this country are now receiving health care coverage through the Medicaid Program.

Today as we commemorate this important milestone in the history of the Medicare and Medicaid programs, we must remain vigilant in our efforts to continue to fight to sustain and improve these programs. Therefore, I urge all my colleagues to continue their support for these programs on their 20th anniversary.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, as senior Democratic member of the Senate Special Committee on Aging, I am pleased to join my colleagues in observing the 20th anniversary of the Medicare Program. On this day in 1965, this important program was enacted into law.

Sometimes, despite what the cynics may say, our good intentions are met with great success. No one can deny Medicare's accomplishments. Since its enactment, the program has made a tremendous contribution to the health and well-being of millions of aged and disabled Americans by helping to ensure access to appropriate and necessary medical services. Medicare has made an important difference in the lives of Americans—not only for elderly and disabled citizens, but for their family members and children who would otherwise face shouldering the burden of their loved ones' care alone.

Today, almost 28 million Americans over age 65 and 3 million disabled persons are insured under Medicare, making it the single largest personal health care financing program in the country. In looking at the provider side of the picture, more than 20,000 hospitals, nursing homes, home health agencies, labs, and clinics participate in Medicare. Within these settings, hundreds of thousands of physicians treat beneficiaries.

In recent years, Congress has responded to the need for less costly and more appropriate health care services under Medicare by expanding benefits to include hospice and health maintenance organization [HMO] care. I have been pleased to cosponsor the legislation expanding this coverage.

In this era of high medical costs, we have fundamentally changed the way Medicare reimburses hospitals for beneficiary care, and we will be considering other far-reaching proposals in the future affecting Medicare payment methods to providers. We must be ever vigilant in monitoring the impact of these modifications on the quality of medical treatment. While we want inflation reined in, the delivery of quality health services to our Nation's senior citizens cannot be sacrificed.

Our country has made great strides in assuring a better life for our retired citizens. Medicare's 20th anniversary is a time to reaffirm our national commitment to the program's continued success. While we recognize the limits of the program in this time of record-high Federal deficits and high inflation in the health care industry, we must also recognize that serious gaps remain in insurance protection. Catastrophic illness can still rob aged Americans of financial dignity and a home to live in. Similarly, the staggering costs of long-term care can wipe out a lifetime of savings. Routine out-of-pocket costs also represent a heavy financial burden for some senior citizens; one example is the high costs of prescription drugs.

Without question, however, we can and we should take great pride in the accomplishments of the Medicare Program. Despite stormy seas, we have managed to keep this vital program on a relatively stable course. During the next 20 years, we will be confronted with future challenges. I am confident, however, that by working together we will meet these challenges head-on and will continue our commitment to a strong and healthy Medicare Program.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I rise today to add my congratulations to those of my colleagues on the 20th anniversary of the Medicare Program.

The concept of a national health care plan was a radical idea in 1943 when Senators Robert Wagner (D-N.Y.) and James E. Murray (D-Mont.) joined with Representative John D. Dingell (D-Mich.) to introduce the first Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill, which proposed a broadening of the Social Security Act to include a compulsory national health insurance system to be financed by a payroll tax.

In 1945, President Truman issued a message on health legislation and proposed a comprehensive, prepaid medical insurance plan for persons of all ages to be financed by raising the Social Security tax. There was strong and immediate opposition to the President's proposal by the American Medical Association. In 1950, lobbying against the plan reached its peak in intensity.

With the inauguration of Dwight D. Eisenhower in 1953, administration support for the concept of a national health care plan ended. The Eisenhower administration opposed the concept of national health care. It was not until the administration of John F. Kennedy in 1961 that the idea for a national health plan once again received the support of the President.

After years of congressional debate in both House and Senate, several failed attempts to include a comprehensive health care plan in pending Social Security legislation, Medicare legislation finally passed the Congress and was signed by President Johnson on July 30, 1965.

As a Democrat, I am proud of the historical commitment of my Democratic colleagues, past and present, in supporting the concept of the Medicare Program. The Democratic Party has had, and continues to have, a commitment to those who are in the greatest need of the basic necessities of life, including quality health care for the elderly.

Mr. President, as a Member of the 99th Congress I am proud to have the opportunity to continue to support the Medicare Program. Today, Medicare provides basic health care to over 27 million elderly and 3 million disabled Americans. Without the Medicare Program, many elderly people in this country would not have access to quality health care in a time of rapidly escalating health care costs.

Medicare is in a critical phase in its history. During the past several years the Congress has carefully examined the Medicare Program in an attempt to continue to provide basic health care to those who are eligible by their payments into the Social Security system while working to contain the enormous costs of the program. We must continue to evaluate the program, especially as we reach the turn of the century and witness the aging of the postwar "baby boom" generation.

As a member of the Senate Subcommittee on Health, which has jurisdiction over the Medicare Program, I look forward to the continued analysis of the complex issues and concerns facing the Medicare Program. I encourage my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to make the Medicare Program a priority in their legislative agendas. The assurance of quality health care for the elderly is in all of our best interests and in the best interest of the Nation.

Again, I offer my sincere thanks to those who fought for the enactment of the Medicare Program in those early years, and for those who continue to work to improve the program for all those who rely upon it for their good health.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, today marks the 20th anniversary of the Medicare Program and I am pleased to join with my colleagues in honoring the important role this program plays in providing health care protection to our Nation's elderly and disabled.

The Medicare Program is our country's largest health care financing program, and except for Social Security, is the largest entitlement program. It provides national health insurance to nearly 27 million aged and 3 million disabled individuals. Throughout its 20-year history, the program has grown enormously and today accounts for more than 25 percent of the national health spending for hospital care and for more than 17 percent of all such spending for physicians' services.

The security that is provided by Medicare is evident by looking at health care statistics. The elderly—those aged 65 and older—account for 12 percent of our population, yet they account for 33 percent of all personal health care expenses. Furthermore, health care costs have traditionally increased much faster than the general rate of inflation. Adoption of the Medicare Program has allowed beneficiaries to contain the percent of their pension checks that must be spent on health care needs.

The Medicare Program is an extension of the Social Security Program, a program which Franklin Roosevelt referred to as the "cornerstone in a structure which is being built but it is by no means complete." While Social Security provides a minimum retirement benefit to vested workers, Medicare assures that our senior citizens are able to obtain necessary medical care, and that such care will be available at a reasonable cost. Together, these programs create a strong structure against the vicissitudes of life and attest to our commitment to assure that the Nation's elderly live a life of dignity and comfort.

As with Social Security, Medicare is a contract between the old and the young, between the employee and retiree, and between the beneficiary and the Government. By assuring that the elderly of today have adequate health care treatment, we show our compassion for our fellow man and reaffirm our belief that future generations will assure that similar care is available for us in our golden years.

By acknowledging the 20th anniversary of Medicare, we acknowledge what is best about America and consequently, it is with great pleasure that I wish a happy birthday to the Medicare Program.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, Medicare has always had a special meaning for me and my family. When I was first elected to the Senate in 1962, Congress was in the final stages of the long and successful battle to provide insurance for the elderly against the intolerable burden of serious illness. President Kennedy was proud of his role as the first President to propose Medicare. To him, it was the unfinished business of Social Security, and he worked for it and fought for it as Senator and as President.

The enactment of Medicare marked the dawn of a new day for health care in America. From the beginning, in 1965, Medicare has stood as a solemn promise by Congress and the Federal Government that the miracles of modern medicine will not be denied to our senior citizens, and that their golden years will be free from the fear of financial ruin because of catastrophic illness.

And, just as Medicare brought financial security and access to health care for senior citizens, so Medicaid has become a health care bill of rights for poor Americans. Before Medicaid, adequate health care was one of the many necessities that poor Americans were forced to do without. Society paid a high price for that denial of health care—in terms of unnecessary suffering, premature death, crippling illness, lost opportunity for productive lives, and worst of all, in lost hope and in the betrayal of the ideals of equality and compassion that have been among America's foremost promises to our people.

It is sad and ironic that after two decades of brilliant success, there are still some who would break the promise made by Medicare and Medicaid to our elderly and our poor.

The Reagan administration has consistently tried to turn these programs into scapegoats for the enormous budget deficits brought on by its massive tax cuts for the wealthy and excessive increases in military spending.

The benefit cuts already signed into law by the President will slash Medicare by a total of $11.5 billion over the next 5 years. Additional cuts proposed by the administration in its 1986 budget would take an additional $15.3 billion out of the pockets of our senior citizens.

The cuts enacted or proposed in Medicare total a staggering $26.8 billion between 1986 and 1990—an unconscionable $893 less in health protection for each senior citizen in America.

I believe that every elderly American deserves the same full protection promised 20 years ago when Medicare was signed into law.

Those who would cut Medicare benefits either do not know or do not care that our senior citizens are still deeply vulnerable to the high cost of health care.

Medicare currently pays for less than half of their medical costs. It does not cover long-term care, eye care, foot care, dental care, preventive care, or prescription drugs.

These gaps in coverage, combined with soaring inflation in health costs, mean that senior citizens will have to pay an average of $1,700 out of their own pockets for health care in 1985; $1 in every $7 of their limited incomes will go for health care—the same proportion they paid before Medicare was enacted in 1965. So, in a sense, we are right back where we started when Medicare was adopted—but this time we are moving in the wrong direction.

The story is the same for Medicaid. Changes in eligibility, enacted in 1981, have dropped half a million poor parents and children from the rolls. Thousands of disabled Americans have been denied disability benefits and Medicaid eligibility as a result of the Reagan administration's callous budget cuts.

And, that is only the beginning of their hardship—the administration's 1986 budget proposed to cut an incredible additional $17 billion out of Medicaid over the next 5 years.

Since 1977, the number of Americans without any health insurance coverage has increased 40 percent, to 35 million citizens. One million Americans are denied health care every year because they cannot pay for it; an additional 5 million Americans do not even seek the care they need, because they know it is too expensive. Six million Americans go without health care every year because they know they can't afford it—and that is 6 million Americans too many.

That is why this anniversary has been aptly called a "bittersweet" celebration. Our continuing pride in the achievements of Medicare and Medicaid is tempered by a growing concern for all those for whom the hope of these two essential programs has been diminished.

So let us take this occasion to renew our commitment to these twin programs that have done so much to redeem the promise of decent health care for every citizen. Let us revive the vision of those who saw the need so clearly a generation ago—and let us redouble our efforts to preserve and expand these programs for the future.

And, if we are faithful to our trust, I am convinced that this sad era of retrenchment and retreat will pass, and that, for Medicare and Medicaid, the next 20 years will be even greater than the first.

MEDICARE AFTER 20 YEARS

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, today marks the 20th anniversary of the Medicare Progam. I think that it is most appropriate for this body to recognize the significant contribution Medicare has made to our Nation's health and well-being. In addition, I think it is most appropriate that we reaffirm our commitment to basic health care for those persons who are entitled to Social Security cash benefits and their families.

Enacted in the Social Security Act of 1935, Medicare is an insurance program which currently provides health benefits to some 30 million aged and disabled persons and persons suffering from end-stage renal disease. It is the largest health financing program in the United States and one of the largest entitlement programs in the Federal budget.

Recent increases in the cost of health care provider reimbursements have serious financial implications for the trust fund which finances Medicare. Between 1960 and today, health care costs per capita have risen four times as much as the Consumer Price Index. Today, approximately 70 percent of Medicare spending for the elderly is for inpatient hospital care, while about 25 percent is for physician services.

According to recent estimates, before the end of the next decade the trust fund will begin to pay out more in benefits than it collects in taxes. This will cause serious problems for Medicare and threatens the protection of security against economic effects of illness. Clearly, without Medicare millions of older and disabled Americans could not afford the healing miracle or modern medicine.

In an attempt to protect the trust fund, recently, Congress made major changes in how Medicare reimburses hospitals for health care and is currently considering other proposals for the future. Additionally, Medicare beneficiaries have been required to steadily increase the amounts they pay for Medicare coverage.

As a strong supporter of Medicare, I reaffirm my commitment to making the program work for its beneficiaries in a fair and equitable economic system.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleagues in taking note of the 20th anniversary of the signing of the Medicare law. For our senior citizens, this is an important landmark. Despite some recent erosion of benefits, Medicare offers the senior citizen of today considerable protection from the high cost of medical care. Medicare is a program to celebrate.

Twenty years ago today, President Lyndon Johnson traveled to Independence, MO, to share the signing of Medicare with former President Truman. In the tradition of Franklin Roosevelt, Truman had called for protection for our citizens against the economic effects of illness. Many forces in our society opposed Government assistance for health care. Proposals for health insurance were put forward several times, but they never commanded a majority in Congress. Finally, in 1965, Congress and the President came to agreement and the Medicare Program was born.

The promise of Medicare was made with these words: "No longer will illness crush and destroy the savings that (older Americans) have so carefully put away over a lifetime so that they might enjoy dignity in their later years." This promise is as important today as it was when it was first made. Nothing is more frightening to a senior citizens than the prospect of ill health and an inability to pay for the proper care. A humane and caring society takes care of its elderly.

Mr. President, we give recognition today to the accomplishments of Medicare, but we must also note the need to be vigilant against attempts to weaken the program. Under the pressure of our budget problems, some would ask senior citizens to pay an increasing share of their medical costs. Such proposals undercut the accomplishments of the last 20 years. If we take the time to look back at the plight of our country's senior citizens before Medicare was in effect, we can see how important it is that we never go back to those days. We must maintain the integrity of Medicare and resist efforts to take health care benefits away from senior citizens.

Mr. President, today is a time for looking back with pride. As President Truman said to the signing ceremony, "* * * the signing of the Medicare bill * * * puts this nation right where it needs to be to be right." Those plain words from a plainspoken man really sum up the meaning of Medicare. And 20 years later Medicare is still the right program to support.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, today we take note of the 20th anniversary of Medicare, certainly a momentous time, but also a time to reflect on the direction the program should take to the future.

The 1965 act clarified our Nation's commitment to assist in meeting the health care needs of the aged and severely disabled and this is a commitment we must continue to preserve and honor. The services covered under Medicare have extended the lives of many of the disabled and improved the quality of life of many of the elderly. The number of aged enrollees in the Medicare Program increased from 19.1 million in 1966 to 26.8 million in 1983 and the number of disabled enrollees rose from 1.7 million in 1973 to 3.1 million in 1983.

Despite these successes, problems remain. Many services needed by the elderly, especially those aged 75 and over, are not covered by Medicare. Reimbursements for covered services increased from $4.6 billion in 1967 to $58 billion in 1983. And, the gap between program outlays and the revenue needed to support the program has grown so rapidly that the hospital insurance trust fund is expected to be depleted by 2000.

As these problems indicate, rapid changes have taken place in health care during these 20 years, with especially dramatic changes in the health care delivery system. Among other changes, numbers of physicians per capita have increased greatly and developments in medical technology have accelerated.

I believe we must view the anticipated financial problems in conjunction with the changing health care environment to revise and restructure the Medicare Program. While we maintain a constant commitment to the health needs of our Nation's elderly and disabled, we can also work to keep program expenditures within bounds that are acceptable to citizens and taxpayers. The Federal Government must be a prudent purchaser of health care, but has it within its power to influence quality of care and access to care. As we mark the 20th anniversary this year, it is appropriate that we reaffirm our commitment to these goals and we act now to what we anticipate the future will hold, rather than react to the crisis when it is upon us.

I commend my colleague from Montana for scheduling this time to celebrate the anniversary of Medicare and to express our continued support for this landmark program.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleagues today in commemorating the twentieth anniversary of the enactment of the Medicare Program. It was President Harry Truman who, in 1945, first proposed the enactment of a federally operated health insurance program, and it was 20 years later in 1965 that Medicare was signed into law by President Johnson as title XVIII of the Social Security Act.

When the Social Security Act was signed by Franklin Delano Roosevelt in August 1935, of which we soon will celebrate the 50th anniversary, he said that the act was, and I quote, "A cornerstone in the structure which is being built but it is by no means complete." It is my belief the Medicare Program was the single most important addition to the Social Security system over its first 50 years.

At the signing ceremony for Medicare at the Harry S. Truman Memorial Library in Independence, MO, former President Truman noted that it was a "responsive, forward-looking Congress" which enacted the Medicare Program despite opposition by special interest groups.

Indeed, Congress acted with great foresight—when the program took effect there were approximately 18 million Americans over the age of 65. Today, the elderly are one of the most rapidly growing segments of our society: Medicare beneficiaries now number 27 million persons who are over age 65 and 3 million who are permanently disabled. Over one-quarter million are Medicare beneficiaries in West Virginia. The relief of misery and fear among our senior citizens through the Medicare Program has made a major contribution not only to their health and well being, but to the health and well being of the Nation at a whole. President Johnson spoke of this at the signing ceremony. "No longer will older Americans be denied the miracle of modern medicine. No longer will illness crush and destroy the savings that they have so carefully put away over a lifetime so that they might enjoy dignity in their later years."

Over the intervening years, we have tried to improve the cost-effectiveness of the program. Given the growth in the population being served, it is particularly important that each dollar purchase a maximum amount of quality health care. However, our dedication to responsible spending must not remove our responsibilities to the well-being of our elderly citizens. Never again should older Americans live in fear of financial ruin or inadequate care when disease or illness strikes them. After spending a lifetime contributing to the growth and greatness of our Nation, they should be able to live with dignity and independence, outside the shadow of fear.

The Medicare Program has brought us substantially closer to this goal. Today, let us not only reflect on the events of 20 years ago, but let us also renew our commitment to the fulfillment of that vision.

MEDICARE CELEBRATES A BIRTHDAY

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague, Senator BAUCUS, today in honoring the 20th anniversary of the Medicare Program. In the last 20 years, the existence of a nationwide insurance program has benefited over 27 million aged and almost 3 million disabled individuals.

Medicare is the Nation's largest health financing program. The program itself is both a sign of hope to those whom adequate health care and medical attention would be out of reach, and a sign of strength and endurance of the greatness of this country.

Since its controversial inception in 1965, the Medicare Program has made basic health care a reality for millions of Americans. I applaud a system that works to help those who are less advantaged, by extending cash assistance to those who are in need. Accordingly, 70 percent of Medicare spending goes to the elderly for inpatient hospital care. Further, I commend a program that works effectively and equitably as Medicare.

Again, I would like to reaffirm my commitment to the Medicare Program, one of this Nation's most meaningful and effective tools in the struggle to maintain a decent standard of life for all Americans. I pledge my assistance in maintaining and promoting Medicare's continued success in the future.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, today marks the 20th anniversary of the signing of the Medicare amendments to the Social Security Act. As we all know health care cost and the Medicare and the Medicaid systems have been at the forefront of our discussions concerning the Federal deficit.

I believe that it is important, especially during this anniversary year, to keep those discussions focused on health care for our older Americans. But I do not believe that the focus of the discussion should be how can we reduce the Federal deficit by increasing the cost of the Medicare system to the elderly. The focus of the discussion concerning the Federal deficit must be how we can contain the ever-rising cost of health care for older Americans because older Americans cannot afford another increase in premiums or copayments.

It is unfortunate, Mr. President, but it appears that there is a growing opinion that our Nation's elderly population is not suffering; that they are well off and able to pay for their health care costs. I believe that this perception is most incorrect.

Approximatley 14.1 percent of all Americans 65 and older are living in poverty. This means that approximately 3.7 million elderly citizens are living in poverty. Another 8.3 percent or 2.2 million of all citizens 65 and older are living near or at the poverty level. Additionally, 73.4 percent of elderly households have an income below $20,000 with 42.6 percent of these households having an income under $10,000. Mr. President, I believe we can all agree these are not wealthy citizens.

The median income for an elderly household is approximately $12,000. From this $12,000, the average older American must pay approximately $1,100 per year, 15 percent of their income, for health care by paying Medicare premiums that are steadily increasing and by paying supplemental insurance premiums since our Medicare system does not cover all the health care costs associated with growing old.

Mr. President, these figures show that our older citizens cannot be forced to pay a larger share of the burden of preserving the Medicare system and I must hasten to add that I believe it would be most unfair for this Nation to expect them to carry any additional financial burden. I do not believe we will save the Medicare system by increasing premiums paid by the elderly for physician services or by requiring payments for home health care. The only result of increasing these payments would be to further burden our older Americans.

Although, Mr. President, the Medicare system has not achieved the goal of providing universal care and comprehensive health for the elderly, a goal set by President Lyndon Johnson, I believe that we cannot sidestep or ignore that goal nor ignore our commitment to the elderly. We must provide a universal and comprehensive health care system for our older Americans eliminating, once and for all, the fear of older Americans that illness and proper health care lead to poverty.

TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF MEDICARE AND MEDICAID

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, today we celebrate the 20 anniversary of the Medicare and Medicaid Programs. On July 30, 1965, President Lyndon B. Johnson signed into law Public Law 89-97, the "Social Security Amendments of 1965." This momentous occasion marked the culmination of over 30 years of congressional debate on the subject of national health insurance and heralded a new era of Federal involvement in the organization, delivery, and financing of health care services for this Nation's elderly and poor. However, the impact of these two programs has gone far beyond that of simply improving access to health services for beneficiaries and a method to reimburse those who supply health services. Medicare and Medicaid have exerted a powerful influence on health and health care services for all our citizens.

MEDICARE

The Medicare Program, also known as title XVIII of the Social Security Act, is the largest single source of health care financing in the United States. At the time of its enactment in 1965, half the Nation's elderly had no health insurance at all, while many of those with health insurance had inadequate coverage. The primary purpose of the program was to provide needed health insurance protection for older people. What emerged from the often heated debate was a two-part system: One, the hospital insurance [HI] portion, referred to as part A, which helps pay the cost of inpatient hospital services, skilled nursing facility services and home health services and two, the supplementary medical insurance [SMI] portion, referred to as part B, which helps to pay for the services of physicians, outpatient hospital services, laboratory services, and other medical and related services.

Over the past two decades, we have observed the dramatic growth of Medicare from a program that covered 19.5 million people at a cost of $4 billion in 1967 to one that the Congressional Budget Office estimates will cover more than 30 million beneficiaries—98 percent of this Nation's elderly and 3 million disabled—at a projected cost of $71.3 billion in fiscal year 1985. This entitlement program is second in size only to Social Security.

MEDICAID

Less attention was given initially to the passage of title XIX of the Social Security Act—the public assistance program known as Medicaid. Earlier legislation had paved the way for this joint Federal/State partnership to finance health care services for the poor. At the time of its enactment, some form of medical assistance was already available in every State at a cost of $1.3 billion in 1965. Medicaid was viewed as a logical consolidation of the Old Age Assistance Program, Medical Assistance for the Aged, Aid to Families With Dependent Children, and Aid to the Blind and the Permanently and Totally Disabled.

Like the Medicare Program, the Medicaid Program quickly far exceeded projected expenditures. Last year, the joint Federal/State outlays totaled $37.3 billion and the number of individuals participating was estimated to be 24 million.

COST CONTROL

It is interesting to note that since the enactment of titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act, Congress has repeatedly struggled to balance its pursuit of ensuring quality medical care services to beneficiaries while controlling costs. In its 1970 report on the then new Medicare law, the Senate Finance Committee prophetically stated that it was—

Particularly concerned that the utilization and review function is carried out in a manner that protects the patients while at the same time making certain that they remain in the hospital only so long as is necessary, and that every effort be made to move patients from the hospital to other facilities which can provide less expensive but equal care to meet their current medical needs.

Their early concerns are equally pertinent today.

Early in Medicare and Medicaid's history, the Congress and the administration began a series of legislative attempts to rein in costs while continuing efforts to foster quality care.

In response to ever-escalating costs, the Nixon administration instituted wage and price controls supported the development of health maintenance organizations. The PSRO Program was also put into place to help assure that only necessary and appropriate services were provided. The Carter administration proposed a limit on the increase in total inpatient revenues of hospitals and Congress also expanded coverage of home health services, and urged the use of ambulatory care settings to serve as a substitute for inpatient hospitalization. During the Reagan administration, the PSRO was revamped, limits were placed on Medicare hospital expenditures, and physician fees, and we began to examine ways to encourage beneficiaries to retain their private health insurance coverage for as long as possible. Increased beneficiary cost sharing and a renewed emphasis on the value of health maintenance organizations and other capitated health care systems and the use of ambulatory services also emerged. Coverage of hospice services was also made available.

With respect to Medicare in particular, because it is funded by a trust fund, it has been in all of our best interests to assure that costs were kept under control and the fund kept solvent.

With respect to Medicaid, a short term limit on total Federal expenditures was put into Place in 1981 and increasing flexibility was given to the States to implement rate-setting systems, capitated systems, and other methods of payment that encouraged both the provider and the patient to be cost conscious.

However, the most dramatic development in the area of cost containment has been the advent of the Medicare prospective payment system. After years of attempts to control cost, in 1983 the Congress turned to a system of prospectively determined rates which put the provider at risk and thus created new incentives to encourage change in the way services are provided.

Let me underscore, however, our continuing interest throughout the years, in maintaining access to quality services for the poor, elderly and disabled.

TWENTY YEARS OF PROGRESS

Much of our significant gains in life expectancy, improvement in the quality of life, and decreases in infant mortality can be directly attributed to the passage of the Social Security Amendments of 1965. The Medicare and Medicaid Programs have played a central role in improving both access to and quality of health care services for the country's elderly, poor, and disabled. Equally significant, it may be argued that Medicare and Medicaid have provided a foundation for the phenomenal growth and dissemination of new medical technologies that now contribute to the well-being of all the people of all nations.

CONCLUSION

We are now charged with the responsibility of assuring that these programs continue to serve those who depend upon them—both now and in the future. We have seen very real threats to the solvency of the health insurance trust fund, and we are continually being challenged by our efforts to control the Federal deficit. Clearly changes will need to be made as none of the solutions to the cost control problem put into place to date are perfect, including the DRG's, but we must continue to try.

We must also keep in mind the changing nature and size of the populations being served by these programs. Medicare, for example, has to contend with a rapidly growing population of the so-called old-old who may, over time, have very different service needs than those for whom we currently finance care.

Medicaid is also faced with a crisis of priorities. Fewer and fewer dollars are being directed toward the infants, children, and pregnant women eligible for the program because of the growing demand for long-term care services.

The changing nature of health care technology is also forcing us to reexamine the type and range of services we are willing to finance. What role should homecare play given the extraordinary number of people who can now be cared for in this setting? Should we move away from a traditional illness orientation toward more preventive kinds of services? What should the Federal role be with respect to the financing of long-term care services? Should Medicare review its "acute-care-only" policy?

I believe we can and will maintain these programs so that our investment in these programs and the beneficiaries they serve may continue long into the future.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me indicate again that there will be no more votes this evening. We have a number of matters we can dispose of by unanimous consent.

I wish to thank all Members for their cooperation and members of the staff on both the majority and minority sides.

If the distinguished minority leader is ready, I will start on the first bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am ready.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION HEALTH CARE PROGRAMS IMPROVEMENT ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate turn to the consideration of Calendar Order No. 220, S. 876, the veterans health care bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 876) to amend title 38, United States Code, to establish, extend, and improve certain Veterans' Administration health care programs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That (a) this Act may be cited as the "Veterans' Administration Health-Care Programs Improvement Act of 1985".

(b) Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or a repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 38, United States Code.

TITLE I—PILOT PROGRAMS

PILOT PROGRAM OF VIETNAM VETERAN RESOURCE CENTERS

SEC. 101. Section 612A is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(h)(1) In order to evaluate the effectiveness, feasibility, and desirability of providing veterans eligible for readjustment counseling under this section with additional services described in paragraph (2) of this subsection, through facilities furnishing such counseling, the Administrator, during the period beginning January 1, 1986, and ending December 31, 1988, shall conduct a pilot program to provide and coordinate the provision of such additional services.

"(2) The additional services referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection that shall be provided and coordinated under such pilot program are—

"(A) counseling with respect to and assistance in applying for all benefits and services under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration for which veterans participating in the pilot program may be eligible;

"(B) employment counseling, training, placement, and related services described in sections 2003 and 2003A of this title or provided under any other laws administered by the Secretary of Labor;

"(C) initial intake and referral services with respect to alcohol or drug dependence or abuse disabilities and followup services for veterans who have received treatment for such dependence or abuse disabilities; and

"(D) coordination assistance for veterans participating in the pilot program with respect to such veterans' receipt of (i) services provided under the pilot program, and (ii) other benefits and services provided under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, the Secretary of Labor, or any other Federal agency or official.

"(3)(A) In order to carry out the pilot program under this subsection, the Administrator shall—

"(i) designate as demonstration projects ten facilities which, on the date of the enactment of this section are providing readjustment counseling (which projects shall be referred to as Vietnam Veteran Resource Centers (hereinafter in this subsection referred to as 'Centers')),

"(ii) provide such additional staff and other resources as are necessary to enable such Centers to provide the services referred to in paragraph (2) (A), (C), and (D) of this subsection, and

"(iii) notify the Secretary of Labor of the need for the assignment, pursuant to subparagraph (B)(ii) of this paragraph, of personnel to provide the services described in paragraph (2)(B) of this subsection at such Centers.

"(B)(i) The Administrator shall be responsible for coordinating the assignment and use of employees, on full- or part-time bases, as appropriate, in each Center and, shall in carrying out that responsibility, make maximum feasible use of the Veterans' Administration employees who are providing services at each facility on the date it is designated as a Center under this subsection.

"(ii) The Secretary of Labor shall provide for the assignment to each Center, on full- or part-time bases, as appropriate, of disabled veterans' outreach specialists appointed pursuant to section 2003A of this title or employees on the staffs of local employment service offices who are assigned to perform services pursuant to section 2004 of this title.

"(4)(A) In order to ensure appropriate guidance, coordination, implementation, and assessment of the pilot program under this subsection, the Administrator shall establish, and provide appropriate staffing and other resources for, a Vietnam Veteran Resource Center Coordinating Committee (hereinafter in this subsection referred to as the 'Committee').

"(B) The Committee shall be composed of—

"(i) a member or members appointed by and representing the Administrator;

"(ii) a member or members appointed by and representing the Chief Medical Director;

"(iii) a member or members appointed by and representing the Chief Benefits Director; and

"(iv) a member appointed by and representing the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Veterans' Employment.

"(C) Not less frequently than every 6 months, the Committee shall report to the Administrator, the Chief Medical Director, the Chief Benefits Director, and the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Veterans' Employment on the implementation and status of the pilot program. The first such report shall be submitted not later than June 30, 1986.

"(5) After the Committee is established pursuant to paragraph (4) of this subsection, the Administrator may delegate to the Chief Medical Director the responsibility for carrying out the pilot program.

"(6)(A) Not later than April 1, 1987, the Administrator shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on the experience under the pilot program during its first 15 months of operation. The report shall include—

"(i) the Administrator's assessment of—

"(I) the effectiveness of the pilot program in providing and coordinating the provision of the services described in paragraph (2) of this subsection and counseling and services furnished under subsections (a) and (b) of this section; and

"(II) the cost-effectiveness of the program;

"(ii) a description of any administrative actions that the Administrator plans to take generally to increase the coordination of the provision of such services to eligible veterans and to other veterans;

"(iii) any recommendations for legislation, relating to the provision of such services to eligible veterans and to other veterans, that the Administrator considers appropriate; and

"(iv) a comparison of such assessment, plans, and recommendations with the evaluation of and the recommendations relating to the readjustment counseling program included in the report required by subsection (g)(2) of this section.

"(B) Not later than April 1, 1989, the Administrator shall submit to such Committees a final report on the program. The report shall include updates of all information provided in the report submitted pursuant to subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, the Administrator's final assessment of the pilot program based on 36 months of operation, and any recommendation for administrative or legislative action that the Administrator considers appropriate to include in the report.".

SEC. 102. (a) Subchapter II of chapter 17 is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 620B. Community-based psychiatric residential treatment for chronically mentally ill veterans; pilot program

"(a)(1) The Administrator, in furnishing hospital, nursing home, and domiciliary care and medical and rehabilitative services under this chapter, may, during the period beginning January 1, 1986, and ending December 31, 1989, conduct a pilot program under which the Administrator may contract for care and treatment and rehabilitative services in halfway houses, therapeutic communities, psychiatric residential treatment centers, and other community-based treatment facilities (hereinafter in the section referred to as 'contract facilities') for eligible veterans suffering from chronic mental illness disabilities. Such pilot program shall be planned, designed, and conducted by the Chief Medical Director, with the approval of the Administrator, so as to demonstrate (A) any medical advantages and cost-effectiveness that may result from furnishing such care and services to veterans with such disabilities in such contract facilities rather than in inpatient facilities over which the Administrator has direct jurisdiction, and (B) the potential, as a result of the furnishing of such care and services, for enabling such veterans to live in settings other than inpatient facilities.

"(2) Before furnishing such care and services to any veteran through a contract facility, the Administrator shall approve (in accordance with criteria which the Administrator shall prescribe by regulation) the quality and effectiveness of the program operated by such facility for the purpose for which such veteran is to be furnished such care and services.

"(b) In the case of each eligible veteran provided care and services under this section, the Administrator shall designate a Veterans' Administration employee to provide case management services.

"(c) The Administrator may provide in-kind assistance (through the services of Veterans' Administration employees and the sharing of other Veterans' Administration resources) to a contract facility under this section. Any such in-kind assistance shall be provided under a contract between the Veterans' Administration and the contract facility. The Administrator may provide such assistance only for use solely in the furnishing of appropriate services under this section and only if, under such contract, the Veterans' Administration receives reimbursement for the full cost of such assistance, including the cost of services and supplies and normal depreciation and amortization of equipment. Such reimbursement may be made by reduction in the charges to the United States or by payment to the United States. Any funds received through such reimbursement shall be credited to funds allotted to the Veterans' Administration facility that provided the assistance.

"(d) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) The term 'eligible veteran' means a veteran who at the time of referral to a contract facility—

"(i) is being furnished hospital, domiciliary, or nursing home care from the Veterans' Administration for a service-connected chronic mental illness disability, or

"(ii) is being furnished such care from the Veterans' Administration for a chronic mental illness disability and is a veteran described in section 612(f)(2) of this title.

"(2) The term 'case management' includes the coordination and facilitation of all services furnished to a veteran by the Veterans' Administration, either directly or through a contract, including, but not limited to, screening, assessment of needs, planning, referral (including referral for services to be furnished by the Veterans' Administration, either directly or through a contract, or by an entity other than the Veterans' Administration), monitoring, reassessment, and followup.

"(e)(1) Not later than February 1, 1989, the Administrator shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives an interim report on the experience under the pilot program during the first 36 months of the program. The report shall include the Administrator's interim evaluation and findings regarding—

"(A) the quality of care furnished to participating veterans through contract facilities;

"(B) the effectiveness of the pilot program in enabling the participating veterans to live outside of Veterans' Administration inpatient facilities and to achieve independence in living and functioning in their communities; and

"(C) the effect of the pilot program on the average daily census in the Veterans' Administration hospitals, nursing homes, and domiciliary facilities participating in the program (taking into account whether the beds previously occupied by the participating veterans were subsequently occupied by other eligible veterans or remained unoccupied).

"(2) Not later than April 1, 1990, the Administrator shall submit to such Committees a final report on the pilot program. The report shall include updates of all information provided in the interim report submitted pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Administrator's final evaluation, findings, and conclusions regarding the program based on 48 months of operation, and any recommendations for administrative or legislative action that the Administrator considers appropriate to include in such report.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 17 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 620A the following new item:

"620B. Community-based psychiatric residential treatment for chronically mentally ill veterans; pilot program.".

PILOT PROGRAM OF NONINSTITUTIONAL ALTERNATIVES TO INSTITUTIONAL CARE

SEC. 103. (a) Subchapter II of chapter 17 is further amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 620C. Noninstitutional alternatives to institutional care; pilot programs

"(a)(1) In order to evaluate the effectiveness, feasibility, and desirability of various actions that would obviate the need for furnishing hospital, nursing home, or domiciliary care to veterans eligible under this chapter for and otherwise in need of such care, the Administrator, during the period beginning January 1, 1986, and ending December 31, 1989, and subject to subsection (c) of this section, shall conduct a pilot program under which such veterans will be furnished at ten demonstration project sites medical, rehabilitative, and health-related services in noninstitutional settings. Not less than five of such projects shall involve the use of a geriatric evaluation unit at a Veterans' Administration health-care facility.

"(2) In selecting veterans for participation in the program, the Administrator shall accord priority to veterans who have service-connected disabilities, to veterans who are 65 years of age or older, and to veterans who are totally and permanently disabled.

"(b)(1)(A) In order to avoid duplication of services available from the Veterans' Administration and other sources to veterans participating in the pilot program and to avoid fragmentation of effort under the program, the Administrator shall in the conduct of the program (i) furnish appropriate health-related services solely through contracts with appropriate public and private agencies that provide such services, and (ii) in the case of each veteran furnished services under the program, appoint a Veterans' Administration employee to furnish case management services.

"(B) For the purposes of subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, 'case management' includes the coordination and facilitation of all services furnished to a veteran by the Veterans' Administration, either directly or through a contract, including, but not limited to, screening, assessment of needs, planning, referral (including referral for services to be furnished by the Veterans' Administration, either directly or through a contract, or by an entity other than the Veterans' Administration), monitoring, reassessment, and followup.

"(2) In order further to avoid such duplication and fragmentation and in order to evaluate the cost-effectiveness of utilizing certain health services of agencies other than the Veterans' Administration in cases in which no Veterans' Administration facility in the vicinity of a demonstration project provides such services, the Administrator, in not more than two of the projects, may utilize appropriate health services of appropriate public and private agencies that furnish such services.

"(3) The Administrator may provide in-kind assistance (through the services of Veterans' Administration employees and the sharing of other Veterans' Administration resources) to a facility furnishing services to veterans under paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection. Any such in-kind assistance shall be provided under a contract between the Veterans' Administration and the facility concerned. The Administrator may provide such assistance only for use solely in the furnishing of appropriate services under this section and only if, under such contract, the Veterans' Administration receives reimbursement for the full cost of such assistance, including the cost of services and supplies and normal depreciation and amortization of equipment. Such reimbursement may be made by reduction in the charges to the United States or by payment to the United States. Any funds received through such reimbursement shall be credited to funds allotted to the Veterans' Administration facility that provided the assistance.

"(c)(1) The total cost of conducting the pilot program under this section shall not exceed 60 percent of the cost that would have been incurred by the Veterans' Administration during the period of the pilot program if the veterans being furnished services under the pilot program had been furnished, instead, nursing home care under section 610 of this title. In any one fiscal year, the cost of carrying out the pilot program shall not exceed 65 percent of the cost that would have been so incurred for such year under such section 610.

"(2) Expenditures for services furnished to veterans under the pilot program shall be made from appropriated funds that would otherwise have been expended to provide intermediate hospital care to eligible veterans.

"(d)(1) The Administrator shall conduct a study of the pilot program to determine with respect to the participating veterans—

"(A) the feasibility, medical advantages, and cost-effectiveness of the services furnished under the program as an alternative to hospital, nursing home, or domiciliary care; and

"(B) the extent to which such a program can—

"(i) furnish such veterans with more appropriate kinds and levels of care than they would otherwise receive;

"(ii) reduce hospital, nursing home, or domiciliary facility admission rates for such veterans;

"(iii) reduce the number of days that such veterans are institutionalized;

"(iv) reduce mortality rates among such veterans; and

"(v) reduce the cost of long-term care for such veterans under this chapter.

"(2) Not later than February 1, 1989, the Administrator shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives an interim report on the study required by paragraph (1) of this subsection setting forth the Administrator's findings based on the results of the study of the program's first 36 months experience. The report shall include a description of the administration of the program (including a description of the veterans furnished services and of the services furnished under the pilot program), the Administrator's interim evaluation of and findings on the program (including the matters referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection), and any recommendations for administrative or legislative action that the Administrator considers appropriate to include in the report.

"(3) Not later than April 1, 1990, the Administrator shall submit to such Committees a final report on the study required by paragraph (1) of this subsection. The report shall include updates of all information provided in the interim report submitted pursuant to paragraph (2) of this subsection, the Administrator's final evaluation, findings, and conclusions regarding the program based on 48 months of operation (in the context of an assessment, which the report shall contain, of the needs of older eligible veterans for noninstitutional health and health-related services and of the availability of such services from non-Veterans' Administration sources), and any recommendations for administrative or legislative action that the Administrator considers appropriate to include in the report.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 17 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 620B (as added by section 9(b) of the Act) the following new item:

"620C. Noninstitutional alternatives to institutional care; pilot program.".

CHIROPRACTIC SERVICES PILOT PROGRAM

SEC. 104. (a)(1) Subchapter III of chapter 17 is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 630A. Chiropractic services; pilot program

"(a) The Administrator, subject to the provisions of this section, shall conduct a pilot program consisting of not less than one demonstration project in each of five geographic regions of the United States during the period beginning January 1, 1986, and ending December 31, 1988—

"(1) to furnish certain chiropractic services to veterans eligible for medical services under this chapter; and

"(2) to evaluate the therapeutic benefits and the cost-effectiveness of furnishing such chiropractic services to such veterans.

In developing the pilot program, the Administrator shall consult with the Secretary of Defense regarding the demonstration projects carried out by the Secretary under section 632(b) of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1985 (10 U.S.C. 1092 note).

"(b)(1) The Administrator shall, subject to subsection (c) of this section and under regulations which the Administrator shall prescribe, reimburse a veteran eligible for medical services under this chapter for the reasonable charge for chiropractic services furnished to the veteran under the demonstration projects carried out under subsection (a) of this section, for which such veteran has made payment, if—

"(A) such chiropractic services were for the treatment of a service-connected neuromusculoskeletal condition of the spine,

"(B) the veteran is a veteran who has been furnished hospital care by the Veterans' Administration for a neuromusculoskeletal condition of the spine within a 12-month period prior to the furnishing of such chiropractic services, or

"(C) the veteran is a veteran described in section 612(f)(2) of this title who has been furnished hospital care or medical services by the Veterans' Administration for a neuromusculoskeletal condition of the spine, to the extent that such veteran is not entitled to such chiropractic services or reimbursement for the expenses of such services under an insurance policy or contract, medical or hospital service agreement, membership or subscription contract, or similar arrangement for the purpose of providing, paying for, or reimbursing expenses for such services.

"(2) The Administrator may, in lieu of reimbursing a veteran for a reasonable charge for chiropractic services under paragraph (1) of this subsection, make payment of the reasonable charge for such chiropractic services directly to the chiropractor who furnished such services.

"(c)(1) The Administrator shall, in consultation with appropriate public and nonprofit private organizations and other Federal departments and agencies that provide reimbursement for chiropractic services, establish a schedule of reasonable charges for chiropractic services furnished under the demonstration projects carried out under subsection (a) of this section. Such schedule shall be consistent with the reasonable charges allowed under section 1842 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395u).

"(2) The amount payable by the Administrator for chiropractic services furnished under such demonstration projects shall not exceed $600 in any 12-month period in the case of any veteran.

"(d)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, total expenditures for chiropractic services reimbursed under this section shall not exceed $2,000,000 in any fiscal year.

"(2) Expenditures for such services shall be made from appropriations that would otherwise have been expended for travel and incidental expenses under section 111 of this title.

"(e) Not later than April 1 of each of the years 1987, 1988, and 1989, the Administrator shall prepare and submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives an annual report on the pilot program carried out under this section during the preceding fiscal year. Each such report shall include for such fiscal year—

"(1) the number of requests made by eligible veterans for reimbursement or payment for chiropractic services under this section and the number of such veterans who made such requests;

"(2) the number of such reimbursements or payments made and the number of veterans to or for whom such reimbursements or payments were made; and

"(3) the total amount of the expenditures for such reimbursements and payments.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 630 the following new item:

"630A. Chiropractic services; pilot program.".

(b) Section 601 is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(9) The term 'chiropractic services' means the manual manipulation of the spine performed by a chiropractor (who is licensed as such by the State in which he or she performs such services and who meets the uniform minimum standards promulgated for chiropractors under section 1861(r)(5) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(r)(5))) to correct a subluxation of the spine. For the purposes of this paragraph, such term does not include physical examinations, laboratory tests, radiologic services, or other tests or services determined by the Administrator to be excluded.".

TITLE II—EXTENSIONS OF AUTHORITIES AND ELIGIBILITIES

DEFINITION OF VIETNAM ERA

SEC. 201. (a) Section 101(29) is amended to read as follows:

"(29) The term 'Vietnam era' means (A) the period beginning on August 5, 1964, and ending on May 7, 1975, and (B) the period beginning on February 21, 1961, and ending on May 7, 1975, in the case of a veteran who served in the Republic of Vietnam during such period.".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on October 1, 1985.

EXTENSION OF INTERIM HEALTH-CARE ELIGIBILITY BASED ON EXPOSURE TO DIOXIN OR OTHER TOXIC SUBSTANCES IN VIETNAM OR TO NUCLEAR RADIATION

SEC. 202. Paragraph (3) of subsection (e) of section 610 is amended to read as follows:

"(3) Hospital and nursing home care and medical services may not be provided under or by virtue of subsection (a)(5) of this section after September 30, 1989.".

COUNSELING FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR

SEC. 203. (a)(1) Subchapter II of chapter 17 is further amended by adding after section 612A the following new section:

"§ 612B. Eligibility for counseling for former prisoners of war

"The Administrator may establish a program under which, upon the request of a veteran who is a former prisoner of war, the Administrator may, within the limits of Veterans' Administration facilities, furnish counseling to such veteran to assist such veteran in overcoming the psychological effects of such veteran's detention or internment as a prisoner of war.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 17 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 612A, the following:

"612B. Eligibility for counseling for former prisoners of war.".

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall take effect on October 1, 1985.

ALCOHOL AND DRUG TREATMENT AND REHABILITATION

SEC. 204. (a) Section 620A is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(1), by striking out "pilot" both places it appears;

(2) in subsection (e)—

(A) by striking out "fifth" and inserting in lieu thereof "eighth"; and

(B) by striking out "pilot";

(3) by amending subsection (f) to read as follows:

"(f)(1) The Administrator shall monitor the performance of each contract facility furnishing care and services under the program carried out under subsection (a) of this section to determine—

"(A) with respect to the program, the medical advantages and cost-effectiveness that result from furnishing such care and services;

"(B) with respect to the contract facilities generally—

"(i) the level of success under the program, considering—

"(I) the rate of successful rehabilitation for veterans furnished care and services under the program;

"(II) the rate of readmission to contract facilities under the program or to Veterans' Administration health-care facilities by such veterans with respect to disabilities referred to in subsection (a) of this section;

"(III) whether the care and services furnished under the program obviated the need of such veterans for hospitalization for such disabilities;

"(IV) the average duration of the care and services furnished such veterans under the program;

"(V) the ability of the program to aid in the transition of such veterans back into their communities; and

"(VI) any other factors that the Administrator considers appropriate;

"(ii) the total cost for the care and services furnished by each contract facility under the program;

"(iii) the average cost per veteran for the care and services furnished under the program; and

"(iv) the appropriateness of such costs, by comparison to—

"(I) the average charges for the same types of care and services furnished generally by other comparable halfway houses, therapeutic communities, psychiatric residential treatment centers, and other community-based treatment facilities; and

"(II) the historical costs for such care and services for the period of time that the program carried out under subsection (a) of this section was a pilot program, taking into account economic inflation.

"(2) Not later than February 1, 1988, the Administrator shall transmit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on the experience under the program during the preceding 4 fiscal years, including, but not limited to (A) a description of the care and services furnished, (B) the matters referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection, and (C) the Administrator's findings, assessment, and recommendations regarding the program conducted under this section."; and

(4) by amending the catchline to read as follows:

"§ 620A. Treatment and rehabilitation for alcohol or drug dependence or abuse disabilities".

(b) The item relating to such section in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 17 is amended to read as follows:

"620A. Treatment and rehabilitation for alcohol or drug dependence or abuse disabilities.".

TITLE III—HEALTH-CARE MANAGEMENT

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION GRADE REDUCTION

SEC. 301. (a) Section 210(b) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3)(A)(i) The Administrator may not in fiscal year 1986 or any subsequent fiscal year implement a grade reduction described in division (ii) of this subparagraph unless the Administrator first submits to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report containing a detailed plan for such reduction and a detailed justification for the plan, including a determination by the Administrator, together with data supporting such determination, that, in the personnel area concerned, the Veterans' Administration has a disproportionate number of employees at the salary grade or grades selected for reduction in comparison to the number of such employees at the salary levels involved who perform comparable functions in other departments and agencies of the Federal Government and in non-Federal entities. Any such report shall be submitted not later than the beginning of a period of 90 calendar days (not including any day on which either House of Congress is not in session) prior to the implementation of any proposed grade reduction.

"(ii) A grade reduction referred to in division (i) of this subparagraph is a systematic reduction, for the purpose of reducing the average salary cost for Veterans' Administration employees described in division (iii) of this subparagraph, in the number of such Veterans' Administration employees at any specific grade level.

"(iii) The employees referred to in division (ii) of this subparagraph include—

"(I) health-care personnel who are determined by the Administrator to be providing either direct patient-care services or services incident to direct patient-care services; and

"(II) individuals who meet the definition of professional employee as set forth in section 7103(a)(15) of title 5 and are employed in the capacity of engineers or attorneys.

"(B) Not later than the forty-fifth day after the Administrator submits a report pursuant to subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, the Comptroller General of the United States shall submit to such Committees on Veterans' Affairs a report on the Administrator's compliance with such subparagraph and shall include in the report the Comptroller General's opinion as to the accuracy of the Administrator's determination (and of the data supporting such determination) made pursuant to such subparagraph.

"(C) In the case of Veterans' Administration employees not described in division (iii) of subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, the Administrator may not in any fiscal year implement a systematic reduction for the purpose of reducing the average salary cost for such Veterans' Administration employees that will result in a reduction in the number of such Veterans' Administration employees at any specific grade level at a rate greater than the rate of the reductions systematically being made in the numbers of employees at such grade level in all other agencies and departments of the Federal Government combined.".

MEDICAL QUALITY-ASSURANCE RECORDS

SEC. 302. Section 3305 is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by adding a comma and "other than reports submitted pursuant to section 4152 of this title," after "program"; and

(2) in subsection (b), by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(6) Nothing in this section shall be construed as authorizing or requiring withholding from any person or entity the disclosure of statistical information regarding Veterans' Administration health-care programs (including information on aggregate morbidity and mortality rates associated with specific activities at individual Veterans' Administration health-care facilities) that does not implicitly or explicitly identify individual Veterans' Administration patients or employees, or individuals who participated in the conduct of a medical quality-assurance review.".

DISCIPLINARY BOARD ACTION INVOLVING CLINICAL PRIVILEGES

SEC. 303. Section 4110 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(f) This section applies in any case in which a reduction or revocation of the clinical privileges of any person employed in a position described in paragraph (1) of section 4104 of this title is proposed by reason of a charge of inaptitude, inefficiency, or misconduct. A disciplinary board may recommend and the Administrator may impose a reduction or revocation of clinical privileges only (1) in a case in which, prior to the hearing under this section, such person has been provided with notice of the proposal to reduce or revoke such privileges, and (2) on the basis of deficiency in such person's clinical practice.

"(g) Nothing in this section shall limit the Administrator's authority to protect the health and safety of veterans by temporarily reassigning an employee for the purpose of suspending the employee's exercise of clinical privileges, or for the purpose of otherwise restricting the employee's clinical activities, pending the outcome of a proceeding under this section.".

QUALITY ASSURANCE AND CREDENTIALING

SEC. 304. (a) Chapter 73 is amended by adding at the end the following new subchapter:

"Subchapter V—Quality Assurance

"§ 4151. Responsibilities for quality assurance

"(a) The Administrator shall—

"(1) establish and conduct a comprehensive quality-assurance program to monitor and evaluate the quality of health care furnished by the Department of Medicine and Surgery;

"(2) delineate the responsibilities of the Department of Medicine and Surgery with respect to the conduct of the Veterans' Administration quality-assurance program; and

"(3) allocate sufficient resources, and sufficient personnel with the necessary skills and qualifications, to enable the Department of Medicine and Surgery to carry out such delineated quality-assurance responsibilities.

"(b) The Inspector General of the Veterans' Administration shall allocate sufficient resources, and sufficient personnel with the necessary skills and qualifications, to enable the Inspector General to monitor the quality-assurance program conducted by the Department of Medicine and Surgery.

"(c) The Administrator shall, as part of the comprehensive quality-assurance program established and conducted pursuant to subsection (a)(1) of this section, require the Chief Medical Director—

"(1) in consultation with the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs and the Surgeons General of the Armed Forces and other appropriate professional bodies, to establish and maintain a compilation of prevailing national mortality and morbidity standards for each type of surgical procedure conducted by the Department of Medicine and Surgery;

"(2)(A) to collect data on mortality and morbidity rates for each surgical procedure, conducted by the Department of Medicine and Surgery; and

"(B) to compile such data for inclusion in the report to be submitted pursuant to section 4152 of this title (i) for each cardiac surgery, heart transplant, and renal transplant program, and (ii) in the aggregate, for each other such surgical procedure;

"(3) to—

"(A) compare the data so compiled to the standards compiled pursuant to clause (1) of this subsection,

"(B) make an analysis of the relationship between such data and the (i) characteristics of the patient population, (ii) the level of risk for the procedure involved, based on patient age, the type and severity of the disease, the effect of any complicating diseases, and the degree of difficulty of the procedure, and (iii) any other factors that the Chief Medical Director considers appropriate,

"(C) evaluate such data in light of the factors described in divisions (i) through (iii) of subclause (B) of this clause in order to determine whether there are any significant deviations from the standards that would indicate deficiencies in the quality of care, and

"(D) explain any such deviations; and

"(4) to make any recommendations based on data compiled and the comparisons, analyses, evaluations, and explanations made pursuant to clause (3) of this subsection.

"§ 4152. Reports

"(a) Not later than January 1 of 1987, 1989, and 1991, the Chief Medical Director shall submit a report to the Administrator on the experience through the end of the prior fiscal year under the quality-assurance program carried out pursuant to section 4151(a) of this title. Each such report shall include the data compiled and the comparisons, analyses, evaluations, and explanations made pursuant to subsection (c)(3) of section 4151 of this title with respect to the period covered by such report and any recommendations made pursuant to subsection (c)(4) of such section. Not later than 60 days after receiving each such report, the Administrator shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives a copy of the report, together with any comments concerning the report that the Administrator considers appropriate.

"(b) A report submitted pursuant to subsection (a) of this section shall not be considered a record or document as described in section 3305(a) of this title.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 73 is amended by adding at the end the following:

"SUBCHAPTER V—QUALITY ASSURANCE

"4151. Responsibilities for quality assurance.

"4152. Reports.".

(c)(1) Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report describing in detail the Veterans' Administration's current efforts and future plans for monitoring the credentials of Veterans' Administration health-care professionals.

(2) The report required to be submitted by paragraph (1) shall include a description of the Veterans' Administration's policies, procedures, and formal arrangements regarding the exchange of relevant information with—

(A) appropriate State medical or other health-professional licensing bodies;

(B) the Federation of State Medical Boards;

(C) the American Medical Association; and

(D) such other public or private entities as the Administrator considers appropriate that are involved with the issuance or monitoring of health-care professional licenses in order (i) to determine the current and past licensure and clinical privilege status for those health-care professionals who are seeking employment with or who are currently employed by the Veterans' Administration, and (ii) to provide appropriate information to such entities about each health-care professional whose employment with the Veterans' Administration is terminated—

(I) following the completion of a disciplinary action relating to such health-care professional's clinical competence,

(II) voluntarily after having had such health-care professional's clinical privileges restricted or revoked, or

(III) voluntarily after serious concerns about such health-care professional's clinical competence have been raised but not resolved.

(3) With reference to any policies, procedures, or formal arrangements described in paragraph (2) which have not been implemented at the time the report required to be submitted by paragraph (1) is submitted to the Committees, the Administrator shall include in the report a timetable for the implementation of such policies, procedures, and arrangements and shall thereafter report to the Committees on implementation progress every 3 months until full implementation is achieved, at which point a final such report shall be submitted to the Committees.

TITLE IV—MEDICAL FACILITY CONSTRUCTION AND PLANNING

PART A—PERMANENT ANNUAL AUTHORIZATION PROCESS

ANNUAL VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION MEDICAL FACILITY CONSTRUCTION AUTHORIZATIONS

SEC. 401. (a) Section 5004 is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)—

(A) in clause (1), by striking out "unless each committee has first adopted a resolution approving such construction, alteration, or acquisition and setting forth the estimated cost thereof; and" and inserting in lieu thereof "except as authorized by a law based on legislation reported from the committees setting forth the amount that may be appropriated and expended for such construction, alteration, or acquisition;"; and

(B) by redesignating clause (2) as clause (4) and inserting the following new clauses (2) and (3):

"(2) no funds may be expended to construct, remodel, extend, or acquire, or develop preliminary plans (except to the extent necessary to develop project requirements) for, a medical facility for the furnishing of hospital care if the construction, remodeling, extension, or acquisition involves a total expenditure of more than $20,000,000, except as authorized by a law based on legislation reported from the committees;

"(3) no new or replacement medical facility shall be constructed or acquired within excess of 700 hospital beds and no project that involves a total expenditure of more than $20,000,000 for remodeling or extending a medical facility for the furnishing of hospital care shall be undertaken if upon completion of such project the number of hospital beds at the facility would exceed 700; and";

(2) by amending subsection (c) to read as follows:

"(c) The contract price for any construction, alteration, lease, or other acquisition that is approved by a law or resolutions described in subsection (a) of this section may exceed the amount set forth pursuant to such subsection in the pertinent provisions of such law or resolutions by an amount determined by multiplying such amount by the lesser of (1) the percent, if any, as determined by the Administrator, by which construction, alteration, lease, or other acquisition costs, as the case may be, increased from the date of such approval to the date of contract, or (2) 10 percent."; and

(3) in subsection (d) by striking out "for construction, alteration, lease, or other acquisition by each committee under subsection (a) of this section" and inserting in lieu thereof "by each committee under subsection (a) of this section for a lease".

(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, the amendments made by subsection (a) shall take effect on October 1, 1986.

(2) The amendments made by subsection (a)(1) shall take effect with respect to appropriations for fiscal year 1987 but shall not apply with respect to appropriations or expenditures for the construction, alteration, or acquisition of a medical facility if such construction, alteration, or acquisition was approved in resolutions adopted by the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives prior to September 30, 1985.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION HOSPITAL FACILITY PLANNING

SEC. 402. (a) Subchapter I of chapter 81 is amended by inserting after section 5004 the following new section:

"§ 5004A. Hospital facility planning

"(a) In order to ensure that decisions regarding the need for and size of each proposed new or replacement Veterans' Administration medical facility for the furnishing of hospital care are made taking into account appropriate statutory eligibility and priorities for health care from the Veterans' Administration, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs and the Comptroller General of the United States, after consultation with the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs, veterans' service organizations, and representatives of the private hospital industry, shall jointly develop and submit to the appropriate committees of the Congress a methodology for determining the appropriate types of hospital beds and the appropriate numbers of each type of hospital bed to be provided for in each proposed project for the construction of new or replacement facilities for the furnishing of hospital care by the Veterans' Administration.

"(b) The methodology developed pursuant to subsection (a) of this section shall take into account (1) the projected need for health care of veterans residing in the geographic area to be served by the proposed health-care facility who have service-connected disabilities and veterans residing in such areas who meet the income criteria for the receipt of pension under chapter 15 of this title, and (2) any recent or planned changes in treatment modalities for the furnishing of inpatient and outpatient care which might affect the demand for inpatient bed capacity.

"(c)(1) Not later than October 1, 1986, the Administrator and the Comptroller General shall submit to the appropriate committees of the Congress a joint report on the methodology developed pursuant to subsection (a) of this section.

"(2) Not later than October 1, 1987, the Administrator and the Comptroller General shall submit to such committees a joint report on the implementation of such methodology.

"(3) The Comptroller General shall submit to such committees such further reports as the Comptroller General considers appropriate regarding the implementation of such methodology or regarding the need to revise such methodology.

"(d) No funds may be expended after April 1, 1987, for the development of preliminary plans for a facility described in subsection (a) of this section unless the types of beds and number of each type to be provided in such facility are based on the methodology developed pursuant to subsection (a) of this section.".

"5004A. Hospital facility planning.".

PART B—FISCAL YEAR 1986 CONSTRUCTION AUTHORIZATIONS

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION MEDICAL FACILITY CONSTRUCTION AUTHORIZATIONS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1986

SEC. 411. (a) For the purposes of the medical facility construction projects referred to in subsection (b) and other construction projects and for other purposes, there are authorized to be appropriated to the Veterans' Administration for fiscal year 1986 (1) $417,200,000 to any appropriations account from which payments for medical facility construction projects estimated to cost $2,000,000 or more are made, and (2) $194,400,000 to any appropriations account from which payments for medical facility construction projects estimated to cost less than $2,000,000 are made.

(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) and subject to the limitation in subsection (a)(1), the maximum amounts authorized to be appropriated and expended for the following medical facility construction projects are as follows:

(A) Houston, Texas (Replacement and Modernization), $226,800,000.

(B) Mountain Home, Tennessee (Bed Towers and Modernization), $59,000,000.

(C) Philadelphia, Pennsylvania (Clinical Addition, Renovation, Parking, and 240-bed Nursing Home Care Unit), $110,400,000.

(2) Subject to paragraph (3) and to the limitation in subsection (a)(1), the maximum amounts authorized to be appropriated and expended for the following projects are further limited as follows:

(A) Houston, Texas (Replacement and Modernization), $170,400,000.

(B) Mountain Home, Tennessee (Bed Towers and Modernization), $35,800,000.

(C) Philadelphia, Pennsylvania (Clinical Addition, Renovation, Parking, and 240-bed Nursing Home Care Unit), $85,600,000.

(3) The maximum amount set forth in paragraph (2) with respect to each project shall apply to that project unless the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, submits to the appropriate committees of the Congress a certification by the Administrator with respect to the project that a contract for work on the physical structure or structures in which hospital care is to be furnished at a bedsize level consistent with such maximum amounts cannot feasibly be awarded within 180 days after (i) the date on which a contract for such construction work was scheduled as of June 1, 1985, to be awarded for the projects described in paragraphs (2)(A) and (B), and (ii) September 1, 1986, for the project described in paragraph (2)(C). Such certification shall be accompanied by submissions of three architectural/engineering firms (one of which is the firm retained by the Veterans' Administration to complete the plans for the project, one of which is a firm selected by the American Institute of Architects at the Administrator's request, and one of which is a firm selected by the Comptroller General of the United States), at least two of which support the Administrator's certification.

(c) Funds are authorized to be expended in fiscal year 1986 from the working reserve in the Veterans' Administration construction, major projects, account, to the extent consistent with and permitted pursuant to applicable provisions of law in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act, for the redesign of projects identified in paragraph (2) of subsection (b) and for the following projects if the total estimated expenditures involved in the completion of each project as redesigned is no more than the applicable amount specified for such project in such paragraph or as follows:

(1) Augusta, Georgia (Replacement Medical Center), $94,000,000.

(2) Baltimore, Maryland (Replacement Medical Center), $88,800,000.

(3) New York, New York (Outpatient/Clinical Additions and Alterations), $70,600,000.

PART C—ALTERNATIVES TO AND FOR CONSTRUCTION

CONSIDERATION OF PURCHASING OR LEASING MEDICAL FACILITIES

SEC. 421. (a) Section 5002 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) In connection with the assessment of the health-care needs of veterans in a particular area for the purpose of planning how best to meet such needs, the Administrator shall develop criteria for determining whether to proceed with planning for the construction or acquisition of a new or replacement medical facility and, if it is determined to proceed, for choosing among the alternatives of constructing the facility, leasing an existing medical facility that satisfies the requirements of paragraph (3) of this subsection, or purchasing an existing medical facility that satisfies such requirements.

"(2) After January 1, 1986, the Administrator shall not proceed to develop preliminary plans for a new or replacement medical facility except in accordance with the criteria established under paragraph (1) of this subsection and after considering the option of leasing or purchasing an existing facility that satisfies the requirements of paragraph (3) of this subsection.

"(3) A facility satisfies the requirements of this paragraph if—

"(A) the facility is available, or will be available in timely fashion in the foreseeable future, for purchase or lease;

"(B) the facility meets the current and projected needs and specifications of the Veterans' Administration for furnishing health care to eligible veterans residing within a 100-mile radius of where the new or replacement facility is planned to be located, or is adaptable to meet such needs and specifications;

"(C) the facility can be acquired at an estimated cost (including the costs of any necessary adaptation) that does not exceed the estimated cost of construction of a medical facility to meet such needs and specifications; and

"(D) the estimated cost of operating the facility (after adaptation, if necessary) does not exceed the estimated cost of operating a medical facility that would otherwise be constructed.".

(b) Clause (1) of section 5004(b) is amended by inserting "and, in the case of a prospectus proposing the construction of a new or replacement medical facility, a description of the consideration that was given, pursuant to criteria established under section 5002(d) of this title, to acquiring an existing facility by lease or purchase" after "such facility".

CONTRACT FOR CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION OF A NURSING HOME

SEC. 422. (a) The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall enter into a contract with an appropriate entity for the construction and operation of a facility for furnishing solely to veterans eligible for nursing home care under chapter 17 of title 38, United States Code, nursing home care that meets the current and projected needs and specifications (including those relating to location and site selection) of the Veterans' Administration. The contract shall—

(1) for a 5-year period following the completion of construction, require the contractor to staff, equip, and operate the nursing home in such a manner as to provide the types, levels, and quality of care that would be provided if the facility were being operated directly by the Veterans' Administration;

(2) provide the Administrator with the option to renew the contract for an additional term not to exceed 5 years;

(3) require the Administrator to refer a sufficient number of eligible veterans who require nursing home care to the nursing home to ensure a specific occupancy rate for the nursing home for the term of the contract, which rate shall be approximately equal to the average occupancy rate nationwide for Veterans' Administration nursing homes except that a higher rate may be required if the Administrator determines that such higher rate is in the best interests of the Federal Government;

(4) provide that the per diem rate payable to the contractor by the Veteran's Administration shall not exceed the average daily costs to the Veterans' Administration of operating Veterans' Administration facilities for the furnishing of nursing home care;

(5) provide that all rights, title, and interest in the facility constructed under the contract shall vest in the United States; and

(6) contain such other provisions as the Administrator determines are in the best interests of the United States.

(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall take effect on October 1, 1985.

FEASIBILITY PLAN FOR THE PURCHASE OF A FACILITY FOR FURNISHING HOSPITAL AND NURSING HOME CARE

SEC. 423. In the documents submitted by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to the appropriate committees of the Congress at the time of and in connection with the submission, pursuant to section 1105 of title 31, of the Budget for fiscal year 1987, the Administrator shall provide a feasibility plan for the purchase for Veterans' Administration use of a medical facility that is located in an urban area and is suitable for furnishing both hospital and nursing home care services, and meets the current and projected needs and specifications of the Veterans' Administration for furnishing health care to eligible veterans. In such Budget, the President, as warranted by such feasibility plan, shall include a request for an appropriate amount to purchase such a facility which meets those needs and specifications.

DEVELOPMENT OF MEDICAL-FACILITY MODULAR COMPONENTS

SEC. 424. In order to evaluate the applicability to the Veterans' Administration of the use of modular components in the design and construction of medical facilities for the furnishing of hospital care and to determine the efficiency and cost-effectiveness of that approach, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall, not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, enter into a contract for the development of such a modular approach to the planning and design of an appropriate Veterans' Administration medical facility for the furnishing of hospital care.

TITLE V—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

TECHNICAL, CONFORMING AMENDMENT RELATING TO THE CONTINUING AVAILABILITY OF READJUSTMENT COUNSELING

SEC. 501. Section 612A(g)(1)(B) is amended by striking out "who requested such counseling before such date" and inserting in lieu thereof "who request such counseling".

PAYMENT FOR THERAPEUTIC AND REHABILITATION ACTIVITIES

SEC. 502. (a) Section 618 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(g) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no amount of remuneration provided to an individual as a participant in a therapeutic or rehabilitative activity carried out pursuant to this section shall be included in determining annual income for purposes of pension payments.".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on October 1, 1985.

REPORT ON FEDERAL GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY TO INDIVIDUALS WHO SERVED WITH VOLUNTARY CIVILIAN ORGANIZATIONS IN VIETNAM

SEC. 503. (a)(1) The purpose of this section is to provide a basis for the executive branch and the Congress to evaluate the question of United States Government responsibility, and alternative approaches, for providing individuals who, for a period of at least 30 days during the Vietnam era, were employed in the Republic of Vietnam by (including having served there under the auspices of) voluntary organizations, determined by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, in consultation with the Secretary of Defense, to be organizations which provided significant assistance to the United States Armed Forces in the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era, with Federal and other benefits and services (including, but not limited to, health care and monetary compensation for disabilities which may be related to their experiences during such employment in the Republic of Vietnam), either through the Veterans' Administration or otherwise, and for assisting such individuals in connection with disabilities they may have incurred as a result of such employment.

(2) In order to carry out the purpose stated in paragraph (1), the Administrator, the Secretary of Defense, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services, not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, shall submit to the appropriate committees of the Congress a joint report on the question of United States Government responsibility and shall include in such report various alternative approaches (together with comments on the appropriateness and the advantages and disadvantages of each) and any recommendations by such officials for legislative and administrative action with respect thereto, for establishing a program for providing such benefits, services, and assistance to such individuals.

(b) For the purpose of this section—

(1) the term "Armed Forces" has the meaning given such term in section 101(10) of title 38, United States Code; and

(2) the term "Vietnam era" means the periods described in section 101(29) (as amended by section 201(a) of this Act) of such title.

LAND TRANSFER, PHOENIX, ARIZONA

SEC. 504. (a) The real property described in subsection (b) and the structures thereon on the date of the enactment of this Act shall be transferred without compensation or reimbursement from the control and jurisdiction of the General Services Administration to the control and jurisdiction of the Veterans' Administration.

(b) The real property referred to in subsection (a) is a tract of land consisting of 3.25 acres, more or less, in Phoenix, Arizona, that—

(1) was formerly part of the Veterans' Administration Medical Center, Phoenix, Arizona; and

(2) was declared to be excess to the needs of the Veterans' Administration in a report to the General Services Administration dated September 25, 1959.

TITLE VI—EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 601. Except as otherwise provided in sections 201(b), 203(b), 401(b), 422(b), and 502(b) of this Act, the provisions of and amendments made by this Act shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

AMENDMENT NO. 560

(Purpose: To delete the amendment to the definition of "Vietnam era"; to delete the amendment relating to exclusion of certain remuneration from annual income for the purpose of certain veterans' pensions; to facilitate the provision of psychological assistance to United States citizens who have been political hostages; to modify the restrictions on the use of certain real property in Utah and Wisconsin; to increase the amount of insurance under Servicemen's Group Life Insurance and Veterans' Group Life Insurance; to extend the period for entering into training under the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act of 1983; and to extend the authority to operate an Office of the Veterans' Administration in the Republic of the Philippines)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator MURKOWSKI and Senator CRANSTON, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE], on behalf of Mr. MURKOWSKI and Mr. CRANSTON, proposes an amendment numbered 560.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 37, strike out lines 13 through 22.

On page 38, line 5, strike out "202" and insert in lieu thereof "201".

On page 38, line 11, strike out "203" and insert in lieu thereof "202".

On page 39, line 4, strike out "204" and insert in lieu thereof "203".

On page 64, strike out lines 6 through 18, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

ASSISTANCE FOR CERTAIN FORMER POLITICAL HOSTAGES

SEC. 502. (a) The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) In recent years some United States citizens have been held in captivity as political hostages or have been victims of other terrorist acts.

(2) The United States citizens who were passengers on TransWorld Airlines flight number 847 on June 14, 1985, were victims of a hijacking of such flight and some of those passengers were subsequently held in captivity as political hostages.

(3) The experience of being held in captivity as a political hostage is a traumatic event that is outside the range of usual human experience.

(4) Stressful experiences connected with such a traumatic event can be expected to evoke in some victims certain psychological reactions, including symptoms of stress, which may be manifested shortly after the event or may be manifested weeks, months, or even years later.

(5) There is no established program under which United States citizens may obtain systematic assistance in coping with the short-term or long-term personal effects of captivity as political hostages after they return home.

(6) The Veterans' Administration has developed expertise in providing readjustment assistance to veterans who have experienced traumatic and stressful events outside the range of usual human experience as a result of military combat.

(7) The Veterans' Administration medical centers, including 13 specially designated inpatient units for veterans with post-traumatic stress disorder, 187 readjustment counseling centers and satellite facilities for Vietnam-era veterans, and the National Center on Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder have staff with expertise (A) in diagnosing and treating veterans who have experienced traumatic and stressful events, and (B) in training Veterans' Administration and other health-care personnel in, and conducting research and exchanging information relating to, diagnosis and treatment of such veterans.

(b) The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall take appropriate action otherwise authorized by law to ensure that the expertise of the Veterans' Administration in diagnosing and treating individuals who have experienced unusual trauma and stress and in training health care personnel on such matters is made available to other Federal Government agencies and other appropriate organizations which are providing assistance to United States citizens who were passengers on TransWorld Airlines flight number 847 on June 14, 1985, or other United States citizens returning from captivity as political hostages, to attempt to minimize the potential short-term or long-term adverse psychological effects of such captivity on them.

On page 66, after line 24, insert the following new sections:

MODIFICATION OF RESTRICTIONS ON REAL PROPERTY AND CONVEYANCE OF A FENCE ON SUCH PROPERTY, SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH

SEC. 505. (a) Section 2 of the Act entitled "An Act authorizing the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to convey certain property to the Armory Board, State of Utah", approved July 29, 1954 (68 Stat. 580), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. Any conveyance under the first section of this Act—

"(1) shall provide that the tract conveyed may be used only for hospital, educational, civic, residential, or related purposes;

"(2) shall provide that, if any part of such tract is used in any manner that is determined by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to interfere with the care and treatment of any patient at a Veterans' Administration health-care facility located in the reservation described in such section, such use shall cease immediately upon notice by the Administrator of such interference to the Armory Board, State of Utah, and to each person using such part in such manner;

"(3) shall provide that, if any part of such tract is used for a purpose other than a purpose prescribed in paragraph (1), title to such part shall revert to the United States;

"(4) shall provide that, if any interference referred to in paragraph (2) does not cease as required under such paragraph, title to the part of such land that is being used in a manner to cause such interference shall revert to the United States; and

"(5) shall contain such additional terms and conditions (including reservations of rights for the United States) as the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs determines to be necessary to protect the interests of the United States.".

(b) The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall convey, without consideration, to the Armory Board, State of Utah, all right, title, and interest of the United States in the fence erected as required by the quitclaim deed issued to the Armory Board by the Administrator on October 14, 1954, under the authority of the Act referred to in subsection (a). The conveyance shall contain such terms and conditions as the Administrator determines to be necessary to protect the interests of the United States.

(c) The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall execute any documents that are necessary to bring the conveyance made under the authority of the Act referred to in subsection (a) into conformity with the amendment made by such subsection.

MODIFICATION OF RESTRICTIONS ON REAL PROPERTY, MILWAUKEE COUNTY, WISCONSIN

SEC. 506. (a) The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall execute such instruments as may be necessary to modify the conditions under which the land described in subsection (b) will revert to the United States in order to permit Milwaukee County, Wisconsin, to lease all or part of such land to a nonprofit corporation which shall (1) construct and equip on such land structures, facilities, and other permanent improvements useful for public recreational purposes or general civic purposes, and (2) use such land for such recreational or civic purposes. The Administrator may carry out the preceding sentence subject to such terms and conditions (including reservations of rights for the United States) as the Administrator determines to be necessary to protect the interests of the United States.

(b) The land referred to in subsection (a) is (1) the land conveyed to Milwaukee County, Wisconsin, pursuant to the Act entitled "An Act to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to convey certain lands and to lease certain other land to Milwaukee County, Wisconsin", approved September 1, 1949 (63 Stat. 633), and (2) the land conveyed to Milwaukee County, Wisconsin, pursuant to the Act entitled "An Act authorizing the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to convey certain property to Milwaukee County, Wisconsin", approved August 27, 1954 (68 Stat. 866).

SERVICEMEN'S GROUP LIFE INSURANCE AND VETERANS' GROUP LIFE INSURANCE

SEC. 507. (a)(1) Subsection (a) of Section 767 is amended—

(A) by striking out "35,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$50,000"; and

(B) by striking out "the amount of $30,000, $25,000, $20,000, $15,000, $10,000 or $5,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "an amount less than $50,000 that is evenly divisible by $10,000".

(2) Subsection (c) of such section is amended by striking out "the amount of" the first place it appears and all that follows through "as the case may be," and inserting in lieu thereof "any amount less than $50,000, such member may thereafter be insured under this subchapter in the amount of $50,000 or any lesser amount evenly divisible by $10,000".

(3) Subsection (d) of such section is amended—

(A) by striking out "the effective date of this subsection" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "January 1, 1986"; and

(B) by striking out "up to a maximum of $35,000 (in any amount divisible by $5,000)" and inserting in lieu thereof "in the amount of $50,000 or any lesser amount evenly divisible by $10,000".

(b)(1) Subsection (a) of section 777 is amended—

(A) by striking out the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Veterans' Group Life Insurance shall be issued in amounts specified in section 767(a) of this title. In the case of any individual, the amount of Veterans' Group Life Insurance may not exceed the amount of Servicemen's Group Life Insurance coverage continued in force after the expiraton of the period of duty or travel under section 767(b) or 769(a) of this title."; and

(B) by striking out "$35,000" in the sentence immediately following the matter inserted by clause (A) and both places it appears in the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "$50,000".

(2) Such section is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(h)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, members of the Individual Ready Reserve and the Inactive National Guard are eligible to be insured under Veterans' Group Life Insurance. Any such member shall be so insured upon submission of an application in the manner prescribed by the Administrator and the payment of premiums as required under this section.

"(2) Notwithstanding subsection (b)(2) of this section, Veterans' Group Life Insurance coverage under this subsection shall be issued on a renewable five-year term basis, but the person insured must remain a member of the Individual Ready Reserve or Inactive National Guard throughout the period of the insurance in order for the insurance of such person to be renewed.

"(3) For the purposes of this subsection, the terms 'Individual Ready Reserve' and 'Inactive National Guard' shall have the meaning prescribed by the Administrator in consultation with the Secretary of Defense.".

(c) The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall take effect on January 1, 1986.

EXTENSION OF THE PERIOD FOR ENTERING INTO TRAINING UNDER THE EMERGENCY VETERANS' JOB TRAINING ACT OF 1983

SEC. 508. Section 17(2) of the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act of 1983 (Public Law 98-77; 29 U.S.C. 1721 note) is amended by striking out "September 1, 1985" and inserting in lieu thereof "March 1, 1986".

EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY TO OPERATE AN OFFICE IN THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES

SEC. 509. Section 230(b) is amended by striking out "September 30, 1985" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1988".

On page 67, line 3, strike out "201(b), 203(b)" and insert in lieu thereof "202(b)".

On page 67, line 3, strike out "502(b)" and insert in lieu thereof "507(c)".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 560) was agreed to.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 876, the proposed Veterans' Administration Health-Care Programs Improvement Act of 1985, which was ordered reported unanimously by the Committee on Veterans' Affairs on June 12, 1985. The provisions of the bill are designed to maintain the quality and facilitate the efficiency of the Veterans' Administration health care system. S. 876 requires increased VA accountability in both Microareas and Macroareas, specifically, in the quality of patient care, the kinds and levels of care, and the size of VA medical facilities. I believe that the committee has devised a comprehensive bill which responds appropriately to the concerns raised by certain veterans' organizations and members of the committee. Thus, I would urge my colleagues in the Senate to join me in assuring the passage of S. 876.

HIGHLIGHTS OF S. 876 AS REPORTED

The Congress and the Veterans' Administration now face difficult challenges. That is, many diverse and complex issues must be addressed in order to respond adequately to the varied and changing needs of veterans. These challenges are a result of certain changes which are occurring in both the veteran population and the way with which health care is evolving in this country. More specifically, the veteran population is aging at an extremely rapid rate, medical technology is advancing and thus altering traditional diagnostic and treatment modalities, and various forms of noninstitutional care are now being developed and emphasized. In order to have an efficient and effective health care delivery system, it is vital that the Congress and the VA recognize this changing environment, and take appropriate action to respond to it as well.

I believe that it is the responsibility of the Congress and the VA to assess and weigh the various options and adapt the health care system appropriately to these changes. We must look at the dynamics of the veteran population, medical technology, and hospital construction and look at these dynamics in the context of today's budgetary constraints in order to shape the future directions of VA health care. Fairness and realism must underlie such an assessment. With that in mind, a common thread woven throughout the provisions of S. 876 is modernization. In that regard, S. 876 targets three major areas—quality assurance, noninstitutional care and medical facility construction.

QUALITY ASSURANCE

During the past few years, the committee has placed a high priority on monitoring the VA's quality assurance efforts. The VA's new Chief Medical Director, Dr. John Ditzler, has placed a new emphasis on quality assurance. Dr. Ditzler has undertaken a major new program—the Medical district Initiated Peer Review Organization [Medipro] process—which will systematically review and evaluate certain indicators of patient care provided by VA physicians and other health care professionals. I wish to acknowledge the Chief Medical Director's initiatives in and laudable commitment to this most vital area.

Section 304 of S. 876 would be consistent with these efforts and would require the VA to establish and conduct a comprehensive quality assurance program to monitor and evaluate the quality of care provided by the VA. A major focus of section 304 is to require the Chief Medical Director to compile national mortality and morbidity standards for all types of surgical procedures and collect local and national mortality and morbidity data for VA surgical programs which would include VA cardiac surgery, heart transplant, and renal transplant programs. In this regard, the VA can better assess the quality of care which it provides. It is also the intent of the committee that the VA view morbidity and mortality statistics along with other quality of care indicators in order to gain a balanced perspective on the quality of VA patient care. The quality assurance provisions contained in the committee bill were established to enhance and expand the VA existing quality assurance efforts. It is the hope of the committee that this information, will be a useful tool in the evaluation of the VA's quality assurance efforts.

Most Government health care dollars, including VA resources, are allocated to institutional care. Nursing home care represents a substantial portion of these resources. The growing demand for nursing home care and the high cost of institutional long-term care—in 1980, $21 billion was spent nationwide on nursing home care alone—has increased incentives for both public and private sectors to seek alternatives to institutional care. The committee believes that the VA should examine ways to provide the most appropriate kind and level of care to veterans. S. 876 focuses on addressing the needs of veterans who, if provided with home health and other supportive services, could remain in their own homes. With the goal of providing appropriate support to certain veterans who wish to remain self-sufficient and reside near family and friends, S. 876 would require the VA to conduct a 4-year pilot program at 10 demonstration project sites under which veterans eligible for and otherwise in need of VA hospital, nursing home, or domiciliary care, would instead receive non-VA community-based health-related services. Special priority for this program would be given to veterans with service-connected disabilities, to veterans who are 65 or older, and to veterans who are totally and permanently disabled.

MEDICAL FACILITY CONSTRUCTION

The VA's medical facility construction planning process has been a matter of much discussion during the past few years. The committee is extremely concerned about this complex, lengthy, and expensive process. The planning and building process for a major VA medical center can, and often does, exceed 8 years. The committee is troubled that this process is so burdensome and costly and that certain construction options, such as purchasing or leasing already existing facilities or increasing the use of non-institutional services, are not adequately considered prior to or during the construction planning process. In light of the committee's concerns about, among other things, the construction process in general and the belief that certain factors be considered during the construction planning process, the committee bill includes several provisions relating to this matter. The bill would provide, for the first time, an annual statutory authorization for appropriations—as opposed to the current process of House and Senate resolutions of approval—for major VA medical facilities construction. The bill would limit, to not more than 700 beds, the size of a new or replacement VA hospital facility. The VA and the General Accounting Office would be required to develop and submit to the Congress a methodology for determining the appropriate number and type of hospital beds to be provided for in new or replacement VA hospital facilities.

Further, it would require that methodology to take into account service connected and needy veterans. In summary, the construction provisions contained in this bill would address many of the concerns which were initially expressed by former Chairman ALAN SIMPSON during his tenure as the very able chairman of this committee and which I expressed during 2 days of committee oversight hearings held in March. It is my belief that the integrity and effectiveness of the construction process will be enhanced by the provisions of this bill.

Mr. President, there are two additional provisions of S. 876 as reported which Senator CRANSTON and I propose to delete and defer consideration to a more appropriate time. Since the first concurrent budget resolution is still pending, these two provisions, sections 201 and 502, would require a waiver of section 303(a) of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 be obtained before the consideration of these provisions would be in order. Senator CRANSTON and I have prepared a committee amendment to be considered concurrently with S. 876. This amendment would strike those two sections from the bill.

In addition, this amendment includes one of my own initiatives, a proposal to facilitate the provision of psychological services to U.S. citizens who have been political hostages; a proposal by Senator GARN pertaining to the modification of restriction of the use of a certain land tract in Utah; a proposal by Senator KASTEN concerning the uses of certain land in Milwaukee County, WI; a proposal by Senator PROXMIRE concerning Servicemen's Group Life Insurance and Veterans' Group Life Insurance; a proposal by myself pertaining to the extension of the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act of 1983; and a proposal by Senator CRANSTON and myself pertaining to the VA Regional Office in the Republic of the Philippines.

I recently introduced Senate Joint Resolution 167 which would direct the VA to share its expertise in traumatic stress counseling and readjustment services with Federal and non-Federal agencies or organizations in helping U.S. citizens who were the victims of terrorism—such as former TWA flight 847 hostages. This legislation would direct the VA to share its knowlege and the benefit of its experience with other Federal and private sector organizations. I believe that it is vital to use the available and valuable resources and knowledge of the VA to assist in any way possible other organizations in providing help to those who may require it as a result of international terrorism or other such acts. I commend the VA for their extensive work in these areas of assisting those veterans who have suffered from traumatic events. I am confident that any expertise they could share would greatly benefit victims of hostage experiences who may need assistance as a result of these experiences. It is not intended that the VA incur any significant cost in implementing this provision.

Under current law, the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act will sunset on September 1, 1985. The Department of Labor now expects about $15 million of the original appropriation to be uncommitted on September 1. This amendment will allow the program to continue long enough for money already appropriated to be committed to assist eligible unemployed veterans to obtain employment.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, in concluding I wish to thank my friend, the distinguished ranking minority member from California, Senator ALAN CRANSTON. As always, I appreciate the fine working relationship which exists between the majority and minority on this committee, and which has resulted in the development of such a fine product. I wish to recognize the fine work of my most dedicated staff including my chief counsel and staff director, Anthony Principi, Julie Susman, Cindy Alpert, Lisa Moore, and Becky Hucks, Kay Eckhardt, Judy Boertlein, Jody Sanders, and Lisa Gilman, and our printer, Jim McRae who all worked so diligently to make this effort a reality. I further wish to acknowledge the hard work of the entire minority staff, headed by Jon Steinberg, minority chief counsel, and including Ed Scott, Bill Brew, Babette Polzer, Nancy Billica, Ingrid Post, and Charlotte Hughes.

Mr. President, I believe the committee has reported a bill which is well balanced, and one that meets the needs of our Nation's veterans as well as being crafted to take into consideration the need to be restrained in spending, while ensuring high quality health care. On behalf of the entire committee, I urge the Senate's favorable consideration of this bill.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am delighted, as the ranking minority member of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, to join with the committee chairman [Mr. MURKOWSKI] in urging our colleagues to give their unanimous approval to the pending measure, S. 876, the proposed "Veterans' Administration Health-Care Programs Improvement Act of 1985," as reported by the committee on July 8 as modified by the amendment offered on behalf of the chairman and myself.

I will describe the amendment in more detail at the end of my statement.

Mr. President, the committee bill incorporates the provisions of a variety of measures including S. 6, which I introduced on January 3, 1985. Amendment No. 22 to S. 6, which I introduced on April 1; S. 875 and S. 876, which were introduced by the chairman on April 3; S. 1007, introduced on April 25 by committee members BOSCHWITZ and DENTON; and S. 1052, introduced by committee member THURMOND on May 2. I am particularly pleased that virtually all of the provisions of S. 6 and Amendment No. 22 are included in this bill. If enacted, this measure will help to maintain and improve the quality and efficiency of health care services provided by the Veterans' Administration to eligible veterans.

Because the various provisions of S. 876 as reported, which I will refer to as the committee bill, are described in detail in the committee's report, Senate Report 99-101, accompanying this measure, I will at this time just highlight some of the provisions

VA GRADE REDUCTIONS

Mr. President, I am particularly pleased that the committee bill, in section 301, contains a provision, derived from section 3 of S. 6, that would protect the VA from being forced to make arbitrary reductions in the numbers of employees at particular grade or salary levels. As I discussed in some detail in my introductory remarks on S. 6, which begin on page S. 611 of the RECORD for January 24, 1985, such protection is particularly important at this time when the Office of Management and Budget is embarked on a major, Governmentwide effort to reduce the numbers of employees in grades GS-11 through GS-15. Without debating the merits of the Governmentwide grade-reduction effort, I am convinced that requiring the VA, as OMB is doing, to make arbitrary grade-level reductions across the agency's work force could seriously impair the VA's ability to carry out its vital mission, pursuant to congressional mandate to serve and assist veterans, particularly through the VA's health-care system, and I am gratified that the committee agreed with me that action is needed to protect the VA's ability to recruit, hire, and retain staff.

As introduced, S. 6 would have precluded any systematic grade-level reduction by the VA, for the purpose of reducing agency salary costs, unless and until the Administrator had first submitted to the two Veterans' Affairs Committees a report containing information showing that, in the personnel area concerned, the VA had a disproportionate number of employees in the grade level selected for reduction in comparison to the number of employees at that salary level who perform comparable functions in other Federal departments or agencies and in non-Federal entities. Such a report would have to have been submitted at least 90 days in advance of the proposed grade-level reduction and, as a further check on this process, the Comptroller General would have been required to submit a report on the Administrator's compliance with the reporting requirements and on the accuracy of the Administrator's determination and supporting data.

The committee bill retains the process set forth in S. 6 but, instead of being applicable to all VA employees, it was modified in the committee bill so as to apply only to certain health-care personnel—those providing patient-care service or services incident to patient-care services—and professional employees serving as engineers and attorneys. As is noted in the committee report, this change reflects the committee's belief that the covered categories are the major employee categories where the VA is required to pay high entry-level salaries in order to recruit and retain needed professional personnel. I intend, however, to monitor the overall situation very closely and should it appear that other employee categories should be covered by this provision, I will actively pursue legislation to provide such a result.

As I noted in my remarks on S. 6, I, along with many of my colleagues in both Houses and from both parties, have worked hard over the years to ensure that the VA has sufficient, qualified staff to carry out the agency's missions. This has been particularly true in the Department of Medicine and Surgery, the Department where the great majority of VA employees work, over 199,000 of the VA's over 223,000 full-time equivalent employees. The VA is frequently at a disadvantage competing in the relevant health-care personnel marketplace, and the numbers of health-care workers in grades 11 through 15 and their equivalent rates under title 38 generally reflect the entry-level salaries necessary to meet this competition—not grade creep of supervisory employees, which may provide some justification for grade reduction to the extent it has occurred in other agencies or elsewhere in the VA. It is vital to the continued ability of the VA to provide quality health care that DM&S not be forced to make unwarranted personnel changes that could seriously disrupt its ability to attract and retain needed personnel, and this provision in the committee bill should help to achieve that result.

In view of the points made in the committee report about the VA's record in keeping the percent of its employees at higher grade levels relatively low as a percentage of total employees when compared to the overall Government rating, I do not see how the Administrator could submit a report justifying a downgrading of the covered employee categories in terms of comparability with private sector and other Federal agency grades for the same type of employees.

EXTENSION OF HEALTH CARE ELIGIBILITY BASED ON EXPOSURE TO DIOXIN OR OTHER TOXIC SUBSTANCE IN VIETNAM OR TO NUCLEAR RADIATION

Mr. President, I am also very pleased that the committee bill, in section 202, contains a provision, identical to section 4 of S. 6, to extend, until September 30, 1989, the provision in current law which provides certain veterans—those exposed to dioxin or other toxic substances used in herbicides or defoliants in Vietnam or to ionizing radiation from nuclear detonations—with eligibility for priority health care from the VA for the treatment of disabilities which cannot be attributed to a cause other than the exposure in question. Under current law, this authority is scheduled to terminate 1 year after the Administrator submits the first report on the epidemiological study of Vietnam veterans that was mandated by Public Law 96-151. Under that law, the VA is required to submit a first report on the study not later than 24 months after the study protocol is approved, an event which occurred on February 14, 1984. Thus, under current law, the first report on the study is due by February 14, 1986, and the health care eligibility is scheduled to expire on February 14, 1987.

Because it is clear to me that the major studies—the Public Law 96-151 study I just mentioned and study mandated by Public Law 98-160 relating to radiation exposure—designed to yield the information necessary to make final decisions about eligibility for VA benefits, including health care, for the veterans exposed to dioxin or radiation will not be sufficiently advanced by 1987, I believe this extension is appropriate and warranted, and I am pleased my colleagues on the committee agreed with me.

Mr. President, with specific reference to the Public Law 98-160 study relating to radiation, so that my colleagues and others might be brought up to date on this issue, I ask unanimous consent that a July 8, 1985, letter to me from Dr. John Gibbons, Director of the Office of Technology Assessment, regarding OTA's views on this study and my July 24, 1985, letter to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, urging him to consider the study of certain matters pursuant to section 601 of that law, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
OFFICE OF TECHNOLOGY ASSESSMENT,
Washington, DC, July 8, 1985.

Hon. ALAN CRANSTON,
Committee on Veterans' Affairs,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR ALAN: Enclosed is a copy of OTA's evaluation of the feasibility of studying long-term health effects in veterans of nuclear weapons tests, and veterans who served in Hiroshima and Nagasaki after the close of World War II. We completed this evaluation at the request of Mr. Walters, Administrator of Veterans Affairs, in accordance with the mandate of Public Law 98-160.

We reviewed a plan drawn by the VA, a review of that plan by an ad hoc committee headed by Dr. Glyn Caldwell, and comments on that review prepared by the Committee on Interagency Radiation Research and Policy Coordination (CIRRPC). In addition, a recent National Research Council study of patterns of death among a large proportion of the atomic veteran cohort also provided us with information critical to our analysis.

We are in agreement with the Caldwell committee's finding that the VA plan does not describe a feasible study. The adverse health effects that would be expected in the atomic veterans, even if radiation doses were underestimated by several-fold, would be undetectable in the proposed epidemiologic study.

OTA also considered alternative strategies for studying the health of atomic veterans, and we have come to the conclusion that it does not appear possible to design a study of all atomic veterans, or of a subgroup known to have had higher radiation doses, that would have adequate power for detecting radiation-related excesses of disease.

The most difficult judgment that we had to make in this evaluation was whether assumptions about the accuracy of the radiation doses are reasonable. We seriously considered the possibility that the doses might have been much higher than measured or estimated, which is a major concern of the atomic veterans. There is currently no method, based on measurements that could be made today, for accurately quantifying radiation doses 25 years ago to atomic veterans, so the final judgment had to be made on indirect evidence. The National Research Council study found no excesses of deaths from diseases known to be inducible by radiation in the total cohort of atomic veterans (a significant excess of leukemias in one subgroup is addressed below). From those results, we infer that, for the cohort as a whole, radiation exposures are not likely to be wildly misrepresented by measured and estimated doses, although it is certainly possible that individuals or certain groups of veterans did have higher exposures.

Although global studies of atomic veteran health are not feasible in our judgment, OTA suggests two more specific studies that could produce information about the health of atomic veterans. The Caldwell committee recommended that the veteran cohort that witnessed shot Smoky, in which an excess of leukemias has been directed, be reevaluated periodically. OTA concurs with that recommendation, particularly since the NRC mortality study also found an excess of leukemias in that group. If those leukemias are, in fact, radiation-induced, one would expect to see excesses of other radiogenic tumors arising in that cohort during a later time period. If the excess leukemias were simply a chance occurrence, which is possible, no excess of other radiogenic cancers would be expected. The periodic follow-ups might reasonably be scheduled every five years. They could focus on mortality rather than morbidity, since, for most radiation inducible cancers, morbidity data provide little more information than do mortality data, and morbidity data are generally more difficult and considerably more expensive to collect.

The second suggested study would focus on the veterans who witnessed Operation Crossroads, the earliest test series after the war, and one which was not included in the NRC study. At the time of that test series, in 1946, film badges were issued only to a few men whose exposures were to represent those of many others who were engaged in similar activities. The lack of individual dose information, and anecdotal information indicating that internal radiation exposures might have been higher than estimated, may make this group a worthwhile study population. The General Accounting Office is currently evaluating the radiation estimates for those veterans, and is examining a large volume of material dealing with radiation safety at Operation Crossroads. When that review is completed, in fall 1985, a decision about doing a mortality study could be made.

Should you require additional information, or if you would like to discuss any aspects of OTA's evaluation, please do not hesitate to call on me or Michael Gough or Hellen Gelband (6-2070) on my staff.

Sincerely,

JOHN H. GIBBONS.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, July 24, 1985.

Hon. HARRY N. WALTERS,
Administrator of Veterans' Affairs,
Washington, DC 20420

DEAR HARRY: I have recently received and reviewed a copy of the July 1985 Office of Technology Assessment Staff Memorandum entitled "An Evaluation of the Feasibility of Studying Long-Term Health Effects in Atomic Veterans", which was prepared in response to your December 19, 1984, request that OTA review a proposed protocol for a study of veterans exposed to radiation and advise you as to the feasibility of such a study. I am writing to express my views on this issue in light of the mandate in section 601 of Public Law 98-160 that such study be carried out.

The OTA staff memorandum appears to me to be very well done and quite comprehensive, and I have no basis for disagreeing with the OTA staff conclusions that, first, a study "carried out in accordance with the outlines of the VA plan would not produce meaningful scientific results" and, second, that "a study of the group of 1200 atomic veterans with more than 5 rem exposure [an option OTA considered on its own initiative] would be even less powerful than would the study of the entire cohort."

Notwithstanding these conclusions regarding the likely merits of comprehensive studies, however, I continue to believe that valid study, within the context of section 601, of the adverse health effects of exposure to radiation among veterans exposed during the nuclear test program or in connection with the occupation of Japan following World War II can be carried out. Therefore, I urge you to consider, prior to making any final decision that such study is infeasible, the feasibility of study approaches other than those reviewed by OTA. In this regard, I believe that it is important to note that the study mandate clearly contemplates, in section 601(a)(1)(B) of P.L. 98-160, that, even if it is determined that it is not feasible to carry out some elements of the mandated study, other elements as to which a determination of infeasibility cannot be made would continue to be required.

Among the possible study approaches that I urge you to consider before making any final decision are two that are discussed in the OTA staff memo—namely, periodic follow-up studies of the veterans who witnessed the SMOKY shot and a study of the veterans who were present at the tests carried out during Operation Crossroads (with comparisons being made between the health status of these veterans with an appropriately designed control group of veterans who were not exposed to radiation during the test program). This latter study would appear to be particularly important in light of the concerns about the levels of exposure and safety precautions at Crossroads which were raised by the Operations Radiological Safety Officer at the shots, the late Colonel Stanford Warren, in various memoranda and letters which were presented to the Congress in 1983 and which have been the subject of a nearly completed GAO study. (I understand that your staff has already reviewed this study in draft.) In addition to these two studies, there may be others focusing on particular shots or series of shots or some other subset of the total population of veterans exposed to radiation that could be the subject of valid study, and I urge you to look for such options before reaching any final decision regarding the infeasibility of carrying out any study under section 601 of P.L. 98-160.

In addition, I urge you to have members of your staff contact appropriate staff at the National Research Council (NRC) to discuss with them the possibility of the VA providing funding support for a further analysis, using a properly constituted control group of veterans, of the information gathered by the NRC in connection with the recently reported study entitled "Mortality of Nuclear Weapons Test Participants". Such an analysis, which members of the Committee staff have already discussed with NRC, would be a valuable addition to the body of information available at present on the health status of veterans exposed to radiation.

Thank you for your continued cooperation.

With warm regards,
Cordially,

ALAN CRANSTON.

ALCOHOL AND DRUG TREATMENT AND REHABILITATION

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, section 204 of the committee bill, as did section 5 of S. 6, would extend for 3 years, through the end of fiscal year 1988, the VA's existing authority to contract with various community facilities to provide care and treatment to veterans suffering from alcohol or drug dependence or abuse disabilities and would eliminate the designation of this authority as a pilot program. Last year, the committee reported similar legislation which the Senate passed but which did not gain House support.

I am very pleased that the committee has again expressed its support for this program, which was first established in 1979 pursuant to legislation that I authored and was enacted in Public Law 96-22. On the basis of all the evidence I have reviewed—including a report submitted in May 1984 on the operations of the program through September 30, 1983, and reactions from veterans who have been placed in halfway houses and other community-based facilities under the program, VA employees who work with veterans with drug or alcohol abuse dependencies, and individuals in California and elsewhere associated with various community-based drug and alcohol treatment programs—I am convinced that the pilot program achieved considerable success in enabling significant numbers of veterans to receive appropriate and helpful assistance.

PILOT PROGRAM OF NONINSTITUTIONAL ALTERNATIVES TO INSTITUTIONAL CARE

Mr. President, section 103 of the committee bill would require the VA to conduct a 4-year pilot program, from January 1, 1986, through December 31, 1989, at 10 demonstration project sites to evaluate noninstitutional alternatives to institutional care. Through this pilot program, the VA would provide certain veterans with medical, rehabilitative, and other health services and, by contract with non-VA entities, with health-related services. These health and health-related services would be provided in noninstitutional settings—such as a veteran's home or a board-and-care home—with the goal of being able to avoid institutional care, such as in a hospital, nursing home, or domiciliary facility, for the participants in the program. Under this pilot program, priority would be accorded to veterans with service-connected disabilities, to veterans who are 65 years of age or older, and to veterans who are totally and permanently disabled.

Mr. President, the provisions in section 103 are derived from provisions in the legislation I introduced on January 3, section 9 of S. 6, and the chairman [Mr. MURKOWSKI] introduced on April 3, section 2 of S. 876. The fact that we both proposed legislation to promote greater VA activity that would help reduce the need for institutional care among veterans and that both bills placed an emphasis on increased VA interaction with community entities which provide health and health-related services is no coincidence. It has been very clear to our committee for a number of years that, in light of the rapid increase in the number of veterans age 65 and older who may be seeking care from the VA in the years ahead, the agency must take steps to develop new approaches to addressing the health care needs of veteran patients. Likewise, in this time of increased pressure to hold down Federal spending in order to reduce the deficit, it has also been clear that any new efforts have to emphasize getting the maximum benefit for each dollar spent. I believe that the pilot program set forth in this section of the committee bill is an appropriate response to these concerns, as well as to developments in health care generally making noninstitutional care more feasible and more effective.

With specific reference to the issue of the cost of this program, the committee bill limits the total cost over the life of the program to 60 percent of the cost that would otherwise have been incurred by the VA if the veterans participating in the program had been furnished nursing home care instead of noninstitutional services provided under the program. It is our intention that this program be carried out through the use of funds that would otherwise have been used for the provision of more costly intermediate care and that the balance of the funds be applied to care for more veterans than would have been served in the absence of this new, innovative program.

Mr. President, I want to note one particular element in the pilot program which is derived from the provision in S. 6, namely the requirement that at five of the demonstration project sites, the projects will be required to use geriatric evaluation units—GEU's—at the VA health care facility involved. The evidence to date on the effectiveness of GEU's—principally through the work at the Sepulveda, CA, VA Medical Center—in helping to place older patients in the most appropriate level of care and in improving the quality of their care has been very encouraging, and I look forward to a substantial expansion of GEU's at VA hospitals and to a further evaluation of the usefulness of GEU's as part of this pilot program.

Finally, with reference to this pilot program, I note my very strong interest in having the VA work actively with appropriate community entities in helping to meet the needs of the veteran participants for health-related services. I am convinced that the VA must make greater use of community resources which help to maintain individuals in their homes—such as homemaker, personal care, communal or at-home nutrition, and transportation assistance services—if the agency is to respond in any adequate way to the growing demand for care that it is facing and will continue to face as the veteran population ages so rapidly over the next decade and this element of the pilot program is designed to achieve that result.

Mr. President, section 102 of the committee bill contains authority for another VA pilot program which, like the pilot program under section 103 which I just discussed, has as a general goal meeting the health care needs of certain veterans—in this case, certain chronically mentally ill veterans—in other than traditional institutional settings.

This provision is derived from the chairman's legislation, S. 876. It was modified by the committee so as to provide the Administrator with a discretionary 4-year authority to contract for care and treatment and rehabilitative services in halfway houses, therapeutic communities, psychiatric residential treatment centers, and other community-based treatment facilities for veterans suffering from service-connected chronic mental illness or veterans who have 50 percent or more service-connected disabilities and are suffering from chronic mental illness. This authority, as a result of the committee's action, is now modeled on the provision I authored in 1979, which authorizes the VA to contract with community-based facilities to provide care and treatment to veterans suffering from alcohol or drug abuse or dependence disabilities—which, as I discussed earlier, would be extended by a provision in this measure. The new provision is designed to give the VA the ability, across the VA health care system, to provide certain service-connected chronically mentally ill veterans with an additional, necessary option for care which is not now but clearly should be provided by the VA to carry out its responsibilities to these service-connected veterans.

I feel that this is now an excellent provision, and I enjoyed very much working with the chairman to develop this very productive approach focused on the needs of certain service-connected veterans suffering chronic mental illnesses.

Mr. President, there is one final point that I want to make regarding this pilot program and that concerns my views on the funding for this effort as well as the other pilot programs in title I of the committee bill. As I stated in my introductory remarks on S. 6, I am strongly committed to seeking ways in which to bring the enormous Federal deficit under control and, because of this, am extremely reluctant to advocate any new spending by the Federal Government. As I noted earlier in connection with the pilot program of noninstitutional alternatives to institutional care, authorized by section 103 of the committee bill, funding for that program is to come from funds that would otherwise have been used for the provision of more costly intermediate care to the veterans involved. In a similar vein, funding for the pilot program of chiropractic services, authorized by section 104 of the committee bill, is to come from appropriations that would otherwise have been expended—specifically, funds expended for beneficiary travel for beneficiary travel payments.

Although there is no similar legislative direction for the funding of the section 102 pilot program relating to care for chronically mentally ill veterans, it is certainly my expectation and the committee's that the VA will utilize otherwise available medical care appropriations to fund this new effort and, if the pilot program meets the committee's expectations, it should result in a reduced level of spending for the treatment of the same number of veterans by providing treatment for them through less costly means.

With reference to the other pilot program in the committee bill—the partial modification of the VA's Vet Center Program authorized by section 101 of the committee bill—I also expect that any additional staff for the new Vietnam Veteran Resource Centers—VVRC's—will come from existing resources. I anticipate little difficulty for the VA in providing such staffing, both because of the relatively small number of staff that is required to be assigned, in some fashion, to carry out certain functions at the 10 VVRC's and also because the activities that are supposed to be carried out in the VVRC's under the pilot program are already ongoing, either at existing Vet Centers or elsewhere, and should not, therefore, require hiring any new staff.

HEALTH CARE MANAGEMENT

Mr. President, there are three provisions in the committee bill, sections 302, 303, and 304, that address in various ways the committee's concerns about the need to ensure that the VA is providing quality health care. The overall issues of the quality of VA health care and of quality assurance matters have been of particular concern to the committee in recent years and these provisons in the committee bill—which are derived both from the chairman's bill, S. 876, and my legislation, S. 6, and modifications we developed jointly represent the culmination of a great deal of work by the committee to address these concerns.

QUALITY ASSURANCE AND CREDENTIALING

Section 304 of the committee bill deals with the overall issue of VA quality assurance activities, including matters relating to how the agency monitors the credentials of VA health care professionals. This provision, which builds on efforts already underway within the VA, would require the Administrator to establish and conduct a comprehensive quality assurance program and to provide sufficient personnel and resources to the Department of Medicine and Surgery to carry out such a program and sufficient personnel and resources to the VA's inspector general to monitor and evaluate the effectiveness of this program.

One key element of the mandated Quality Assurance Program would require the agency to identify national morbidity and mortality standards for all the types of surgical procedures carried out by the VA and then to collect data on the VA experience for all such procedures and compare the VA experience to the national standards. The VA data would be collected and compared in two ways—for cardiac surgery, heart transplant, and renal transplant activities, data would be collected on each separate VA program, that is, facility, conducting these activities and compared to national and community standards; for all other surgical procedures, the data would be collected and compared on an aggregate basis.

Once the VA data and national standards are compared, the VA's Chief Medical Director would be responsible for identifying and explaining any deviations between the VA experience and the national standards and for making recommendations in light of those comparisons. The Chief Medical Director would be required to submit to the Administrator three reports—one by January 1, 1987, one by January 1, 1991, and the third—on the experience under this mandated Quality Assurance Program. The Administrator, in turn, would be required to submit each such report to the two Committees on Veterans' Affairs within 60 days of receiving each report, together with any comments on the reports.

MEDICAL QUALITY ASSURANCE RECORDS

Section 302 of the committee bill, which derives directly from section 7 of S. 6, concerns the degree of confidentiality that should be provided to records created through the VA's Quality Assurance Programs.

There are two principal elements to the VA's current medical Quality Assurance Program. One is an external review process which involves teams of VA health care professionals from outside of a particular VA facility who come to that facility and conduct a comprehensive review of all facets of the facility's operation. The other is an ongoing program of internal reviews at each VA facility which are carried out by designated committees of health care professionals from the facility's own staff. Each element of the Quality Assurance Program produces various documents which contain information identifying individual VA patients or employees and citing and describing any inappropriate medical practices and deficiencies discovered in the provision of health care and making recommendations for corrective actions.

Because these quality assurance efforts depend to a very significant degree on the willingness of the VA personnel conducting the reviews to be completely candid in their comments and because of concerns that this vital degree of candor could be lost if he participants could not be assured that their remarks and evaluations incorporated in quality assurance reports would be kept confidential, the Congress acted in 1980 to place stringent limitations on the disclosure of these documents.

However, a number of recent instances have come to my attention of situations in which VA facilities have relied on this provision of law—section 3305 of title 38, United States Code—to refuse disclosure of information and records which were not generated by quality assurance reports and which did not appear to come within the coverage of that section. In some of these cases, the material requested consisted of aggregate data relating to morbidity and mortality rates various procedures at VA health care facilities, information that resulted from a simple compilation of information and which did not implicate any quality assurance activity.

In order to ensure that the intent of Congress in enacting section 3305 is clear—namely, that medical quality-assurance records should be kept confidential but only to the extent necessary to promote the candor of individuals involved in the quality-assurance process—and to specify generally that withholding aggregate data relating to morbidity and mortality associated with various VA programs is not necessary to achieve this purpose, section 302 would make clear that such aggregate information is generally not made or considered confidential as medical quality-assurance records. Unless some other basis for nondisclosure exists, the information would be available for disclosure. The only exception would be aggregate information that would identify an individual VA patient or employee or an individual quality-assurance activity and that information would be made available to the public on a regular, periodic basis in the biannual reports of the Chief Medical Director on the VA's Quality Assurance Program submitted to the Veterans' Affairs Committees by the Administrator pursuant to new section 4152 of title 38, United States Code, discussed above.

DISCIPLINARY BOARD ACTION INVOLVING CLINICAL PRIVILEGES

Section 303, which is derived directly from section 8 of S. 6, addresses another matter relating to VA quality-of-care issues and the overall management of the VA health-care system, namely, the process by which the VA can reduce or revoke a health-care professional's clinical privileges.

Clinical privileges in the VA—the type of direct patient-care services that an individual is authorized to perform as a VA employee at a particular VA facility—are a very fundamental component of physicians' and other health-care professionals' employment with the VA and, indeed, of their proprietary interest in their professions. Because a reduction or revocation of clinical privileges could have a very serious impact on an individual's professional reputation and career opportunities, this provision in the committee bill would require the VA to provide the same due process protections before making such a reduction or revocation as would be provided in cases involving what is presently characterized as "disciplinary action" against a VA health-care professionals. These protections include the right to notice of the basis for the proposed action, the right to confront all witnesses giving evidence, the right to be present throughout the proceeding, and the right to a decision on the record. These procedures are described in broad outline in section 4110 of title 38, United States Code, and are set forth in more detail in VA personal manual MP-5, part II.

During the May 7, 1985, hearing on this provision, the VA expressed the concern that this provision might somehow limit—or be seen to limit—the agency's ability temporarily to reassign a health-care professional so as to remove his or her access to veteran patients during any proceeding involving clinical privileges. To alleviate that concern, the provision in the committee bill contains an amendment to section 4110 expressly specifying—as the VA also asserted in its testimony is the present state of the law—that nothing in section 4110 restricts the Administrator's authority, pending the outcome of any proceeding under section 4110, to reassign a health professional for the purpose of suspending the exercise of clinical privileges or otherwise restricting such employee's professional activities to the extent necessary to protect the health or safety or veteran-patients.

VA CONSTRUCTION ISSUES

Mr. President, I want to outline briefly the provisions of the pending measure relating to VA medical-facility construction issues. I believe that these provisions propose significant improvements in the VA's construction process and the role of the Congress in that process.

First, under the pending measure, beginning in fiscal year 1987, the Congress would follow an annual authorization cycle through the legislative process for the approval of VA construction projects. This would be in lieu of the current committee-resolution approach and would serve to reinforce and unify the activities of our committee and the House committee in the construction area. It would also help to ensure that the intended role of the Congress in the authorization process is fulfilled.

With respect to VA construction proposals for next fiscal year, fiscal year 1986, the pending measure includes a legislative authorization of appropriations for fiscal year 1986. Thus, for fiscal year 1986, as well as future years, under the approach taken in S. 876, we would not adopt a committee resolution. This approach is both fiscally prudent and sound and incorporates the sizing concepts—based on the needs of service-connected disabled veterans and financially needy veterans—which were adopted by the committee in its May 24, 1984, construction project approval resolution.

Second, other changes that would be made in title 38 by S. 876 would, if enacted, give Congress earlier, more effective input into the planning of major replacement and modernization projects and more meaningful control over the size of such projects. It would do this by prohibiting any expenditure, beyond what is necessary to develop project requirements, for a project costing $20 million or more for the construction, remodeling, expansion, or acquisition of a VA hospital facility unless authorized by a law based on legislation reported from the Committees on Veterans' Affairs. It would also limit to not more than 700 hospital beds the size of new or replacement VA hospital facilities that could be constructed and prohibit projects involving expenditures of over $20 million for the remodeling or expansion of a VA facility where, upon completion of the project, the facility would have more than 700 hospital beds.

Mr. President, in my view, this control and input is amply justified and sorely needed as the committee has so clearly learned this year. Under the current process, even the very largest hospital construction projects go through the preliminary plans stage long before there is any congressional input. When congressional input finally comes, in response to the request for funding of working drawings, the agency may already have sunk years of effort into a construction concept and bed size that the Congress has not approved and may wish to change.

For the committee and the Congress to attempt to influence significantly the ultimate shape of the project at that late stage can result—according to the VA—in up to 3 to 4 years of delay in the construction project. This is an untenable situation. Indeed, I might say it is an almost unbelievable situation—especially in light of our committee's strong differences with the VA regarding the size of the hospital facilities it is planning and whether the needs of service-connected disabled veterans and financially needy veterans should be a principal basis for hospital construction/acquisition planning.

As the committee has learned this year in connection with its consideration of the VA's request for fiscal year 1986 funding of three major replacement/modernization projects—in Houston, Philadelphia, and Mountain Home—any congressional control over a large project—other than a decision to proceed or not to proceed—virtually ceases when a project has completed the preliminary planning stage. The committee's concerns in this area are set forth in the discussion of section 401 of the pending measure in the committee's report—Senate Report No. 99-101—at pages 67 through 78, which includes an excerpt from an exchange I had with VA officials at the committee's March 27 hearing on the VA's construction process and an exchange of letters with the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. President, I believe the provisions of S. 876, if enacted, will be a vast improvement over the construction planning process and procedures which now exist. They would allow both the two Veterans' Affairs Committees and the Congress to have a more effective role in the planning for and construction or acquisition of VA health-care facilities involving the expenditure of billions of dollars over the next few years alone.

MURKOWSKI-CRANSTON AMENDMENT

Mr. President, as I mentioned at the outset of my remarks, I want to discuss the amendment offered to the committee bill on behalf of Chairman MURKOWSKI and myself. As I will describe in more detail, this amendment would delete two provisions from the bill and would add a number of other provisions.

DELETIONS FROM COMMITTEE BILL

The amendment proposes—solely for the purpose of avoiding a Budget Act problem at this point—the deletion from the committee bill of the two provisions that involve so-called entitlement spending. As the author of those provisions, I want to stress that they are being deleted here solely for a technical purpose and will be pursued in other legislation this year. One provision would modify the starting date of the Vietnam era for title 38 purposes in the case of veterans who actually served in Vietnam prior to August 5, 1964, the starting date for the Vietnam era in current law, and would, among other benefits, result in providing VA pension eligibility under chapter 15 of title 38 to a small number of these veterans who have low family incomes. The other provision would specify that income received for their participation in a VA incentive or compensated work therapy program by low-income veterans also receiving VA pension would not be counted as income for the purposes of that VA pension. This program would affect approximately 3,200 veterans according to a shortly to be published GAO report on this subject that I requested.

In light of the fact that the Congress has not yet adopted a first concurrent resolution on the fiscal year 1986 budget, it would not be in order, under section 303(a) of the Congressional Budget Act, to consider these entitlement provisions without a Budget Act waiver. Our committee reported such a waiver and it was referred to the Budget Committee on July 8. The Budget Committee did not report favorably on that waiver. Rather than seek a vote on such a waiver at this time, the chairman and I are proposing to delete these two provisions from the committee bill and instead will have them added to legislation which we anticipate the committee will report later this year relating to VA compensation and other VA entitlement programs.

ASSISTANCE FOR CERTAIN FORMER POLITICAL HOSTAGES

Mr. President, the Murkowski-Cranston amendment includes a provision—derived from Senate Joint Resolution 167 which was introduced by Chairman MURKOWSKI on July 22—which directs the VA to ensure that the agency's expertise in diagnosing and treating individuals who have experienced unusual trauma and stress is made available to Federal agencies and other appropriate organizations who are providing assistance to the passengers from TWA flight 847 who were held hostage earlier this year or to other U.S. citizens returning from captivity as political hostages.

Mr. President, I congratulate the chairman on his leadership on this important issue and agree completely with him that the VA has a special expertise in this area—gained most recently through work with and on behalf of Vietnam combat veterans suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder.

I want to expand on one point about this provision. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is directed to take appropriate action otherwise authorized by law to ensure that the VA's expertise is shared appropriately. In this regard, I note that, pursuant to subsection (c) of section 110 of Public Law 98-528, the VA has established in Cleveland, OH, a National Center on Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder—also known as the Stress Recovery Center—which is mandated, among other things, to serve as a resource center for, and promote and seek to coordinate the exchange of information regarding, all research and training activities carried out by the Veterans' Administration, and by other Federal and non-Federal entities, with respect to PTSD.

In light of this existing statutory mandate, this center should be the principal VA entity through which VA expertise can be shared with those agencies and organizations that are assisting the TWA hostages. In my view, this is precisely the type of function that the Congress envisioned in establishing the center.

EXTENSION OF PERIOD FOR ENTERING TRAINING UNDER THE EMERGENCY VETERANS' JOB TRAINING ACT OF 1983

Mr. President, I also want to make special mention of a provision in the pending amendment that would extend by 6 months—from September 1, 1985, to March 1, 1986—the period of time by which a veteran must enter a program of training under the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act of 1983—EVJTA—in order for the employer to be eligible for payments under that act.

I was pleased to join as an author of EVJTA in the Senate with the distinguished former chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee and now assistant majority leader [Mr. SIMPSON]. As enacted on August 15, 1983, this law was designed to provide employers with incentive payments to defray training costs so that they would hire and train long-term unemployed Korean-conflict and Vietnam-era veterans. When first enacted, the law provided that a veteran desiring to participate would be required to apply by September 30, 1984, for a certificate of eligibility and to enter training by December 31, 1984. However, in recognition of the possibility that appropriations might not become available by September 30, 1984, the law included the provision I had proposed in the Senate bill establishing a tolling period. Under this mechanism, a veteran had until 1 year after the date on which appropriations were made available for the program to apply and until 15 months after that to enter training. Since funds were not made available to the VA for the program until November 29, 1983, eligible veterans had—at the outset of the program—until November 29, 1984, to apply and until March 1, 1985, to enter training.

Last year, Mr. President, in recognition of the delays inherent, in the startup of the new program, the Congress approved an extension of these dates. Thus, Public Law 98-543—derived in part from my bill, S. 2760—extended the date for applying for the program to February 28, 1985, and the date for entering training to September 1, 1985.

According to a recent evaluation of EVJTA—carried out under contract with and just released by the Veterans' Administration—more than 27,000 veterans have enrolled in training under the program with more than two-thirds receiving training in structural work occupations, machine trades, and professional/technical/managerial positions. Those who completed the program had an average hourly wage of $6.77. The completion rate for veterans in the program was estimated to be 44 percent and the direct cost of training per participant is estimated to be $3,000.

Although, given our enormous budget deficit problems, I have reservations about proposals to authorize the appropriation of additional moneys for this program—at least until the committee has had a full opportunity to hold hearings on the program and legislation to extend and revise it, I feel strongly that action should be taken as soon as possible to ensure that the funds that have already been appropriated for it—the full $150 million—are fully expended.

According to a May 6 letter I received from VA Administrator Harry Walters, the VA estimates that as of September 1 there may be about $10 million remaining in unspent and unobligated EVJTA funding. At this time, we have no real ability to judge the accuracy of that estimate; it could be high or low depending on the rate at which veterans who have been certified as eligible for the program are placed in a training program.

Thus, in order to permit the funds remaining in the program to be used to assist unemployed veterans find productive jobs, the pending amendment would extend by 6 months—until March 1, 1986—the date by which veterans must enter training. This will permit additional time for the VA and the Department of Labor, which share the responsibilities for this program and for developing and placing veterans in training positions, to assist some of the most deserving veterans through the EVJTA Program. Based on the average per participant cost of $3,000, the remaining $10 million would mean training opportunities for 3,300 veterans.

Mr. President, it should be noted that those veterans who have been certified for the program, who are still unemployed, and who not yet been placed in training under EVJTA are quite likely to have special problems in obtaining and retaining employment. Indeed, as the VA's evaluation of the program found, employers tended to select the most employable among the veterans certified for program participation. Thus, I want to make clear that the VA and the Department of Labor will need to strengthen their efforts to assist veterans under EVJTA during this extension and will need to explore ways to provide special types of assistance, particularly in the area of employment counseling and particularly to reduce the disturbingly high noncompletion rate. I intend very strongly to urge both agencies to do a better job in this area. In addition, since there is no limit on the time by which an employer must apply for participation in the program, I will also be urging both agencies to conduct an active employer outreach program so that job opportunities for veterans will be maximized.

PHILIPPINES REGIONAL OFFICE EXTENSION

Mr. President, also included within the amendment Senator MURKOWSKI and I are offering today is a provision I am proposing to extend for 3 years the authority for the VA to maintain an office in the Republic of the Philippines.

Under current law, the VA operates a regional office in the Philippines but the authority for that office expires on September 30, 1985.

The administration, in connection with its March 19, 1985, submission of draft legislation to increase the statutory rates of disability compensation for veterans and rates of dependency and indemnity compensation for surviving spouses and children of veterans, has requested that the authority for this office be extended for 3 fiscal years—until September 30, 1988. The letter from Administrator Walters transmitting the proposal noted that it has been the VA's "experience that the operation of a regional office in the Republic of the Philippines is the most efficacious means of administering the VA programs which provide disability compensation, pensions, and educational benefits to tens of thousands of Filipino beneficiaries." In fiscal year 1983, the VA advises, more than $125 million was paid to over 31,000 Filipino beneficiaries through the Philippines regional office where 128 VA employees work.

Mr. President, this extension would ensure that the VA has the ability to continue to meet the needs of the residents of the Philippines in a cost-effective manner. The Congressional Budget Office estimates that the cost of operating this regional office would be $1 million in fiscal year 1986 and $2 million in each of fiscal years 1987 and 1988.

Mr. President, the House of Representatives, as part of H.R. 2343, the proposed "Veterans' Compensation Benefits Amendments of 1985," which was passed by the House on May 20 and which is currently pending in the Veterans' Affairs Committee, has already approved such a 3-year extension of this authority. By proposing to incorporate this amendment into the pending measure, we intend to ensure that the operations of the VA regional office in the Philippines are not disrupted and may continue after September 30, 1985.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, it has been a pleasure to work with the chairman [Mr. MURKOWSKI] and all the members of the committee in the development of this legislation to meet important needs of the Nation's veterans. This is the first major piece of veterans' legislation produced in the committee under his chairmanship to reach the Senate floor, and I congratulate him on his effective work and leadership.

This bill, as it is before the Senate today, is the result of true bipartisan effort—the type of effort that we on the Veterans' Affairs Committee always strive to put forth. I want to note the contributions of, and to thank, the committee staff members who worked on this legislation—Cindy Alpert, Tony Principi, and Julie Susman, on the majority staff; James MacRae who so ably provides editorial support to the committee; and, on the minority staff, Bill Brew, Nancy Billica, Ed Scott, Jon Steinberg, Charlotte Hughes, and Ingrid Post.

I believe that S. 876 as reported and as it will be amended by our floor amendment today is a well-balanced, fully appropriate measure that, if enacted, will be of substantial help to the VA in seeking to fulfill its health-care mission. It has the unanimous support of the members of the Veterans' Affairs Committee and has wide support among the veterans' service organizations. I urge my colleagues to give this measure their full support.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 876, the "Veterans' Administration Health Care Programs Improvement Act of 1985."

S. 876 is meritorious legislation containing many significant provisions designed to improve and enhance the health care programs and services provided to the deserving men and women who have honorably served their country. I wish to commend the chairman of the Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs, Senator MURKOWSKI, the ranking minority member, Senator CRANSTON, and the other members of the committee for their fine work and bipartisan cooperation on this important veterans' health care legislation.

Mr. President, in view of the necessity of reducing the soaring Federal budget deficit, Congress faces the difficult challenge of weighing competing demands for limited resources. For this reason, proper health care planning and the cost-effective delivery of medical services have never been more important to ensure that the Nation's commitment to our veterans is met through the provision of quality medical care. In this regard, I am pleased that S. 876 contains provisions designed to improve VA medical facilities construction policies and VA health care quality assurance. Other provisions of this legislation have the important objective of identifying less costly alternatives to institutional health care through the authorization of a pilot program to provide community alternatives for nursing home care and a pilot program to provide community-based psychiatric treatment for the rehabilitation of chronically, mentally ill veterans. This legislation will also extend the successful program under which the VA contracts with halfway houses and other community-based facilities for the treatment and rehabilitation of veterans with alcohol and drug dependency disabilities. Additionally, S. 876 provides for the establishment of a pilot program of Vietnam veteran resource centers to provide employment counseling, training, and placement services as well as readjustment counseling and related mental health services.

Mr. President, I am especially pleased that this legislation contains a provision derived from a bill I introduced, S. 1052, which would authorize the VA to conduct a 3-year pilot program to provide chiropractic services to eligible veterans. It is my strong belief that our Nation's veterans deserve the same access to medical treatment, including chiropractic treatment, as that available to recipients of other Federal and State health care programs. Specifically, this provision directs the VA to conduct demonstration projects in five geographic regions of the country to provide chiropractic services to eligible veterans and to evaluate the therapeutic benefits and cost effectiveness of the chiropractic services. The provision authorizes reimbursement to the veteran or direct payment to doctors of chiropractic for the reasonable charges, within certain prescribed limitations, furnished eligible veterans under the pilot program.

Mr. President, it is the highest obligation of United States citizenship to defend our Nation in time of need, and this obligation creates an equal responsibility on the part of our Nation to care for the men and women who have worn the uniform. This country has the great responsibility of ensuring that the debt which is owed to the Nation's veterans is repaid through the provisions of adequate benefits and quality medical care. S. 876 is meritorious legislation which I support, and I urge its favorable consideration by my colleagues.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I commend the Committee on Veterans' Affairs for the forthright approach it has taken in S. 876 to meet the hospital construction needs of our Nation's veterans.

Since coming to the Congress, I have been a strong supporter of constructing a new acute care VA hospital in downtown Baltimore. The Baltimore facility is supported by all the principal veterans' groups throughout the State of Maryland. There are approximately 630,000 veterans in Maryland. These veterans, 77,000 of whom sustained disabilities while in the service or are totally disabled by reason of non-service-connected problems, deserve and expect quality medical care. The new VA hospital is designed to meet these urgent needs and to operate in conjunction with the University of Maryland Hospital under a unique program of cooperative medical care which will provide significant savings through the sharing of equipment, staff, and services.

While I commend the committee for including a specific authorization of $88.8 million for the new Baltimore Hospital in S. 876 without specifying the number of beds, I would hope that there would be considerable flexibility on the part of the Veterans' Affairs Committee with regard to the ultimate design and size of the facility. It is my understanding that the Administrator of the VA Harry Walters has recommended to the Office of Management and Budget and the Senate and House Appropriations Committees that a 373 bed acute care hospital be built in Baltimore. In addition that report evidently calls for the closing of Loch Raven Hospital and the modernization of Fort Howard Hospital.

Recently, in reporting out the HUD-Independent Agencies appropriations bills, the House Appropriations Committee included $2 million in the bill for redesign of the Baltimore facility. I am pleased that the Senate Appropriations Committee's Subcommittee on HUD-Independent Agencies today included a similar amount in its bill.

Mr. President, the new acute care hospital in Baltimore is essential to meeting the health needs of Maryland's large veteran population. In light of the great need for the facility, the continuing congressional commitment to it, and the money already spent by the Federal Government for it, I applaud this specific authorization and urge that this project go forward without further delay.

JOBS TRAINING STILL NEEDED

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the extension of the Emergency Veterans Jobs Training Act. Since its inception, this job training and placement program has provided employment for approximately 30,000 Korean and Vietnam veterans. Another 206,000 veterans were deemed eligible for placement on February 28, 1985—the application deadline for this program.

As a Vietnam veteran, I have always advocated veterans employment programs. They are vital in assisting veterans in finding stable jobs in the American economy. Also, the resulting higher employment rates build the tax base and promote a healthier economy. Thus, I would argue that veterans employment legislation is not only helpful to the individual veteran, but also pays for itself economically.

As many of my colleagues will remember, the Emergency Veterans Jobs Training Act passed Congress in late 1983. Designed for joint implementation by the Department of Labor and the Veterans' Administration, its intended purpose was to assist in lowering the excessively high Korean and Vietnam veteran unemployment rates. It has had a checkered existence.

First, the appropriation of funds was not made until early 1984, so the program was late in getting started. Second, word did not reach veterans and potential employers as quickly as many would have liked. These factors directly contributed to a very sluggish beginning for the program.

When the Emergency Veterans Jobs Training Act was approved, the plan was for a 2-year program, with $150 million to be available in fiscal years 1984 and 1985. The initial $150 million has been the only appropriation ever made. Apparently, $10 to $20 million of this amount remains available for use today.

Earlier this year, I joined Senator KERRY in introducing legislation to extend this jobs program for 3 more years. This legislation recognizes the fact that certain categories of veterans, particularly Vietnam veterans, continue to experience severe employment problems. The recently released American Legion/Columbia University study further points to the problems—job related and otherwise—that Vietnam combat veterans continue to experience.

As part of the veterans health bill, the distinguished chairman of Veterans' Affairs, Senator MURKOWSKI, has offered an amendment to extend the job placement portion of this program until March 1, 1986. Also, it is my understanding that hearings on the Kerry/Pressler bill and the House version, H.R. 1408, will be held in September.

Mr. President, It is my hope that at that time, we can seriously debate where we want to go with the program and how we should do it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise today in support of S. 876, a comprehensive veterans health care bill.

I am particularly pleased to see the Senate require the Veterans Administration to follow a new direction with respect to adding hospitals to the VA health care system. For the first time legislation would require the VA to determine the feasibility of purchasing or leasing existing medical facilities instead of constructing costly new facilities. The legislation requires the VA to submit to Congress an analysis of the cost of constructing a new facility versus purchasing or leasing an existing hospital or nursing home when adding to the veterans health care system. While the VA has had the statutory authority to purchase or lease an existing facility, they have never seen fit to consider this cost saving option. S. 876 would require that they consider this commonsense option.

I know firsthand of one instance where the VA could purchase an existing hospital for 20 to 25 percent of the cost of constructing a new facility in a region of the country where a definite need for an additional VA medical center has been established by the Veterans Administration. The VA should investigate purchasing the Providence Hospital in Mobile, AL. The Florida Panhandle Study, developed by Medical District 10, shows a minimum need for approximately 215 medical-surgical beds to serve the needs of the 8 counties located in the panhandle of Florida. VA Medical District 10 studies also show a need for 87 hospital beds to serve the needs of the veterans in Baldwin, Clarke, Mobile, Monroe, and Washington counties in southern Alabama. Using the VA figures, one could conclude that there is a need for a minumum of 302 additional medical-surgical beds to serve the veteran population living in the 5 Alabama coast counties and 8 Florida panhandle counties. Other studies conclude that approximately 70 percent of the veterans along the central gulf coast live within 1½ hours driving time of Providence Hospital, which will be vacated by its current owners in late 1986. Although the Veterans Administration has established a need to construct a costly new facility in Fort Walton Beach, FL, I believe the Providence Hospital facility could provide substantial savings.

Acting upon requests from myself and of my distinguished colleague from Alabama, Senator DENTON, the Veterans' Administration conducted a study of the Providence Hospital to determine its suitability as a VA medical center. A report published after the study was completed concluded: ". . . if a programmatic determination was made to establish a Veterans' Administration Medical Center in Mobile, AL, the Providence Hospital could be adapted to serve this role." Additionally, the University of South Alabama College of Medicine is located in close proximity to the site of Providence Hospital. The location of a Veterans' Administration Medical Center at the Providence Hospital site would greatly benefit both the Veterans' Administration and the University of South Alabama College of Medicine.

The Veterans' Health Care bill contains a provision adopted by the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee which requires the VA to study the purchase of an existing medical facility—namely Provident Hospital in Mobile, AL.

Rarely have I seen an issue which has galvanized public opinion in such a favorable fashion. The Mobile community has rallied behind this idea for two simple reasons. First, the proposal represents a commonsense approach to Government spending that is a welcome change from talk of $400 hammers and $700 coffee pots. They realize our opportunity to save, rather than waste in this period of unprecedented Federal budget deficits. Second, I am honored to say, Alabama has a proud history of sending her sons to fight for our country. As a result, we have a comparatively large number of veterans located in Alabama who would benefit from a Veterans' Administration facility. These veterans, their families and I, support efforts to provide them with the health care they deserve.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, the roots of my involvement in veteran health care legislation are long—stretching back to before 1980 when I became involved in trying to provide funds for a replacement hospital for the aged and outdated Minneapolis Veterans Hospital.

Those battles with the VA over its constantly changing priority list, and the parallel battles with certain local groups over the lack of need for a replacement facility because local hospital beds were unused, laid the goundwork for my continuing interest in vets health care and the VA's construction process.

Mr. President, since those days in 1980 the VA has spent $2.7 billion on the construction of new or replacement medical facilities. This year the Administration's budget calls for an additional $2.5 billion over the next 3 years. And this is really just the tip of the iceberg. CBO projects that $400 million will be needed over the next 5 years just to meet the new construction needs for nursing homes.

However, if the VA attempts to retain its current level of providing nursing home beds, the costs would go up an additional $200 million. And this is just for nursing homes.

Currently the VA provides 40 percent of the veterans nursing home beds, the State Home Program provides 20 percent, and the remaining 40 percent are contracted on an individual basis to non-VA nursing homes.

However, in addition to nursing home spending, CBO estimates that the funds needed for the replacement or modernization of existing VA hospitals could cost as much as $2.9 billion.

Unfortunately, the VA's construction process is often at least twice as expensive as the private sector. This means that while we are doing what we can to see that the veterans of this country are getting the health care they deserve, we are clearly not getting as much bang for our buck as we could. And in this budget cutting climate we have to stretch each dollar as wisely and as far as we can. That is why I introduced, along with Senators DENTON, HEFLIN, and PRESSLER, S. 1007, and that is why I am so pleased that several provisions from our legislation are included in the committee reported bill we are discussing today. I feel that if we can cut costs in the construction area, we can provide more beds, serve more veterans, and provide better overall health care for this Nation's veterans.

Mr. President, everyone involved with veterans and the VA knows the crunch is coming. The demographics of the aging veterans have been published in every major media forum. The VA also, to its credit, has tried to address and plan for the influx of aging veterans.

If the VA is right and the demand for VA health care triples by the year 2000—with patient load leaping from 4.5 million today to over 12 million—then there will be a tremedous strain on both the VA and its budget. Clearly, we want to be in a position to provide VA health care for as many eligible veterans as we can.

Therefore, we must realize that in order to pay for the care we have promised the veterans, we must develop more cost-effective methods of providing it. But we must provide it in such a way that we don't jeopardize the commitments we have made to our veterans. And we must also recognize that the VA's costs will normally be somewhat higher than the private sector because of the type of patients it serves and the dedicated mission it has been given. However, it is clear Congress and the VA must look at the options and alternatives available.

And that is exactly what the bill we have reported out of committee is designed to do. First, we want the VA to look at other ways to provide care before simply building a new expensive facility. Under my provision adopted by the committee, the VA will now need to show why they have not used the option to lease or purchase an existing facility before deciding to go ahead and build a new one.

Second, the bill sets up two pilot projects that will allow the VA, Congress and the veterans of this country a chance to see how these other options work.

I realize that some will argue that since the VA now has the authority to acquire existing facilities that directing them to do so isn't needed. Unfortunately, it is clear that the VA has no intention of taking this course, since they, by their own admission, have never acquired even one nursing home or hospital. So if we wait for them to make the first move, it will probably be the year 2020.

That's why I believe the Mobile, Alabama Register's comments in regards to my and Senator DENTON's bill were so accurate. In an editorial in support of our bill they commented:

> The legislation is akin to hitting a mule between the eyes with a two-by-four to catch his attention.

Mr. President, basically the provisions of our legislaton will do two things.

First, it requires that the VA's first option when developing plans for new or replacement medical facilities shall be to consider leasing or purchasing existing community facilities. As I mentioned, the VA has the authority now to lease or acquire existing facilities, but it has never used it for either hospitals or nursing homes.

Second, it sets up a pilot program to look at different scenarios. The first would be privately built, privately run nursing homes that the VA would contract eligible veterans to in a 5-year agreement. Veterans in my State of Minnesota support such a pilot project located in Grand Rapids, MN. In this case, a veteran would like to build a nursing home facility for vets and then run it with his staff.

The second would require the VA to purchase an existing medical facility. It seems that a perfect opportunity to exercise this option is available in Mobile, AL, where the VA can acquire a hospital for $25 million, and in fact the purchase option has been looked at by the VA and the local community. In contrast, the replacement Minneapolis hospital I fought so hard and successfully to get funded cost over $200 million.

Mr. President, my interest in these ideas was reinforced when I received the results from a survey I mailed to over 60,000 Minnesota vets last summer asking for their views on how Congress should "find" the number of nursing home beds that will be needed by the year 2000. The results were startling, with 73.4 percent of the respondents saying that the VA should not build more nursing homes. Overall, the results reemphasized my belief that veterans are concerned both about available health care and cost-effective care. And I believe the bill we are about to pass here today accomplishes these goals.

Mr. President, I know my colleagues will agree that the time is right to look at different ways to spend our VA construction money. The crunch is certainly coming. This bill will give us a chance to get started now, and I urge its adoption.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 876, the Veterans' Administration Health Care Programs Improvements Act of 1985. The bill, which is the result of extensive hearings in the Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs, requires the Veterans' Administration to conduct four pilot programs designed to test and evaluate better methods of health care.

One of these pilot programs, scheduled to be in effect for 4 years, would permit veterans eligible for VA hospital, nursing home or domiciliary care to receive and be reimbursed for care in non-VA, noninstitutional settings. Priority in this demonstration project would be given to veterans who are over 65, to those who are permanently and totally disabled, and to those whose disabilities are service-connected.

A second, 3-year pilot program would permit certain eligible veterans to be reimbursed for the cost of chiropractic services not otherwise covered by health insurance.

Service-connected, chronically mentally ill veterans would be able to obtain care in community-based residential treatment facilities under a third pilot program, and, finally, Vietnam-era veterans would be eligible for an increased range of services at readjustment counseling centers under a fourth pilot program. In many instances, home health care, and community based residential health care have proven to be highly effective and cost-efficient, and these pilot programs provide an opportunity to determine if this type of care can be integrated successfully into the VA health care system. The expansion of counseling services provided at Vietnam Vets Centers—to be tried at 10 centers initially—would make them truly one-stop centers where veterans could obtain information about health, housing, and educational benefits provided by the VA as well as readjustment counseling.

Second, Mr. President, S. 876, would extend through the end of 1989, the period during which veterans who were exposed to agent orange (dioxin) during the Vietnam war may receive priority health care from the VA, and it would authorize the VA to continue for 3 years its program of placing veterans who are alcohol or drug dependent in community based halfway houses. A report on the progress of this program would be required by February 1988.

Finally, S. 876 would improve congressional oversight of the VA. The VA Administrator would be required to submit a report to Congress prior to reducing the pay grades of health care personnel, and would be authorized to provide Congress with statistical data about VA health care programs and facilities, so long as such information does not specifically identify any VA patient. The VA would be required to establish a comprehensive quality assurance program to monitor VA health care programs and to submit reports on the results to Congress so that we know whether quality care, comparable to that provided throughout the Nation, is being provided to the Nation's veterans. Tighter congressional control of VA construction also is provided under S. 876, which requires the VA Administrator to develop a plan for anticipating the health care needs of service-connected patients and the number of beds necessary in the construction of any new VA facility.

Mr. President, these proposed improvements in veterans health care are very much needed. They would help to make VA health care more comparable to care received in the best private facilities and more cost effective. I know that many of my colleagues are deeply concerned about cutbacks in care for veterans and in the medical staffs of many VA facilities. This bill will not reduce medical personnel in VA facilities or reduce the quality of care provided to veterans. In fact, by enabling the Committee on Veterans Affairs and the Congress as a whole to obtain better information about the existing and projected health care needs of veterans, it would improve the care provided. S. 876 merits our full support, and I urge a favorable vote on the bill.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to support S. 876, a complete and comprehensive health-care bill.

S. 876 covers a wide range of issues, including studies on alternatives to institutional care, alcohol and drug rehabilitation programs, Vietnam Veterans Resources Centers, medical facilities construction plans, and several other topics. S. 876 is an important step in addressing both the short and long term health needs of our veterans, and in helping the Veterans Administration to deal with them effectively.

I am gratified that the bill includes my amendment to provide eligibility for counseling for all former prisoners of war. The amendment authorizes the VA to furnish counseling, to the extent that it is possible to do so, to any veteran who is a former POW in order to assist him in overcoming any lingering effects of his experience.

Many POW's from World War II and Korea have had no place to go to receive counseling or to talk about their experiences with a professional trained to deal with these matters. We who returned from prison in Vietnam have received every possible attention, which is understandable in view of the small number and the considerable difficulties that we encountered. My experience, however, has made me sensitive to the problems that may be encountered by my comrades from other conflicts.

The current law requires that a former POW must have a disability rating in order to be eligible for treatment. I know from personal experience, however, that a former POW does not necessarily have to have a certified disability in order to experience trauma from the ordeal of imprisonment and mistreatment. I know that there are many former POW's who have not even talked about their World War II POW experience since their return home, in large part because there was no trained individual available to listen. I believe that S. 876 will solve that problem.

The total number of former POW's is 90,801; 550 are from World War I. The largest number, 85,904, are from World War II; 3,722 are from Korea, and 625 from Vietnam.

Most States now have organizations of former POW's. There is an active organization in Alabama, and I have benefitted greatly from the things that its members have told me about their experiences and their concerns. Members of the Committee staff have also met with them. It is those veterans in Alabama who were instrumental in planting the seed for the amendment that is now included in S. 876. I commend them for their active interest in the problems facing all former POW's, and I thank them for the contribution that they have made on behalf of all former POW's.

One of the most important sections of the bill, and one that will make the most difference for many veterans in the long run, is the section on medical facilities construction. The Committee is requiring the VA to give substantial consideration to service-connected disabled veterans and to indigent veterans, and to the relationship between the levels of care provided to them, when developing its bed-sizing model for the construction of new VA medical facilities. I think that this is a useful beginning to the process of developing more rational approaches to the problem of providing VA medical facilities.

The bill also contains three sections based on the legislation, S. 1007, that Senator BOSCHWITZ and I submitted in an effort to find less expensive and more effective ways than new construction for providing medical facilities. One provision requires the VA to do what current law already allows, to consider other options than new construction when providing a new facility.

The other two sections are, in essence, a pilot program. One requires the VA to enter into a contract for the construction and operation of a nursing home that meets VA specifications. The second requires the VA to provide a feasibility plan for the purchase of an urban medical facility that can furnish both hospital and nursing home services.

That last provision is designed to deal with the opportunity presented by the availability of Providence Hospital in Mobile, AL, a situation that I have described in detail to the Committee during hearings. Purchase or lease of existing facilities, which has been recommended by every federal agency ever to look at the problem, should enable the VA to provide better service to veterans, to provide it more inexpensively than new construction, and to provide it sooner.

I support the bill because I think that it is good legislation. I commend the chairman of the Veterans Affairs Committee for his leadership in putting the bill together, and I commend the members of the Committee for their serious and responsible consideration of the issues.

Finally, I wish to note the efforts of the Committee staff, particularly Tony Principi, the Staff Director; John Steinberg, the Minority Staff Director; Julie Sussman, the Legislative Director; and Cindy Alpert, the staff health-care specialist. Their hard work and professionalism contributed materially to the development of the bill.

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, the amendment I have offered will enable Milwaukee County to develop an important project on Milwaukee County stadium grounds.

Earlier this year, two civic minded individuals, Jane and Lloyd Petit, generously donated $40 million to Milwaukee County for the purpose of constructing a sports and entertainment complex. The present indoor stadium facilities in Milwaukee are inadequate and efforts to finance construction of a new facility have been tangled in bureaucratic redtape for years.

The land under consideration for development was leased to Milwaukee County for recreation and civic purposes by the Veterans' Administration through conveyance legislation passed in 1949 and 1955. Both of these laws contain language stipulating that if Milwaukee County alienates the land from its prescribed purposes, the land could revert back to the United States. Milwaukee County plans to sublease this land to a private corporation for construction purposes and concern has been raised that this may be construed as "alienation," causing the land to revert back to the Veterans' Administration.

The amendment I offered will permit Milwaukee County to sublease a portion of this land to the private corporation without jeopardizing the potential for alienation.

This project has been approved by the Office of Management and Budget, General Services Administration, and the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. President, the proposed project is very important to the citizens of Milwaukee and the State of Wisconsin. Just 4 months ago, the Milwaukee Bucks, one of the NBA's most successful franchises, was for sale. Interest from outside of the city gave new meaning to the need for a new, larger more adequate facility. The current complex only seats 12,000 people and is the NBA's smallest facility. The new complex will enable the Milwaukee Bucks to prosper and maintain their residency in Milwaukee. In addition, the complex will be used for other purposes such as concerts, rodeos, and trade shows which have otherwise been held outside of Milwaukee.

As you can see, the community has long been in need of such a facility. The economic value to Milwaukee County is immeasurable. Milwaukee is proud of its achievements and the development of this new entertainment facility will enhance the quality of life in this progressive community.

Finally, I would like to thank and congratulate the Petits once again for their generous contribution to the people of Milwaukee and the State of Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee substitute.

The committee substitute was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, S. 876, the Veterans' Administration Health-Care Programs Improvement Act of 1985, is a comprehensive piece of legislation and I commend the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, Mr. MURKOWSKI, and the ranking minority member, Mr. CRANSTON, for their continued concern for our Nation's veterans and their efforts to show these veterans that we have not forgotten them. I share this concern. As chairman of the Committee on the Budget, I also have a great interest in legislation that proposes to achieve cost savings through sound policy and program reforms. Over the past few months, I have met many times with the distinguished chairman, Mr. MURKOWSKI. In the interest of deficit reduction, we have discussed many policy and program reforms for veterans' benefits and services and we have reached acceptable compromise on these important issues. I am concerned that S. 876, as introduced, does not reflect these discussions nor does it reflect the cost savings assumed in the Senate-passed budget for veterans' benefits and services. I would very much appreciate having the views of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, Mr. MURKOWSKI, on S. 876 and its consistency with the Senate-passed budget resolution.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I appreciate the opportunity to describe more specifically the committee intent with respect to S. 876, the general policy and program implications of the bill, and its budgetary implications.

I want to congratulate my fine colleague, the chairman of the Budget Committee, for his untiring efforts to work out a fair budget compromise which will achieve substantial progress toward deficit reduction. I also wish to assure him that S. 876 is completely consistent with the Senate-passed budget resolution for veterans' benefits and services.

This measure is designed to achieve, among other things, certain innovations in the provision of VA medical care and the construction of VA medical facilities in order to achieve long-term cost effectiveness in the delivery of health care. The VA, like other Federal health-care systems, is a predominantly institution-based medical care system with an extensive hospital, nursing home, and domiciliary facility capacity. The delivery of health care in this country is changing as a result of advances of medical technology, the emphasis on cost containment, the aging of our population, and the development of alternative modalities of care. The VA health-care system is also experiencing these changes and, in certain ways, is adapting its programs accordingly. I believe it is critical to the viability and quality of the VA health-care system that the VA keep pace with these changes and, in fact, be a leader in the health-care field.

It is desirable, both from a patient care standpoint and a cost-containment standpoint to integrate noninstitutional care programs, particularly those which are community-based, into the VA's continuum of care.

Certain provisions in S. 876, are designed to test various noninstitutional, less costly, and more appropriate forms of care. The result of these pilot programs will provide insights into whether this direction should be considered as alternatives to expanding costly inpatient capacity. Noninstitutional programs provide options for care which are in some cases more appropriate to the needs of veterans who do not require expensive hospital or nursing home care. Concerns have been raised about whether or not such services are truly cost-effective or whether they are new expansions to an already costly system. It is my firm belief that these programs do not constitute new expansions, but alternatives. These alternatives must be tested and if effective, be fully implemented. If such efforts are not examined, the system as we know it will continue, as it has in the past, to provide care in ways that made sense in the 1950's, but in many ways fail to make sense today. The goal, therefore, of S. 876 is to balance the needs of veterans and the concern for cost containment by maintaining the current level of services provided by the VA health-care system and at the same time allowing the VA to use noninstitutional care programs whenever appropriate instead of institution-based services.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I appreciate the clarification provided by the chairman on Veterans' Affairs, Mr. MURKOWSKI, regarding the consistency of S. 876 with the Senate-passed budget resolution. Although S. 876 is not entirely consistent with the dollar amount provided in the Senate-passed budget resolution—S. 876 does maintain the authorization level for VA construction at the Senate-passed level. I appreciate the distinguished chairman's continued support of the Senate-passed budget resolution for veterans' benefits and services.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, on April 30, 10 years after the fall of Saigon, Senator PRESSLER and I introduced legislation to modify and extend the Emergency Veterans Job Training Act of 1983, entitled the "Veterans' Career Development Training and Job Bank Act of 1985."

To date, there has been no hearing on that legislation, nor on the effectiveness of the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act, under which the authority for new training runs out September 1.

Because of my deep concern that EVJTA would cease to exist as of September 1, and my belief that the program has accomplished a great deal for the veterans it has served, I prepared an amendment, which was to be offered on behalf of Senator PRESSLER and myself, to the veterans' health-care bill, that would have authorized an additional $75 million in appropriations for this program and extended it another year.

Yesterday, I met with the distinguished chairman of the Veterans' Committee, Senator MURKOWSKI, and the distinguished ranking Democratic member Senator CRANSTON, of the committee to determine whether we could work out a mechanism to continue the program and also resolve any questions about whether the program could be improved by changes in eligibility or its fundamental mechanisms of providing a Federal subsidy to private-sector employers through a job matching program.

During that meeting, I expressed my concern that without an immediate extension of authorization, the act would terminate on September 1, leaving perhaps as many as 100,000 veterans in the program with no opportunity to be placed in jobs or to receive training.

I also expressed my belief that the program had provided a real service to the tens of thousands of veterans who have been placed in jobs and trained under EVJTA. I told the distinguished chairman of the committee and the distinguished ranking Democratic member that my office had received calls from as far away as Albuquerque, NM to testify to the program's effectiveness.

Senator MURKOWSKI and Senator CRANSTON expressed their concern about authorizing new funds for a program which had not yet had a hearing, especially in a time when the budget deficit was so serious.

An agreement was reached under which the program was extended for veterans already enrolled through March 1, 1986, and a full committee hearing scheduled to review the program, the bill passed by the House extending the program, H.R. 1408, and S. 1033, the bill I have proposed with Senator PRESSLER.

Senator MURKOWSKI graciously offered to schedule the hearing for as soon as possible following the August recess, in September, and to schedule veterans' organizations and specialists with knowledge of the program to testify before the committee at that time.

For the RECORD, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment I was prepared to offer to the veterans' health-care bill be reprinted at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. KERRY. That amendment would have done three things: extend the program another year, authorize an additional $75 million for the program, and reduce the period of unemployment necessary for eligibility in the program from 15 weeks to 5 weeks.

It is vital that this Nation continue to meet its commitment to Vietnam veterans who still, more than 10 years after the conclusion of the war, have not been fully integrated into our society.

Following hearings on EVJTA, the House bill and the Kerry bill, should the program not be extended, I remain prepared to offer this amendment, or something very similar, on the floor at an appropriate time.

I believe there is already considerable support for such an extension, as is demonstrated by the cosponsorships already made on S. 1033. As of today, Senators HARKIN, GORE, and PRESSLER, among Vietnam-era veterans in the Senate, are cosponsors of this legislation, in addition to Senators KENNEDY, MATSUNAGA, RIEGLE, DURENBERGER, and LEVIN. In addition, several other Senate offices have indicated to me their strong support for an extension of EVJTA in some form.

At this time, I would like to thank the American Legion and the Vietnam Veterans of America for their help and support in our efforts to continue EVJTA.

I also want to extend my sincere thanks to Chairman MURKOWSKI, and Senator CRANSTON, and their staffs for their hard work in working out this agreement to extend the program and schedule an early hearing on it. Their continuing commitment to veterans' issues is deeply appreciated by me, as I am sure it is appreciated by the veterans their committee represents.

EXTENSION OF THE EMERGENCY VETERANS' JOB TRAINING ACT OF 1983

SEC. 505. (a) Section 17 of the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act of 1983 (Public Law 98-77; 20 U.S.C. 1721 note) is amended by striking out "February 28, 1985" and "September 1, 1985" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1986" and "September 30, 1986", respectively.

(b) Section 5(a)(1)(B) of such Act is amended by striking out "fifteen of the twenty" and inserting in lieu thereof "5 of the 20".

(c) Section 16 of such Act is amended by inserting "and $75,000,000 for fiscal year 1986" in the first sentence after "1985".

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I commend our capable colleague from Massachusetts for his interest and input regarding veterans' issues. Senator CRANSTON and I share his determination to ensure that veterans with severe unemployment problems will have their needs addressed appropriately.

The committee amendment to S. 876 acknowledges the importance the Veterans' Affairs Committee places on employment concerns of veterans. This amendment will extend the deadline for veterans to begin training under the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act until March 1, 1986. Thus, the Job Service will have an additional 6 months to place in training programs veterans who have qualified for the program but have not yet found jobs. In light of this amendment, and my commitment to hold an employment hearing in the fall, I appreciate the Senator's agreement to withdraw his amendment.

Two years ago, when the Congress established the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act, Vietnam-era veterans had 9.1-percent unemployment rate, seven-tenths of a percent higher than the rate for nonveterans the same age. We can look with pride at the progress made by our veterans with the help of the Department of Labor and the Veterans' Administration. The unemployment rate for Vietnam veterans has been reduced to 5.6 percent. The gap between the unemployment rate of Vietnam veterans and nonveterans the same age has narrowed by almost three-fourths to one-fifth of a percentage point.

While we can be pleased with this progress we can't be satisfied. There are still veterans with severe unemployment problems. In my State of Alaska unemployed Vietnam veterans make up 2 percent of the States population and almost 15 percent of the unemployed.

I share the concerns about veterans' employment expressed by our colleague from Massachusetts. In the hearing I will schedule as soon as possible following the August recess to address this important issue, the committee will explore various initiatives to address these concerns.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] on his leadership on this issue and for his persistence in pursuing this matter. As coauthor in the Senate, with the distinguished former chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee and now the assistant majority leader [Mr. SIMPSON], of the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act of 1983, I deeply sympathize with Senator KERRY's desire to make additional job training opportunities available for veterans, and, in this case, particularly for Vietnam-era veterans and service-connected disabled veterans.

As Chairman MURKOWSKI has just said, we appreciate the Senator's cooperation in withholding his amendment at this time in order to give the committee an opportunity to conduct a hearing, both on his bill, S. 1033, and the House-passed legislation, H.R. 1408, and on oversight of veterans' employment issues generally. We have agreed to hold that hearing in September, as early as possible following the August recess period, and will work with the Senator from Massachusetts in developing an appropriate witness list to assure a full and fair presentation of the issues involved.

As the Senator has pointed out, H.R. 1408 as passed by the House would extend—until December 31, 1985—the already expired February 1, 1985, deadline for veterans to apply for participation in the EVJTA Program and—until July 1, 1986—the September 1, 1985, deadline for veterans to enter into training. It would also—as Senator KERRY favors—authorize the appropriation of an additional $75 million for the EVJTA Program and modify the eligibility criteria. The provisions of the amendment Senator MURKOWSKI and I offered and the Senate has just approved to S. 876 would, among other things, extend until March 1, 1986, the deadline for entry into training. Thus, EVJTA issues will be before us as we negotiate with the House the issues contained in the pending veterans' health-care measure, S. 876/H.R. 505, and H.R. 1408.

It therefore appears virtually certain that an extension of the period of time for entering training will be enacted shortly. This will enable those veterans with certifications to enter into training utilizing the existing appropriations balance of $10 million or more which will remain available for obligation under EVJTA throughout fiscal year 1986.

Moreover, as we stressed to the Senator from Massachusetts in our discussions yesterday, there will be another veterans' measure—dealing with compensation and education matters—in the fall. He will have full opportunity to offer his amendment at that point if the committee has not, pursuant to its hearings and consideration, decided to take action satisfactory to him.

By waiting until that time before changing any eligibility criteria or reopening the program to new participants, we would force the targeting of the program on truly long-term unemployed veterans, rather than opening it up—as the House-passed measure would—to new applicants. That is, indeed, one of the matters that I feel strongly we need to examine prior to taking more extensive action with respect to continuation or modification of EVJTA.

As I pointed out earlier in my opening remarks on the bill, the recent evaluation—carried out under contract with and just released by the VA—of the performance of the program has raised two particular areas of concern to me: First, the high drop-out rate for veterans who have been placed in training and, second, the finding that the program has tended to select the most employable among the certified veterans for program participation and that most participation employers would have hired the veterans without the possibility of reimbursement of training costs.

Also, the unemployment situation is very different from what it was in March of 1983 when I first proposed emergency job training legislation and our committee began working on it. The Vietnam-era unemployment rate was then 10.7 percent and the national rate was 10.3 percent. The comparable rates for June 1985 were 5.3 percent and 7.2 percent, respectively. The unemployment emergency as such has thus receded although the tragedy unquestionable continues for far too many, especially certain categories of Americans and certain categories of veterans.

We will certainly be examining these and other issues, such as those I outlined in my earlier remarks, through our hearings in September.

I intend to work closely with the Senator from Massachusetts and the distinguished chairman, Mr. MURKOWSKI, as well as other committee members, on this matter and again thank Senator KERRY for his cooperation and his understanding of the position of the authorizing committee on this issue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further debate, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to H.R. 505, the House companion bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 505) to amend title 38, United States Code, in improve the delivery of health care services by the Veterans' Administration, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to strike all after the enacting clause and insert the text of S. 876, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

The bill (H.R. 505) was passed.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send a title amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to amend title 38, United States Code, the establish, extend, and improve certain Veterans' Administration health-care programs, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the title.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to indefinitely postpone S. 876.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to indefinitely postpone Calendar No. 242, Senate Resolution 198.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HANDICAPPED CHILDREN'S PROTECTION ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to Calendar No. 250, S. 415, the Handicapped Children's Protection Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 415) to amend the Education of the Handicapped Act to authorize the award of reasonable attorney's fees to certain prevailing parties, and for other purposes.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 415) to amend the Education of the Handicapped Act to authorize the award of reasonable attorney's fees to certain prevailing parties, and to clarify the effect of the Education of the Handicapped Act on rights, procedures, and remedies under other laws relating to prohibition of discrimination, which had been reported from the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Handicapped Children's Protection Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. (a)(1) Section 615(b)(2) of the Education of the Handicapped Act (hereafter in this Act referred to as the Act) is amended—

(A) by inserting "(A)" after "(2)"; and

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(B) Within 5 days after the receipt of a complaint under paragraph (1), the State or local educational agency or intermediate educational unit shall notify the parent or legal representative of the handicapped child or youth whether or not the State or local educational agency or intermediate educational unit, as the case may be, will use the services of an attorney in conjuction with the impartial due process hearing under this subsection, or the impartial review under subsection (c), in the manner described in section 615A(b)(1).".

(2) Section 615 of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) The provisions of section 615A shall govern the award of a reasonable attorney's fee, reasonable witness fees, and other reasonable expenses in connection with any impartial due process hearing under subsection (b) of this section, any impartial review under subsection (c), and the bringing of a civil action under subsection (e).".

(b) The Act is amended by inserting after section 615 the following new section:

"FEES AND EXPENSES

"SEC. 615A. (a)(1)(A) Except as provided in subparagraphs (B) and (C), in any civil action brought under section 615(e), the court may, in its discretion, award a reasonable attorney's fee, reasonable witness fees, and other reasonable expenses of the civil action, in addition to the costs to a parent or legal representative of a handicapped child or youth who is the prevailing party.

"(B) Whenever—

"(i) the decision of the impartial due process hearing under section 615(b) or the impartial review of such hearing under section 615(c) is in favor of the parent or legal representative of a handicapped child or youth, and

"(ii) the State or local educational agency or intermediate educational unit appeals the decision pursuant to section 615(e), the parent or legal representative of the handicapped child or youth shall be awarded a reasonable attorney's fee, reasonable witness fees, and other reasonable expenses of the civil action.

"(C) Whenever—

"(i) the decision of the impartial due process hearing under section 615(b) or the impartial review of such hearing under section 615(c), and the decision of the court, is in favor of the parent or legal representative of a handicapped child or youth, and

"(ii) the State or local educational agency or intermediate eductional unit appeals the decision of the court pursuant to section 615(e), the parent or legal representative of the handicapped child or youth shall be awarded a reasonable attorney's fee, reasonable witness fees, and other reasonable expenses of such appeal.

"(2) Whenever the parent or legal representative—

"(A) is awarded fees under subparagraph (A), (B), or (C), and

"(B) is represented by a publicly funded organization which provides legal services, the reasonable attorney's fee which is awarded pursuant to this subsection shall be computed based upon the actual cost related to the bringing of, or appeal of, the civil action under section 615(e) to the publicly funded organization, including the proportion of the compensation of the attorney so related, other reasonable expenses which can be documented, and the proportion of the annual overhead costs of the publicly funded organization attributable to the number of hours reasonably spent on such civil action.

"(b)(1) If the State or local educational agency, or intermediate educational unit, determines, after the receipt of a complaint under section 615(b)(1), to use the services of an attorney in conjunction with the impartial due process hearing under section 615(b)(2), or the impartial review under section 615(c), for consultation, preparation, presentation of written or oral argument, or evidence, then the State or local educational agency or intermediate educational unit, as the case may be, shall—

"(A) notify the parent or legal representative of the handicapped child or youth of its intention to use an attorney in the manner described in this subsection as required by section 615(b)(2)(B);

"(B) furnish to the parent or legal representative of such a child or youth a list of attorneys who practice in the area in which the handicapped child or youth resides, and who are knowledgeable about special education law, regulations, and procedures; and

"(C) pay the costs of the State or local education agency or intermediate educational unit, as the case mayb be, and the costs of the parent or legal representative of the handicapped child or youth, for reasonable attorneys' fees, reasonable witness fees, and other reasonable expenses related to the hearing or review, as the case may be.

"(2) If the parent or legal representative of the handicapped child or youth determines—

"(A) after filing a complaint under section 615(b)(2) and after receiving notification from the State or local educational agency or intermediate educational unit under section 615(b)(2)(B) that the State or local educational agency or intermediate educational unit will not use an attorney; or

"(B) after the filing of a complaint under section 615(b)(2) and prior to the notification from the State or local educational agency or intermediate educational unit under section 615(b)(2)(B), to use the services of an attorney in conjunction with the impartial due process hearing under section 615(b)(c), for consultation, preparation, presentation of written or oral argument or evidence, then—

"(i) the parent or legal representative shall notify the State, local educational agency, or intermediate educational unit, as the case may be, within 5 days after receipt of the notification from such agency or unit under section 615(b)(2)(B), of their intention to use an attorney in the manner described in this subsection;

"(ii) the parent or legal representative of the handicapped child or youth shall pay the cost of attorneys' fees, witness fees, and other expenses relating to the hearing or review, as the case may be, incurred by such parent or legal representative; and

"(iii) the State or local educational agency or intermediate educational unit shall pay the cost of attorneys' fees, witness fees, and other expenses incurred by the State or local educational agency or intermediate educational unit, as the case may be.

"(3) If the State or local educational agency or intermediate educational unit determines not to use the services of an attorney in conjunction with the due process hearing under section 615(b)(2), or the impartial hearing review under section 615(c), in the manner described in paragraph (1), the State or local educational agency or intermediate educational unit, as the case may be, shall—

"(A) notify the parent or legal representative of the handicapped child or youth as required by section 615(b)(2)(B); and

"(B) furnish to the parent or legal representative of such child or youth a list of parent training centers, Protection and Advocacy Agencies, and other organizations which are located in the area in which the handicapped child or youth resides, and which are knowledgeable about special education law, regulations, and procedures.".

SEC. 3. Section 615(e)(2) of the Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "(A)" after the paragraph designation;

(2) by striking out "In" in the second sentence and inserting in line thereof the following: "Except as provided in subparagraph (B), in"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(B) In any action brought under this paragraph in which no attorney participated in the hearing under subsection (b) or in review under subsection (c), the court shall hear the case de novo, but the trial de novo may not include the introduction of unrelated issues which the court determines would circumvent the exhaustion of administrative remedies.".

SEC. 4. Section 615 of the Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"(g) Nothing in this title shall be construed to restrict or limit the rights, procedures, and remedies available under the Constitution, title V of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, or other Federal statues protecting the rights of handicapped children and youth, except that before the filing of a civil action under such laws seeking relief that is also available under this part, the procedures under subsections (b)(2) and (c) shall be exhausted to the same extent as would be required had the action been brought under this part.'.

SEC. 5. (a) The first sentence of section 631(c)(1) of the Act is amended by striking out "volunteers" and inserting in lieu thereof "other individuals".

(b) section 631(c)(4) of the Act is amended—

(1) striking out "to the greatest extent possible throughout all the States" in clause (A) and inserting in lieu thereof "with at least one grant made in each State"; and

(2) by striking out ", or on a State, or regional basis" in clause (B).

(c) Section 631(c)(5) of the Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (E);

(2) by redesignating clause (F) as clause (G); and

(3) by adding after clause (E) the following new clause:

"(F) understand the administrative procedures available under section 615 and effectively participate, if parents wish to, in the due process hearing and impartial review authorized by such section; and".

SEC. 6. (a)(1) Subject to the provisions of subsection (b), the amendments made by sections 2 and 3 of this Act shall apply to any civil action brought under section 615(e) of the Education of the Handicapped Act after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) The amendments made by sections 2 and 3 of this Act shall apply to any complaint filed under section 615(b) and any administrative appeal made under section 615(c) after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b)(1) The amendments made by section 2(b) of this Act, which add subparagraph (A) of paragraph (1) of section 615A(a) and paragraph (2) of such section to the Education of the Handicapped Act, shall apply to civil actions described in paragraph (2).

(2) This subsection applies to any civil action under section 615(e) of the Education of the Handicapped Act that—

(A)(i) is brought before July 5, 1984, and

(ii) with respect to which a final and unappealable judgment is rendered after July 4, 1984, and before the date of the enactment of this Act;

(B)(i) is brought before July 5, 1984, and

(ii) with respect to which—

(I) a final and unappealable judgment is rendered before such date, and

(II) the court in which the action is brought retains jurisdiction over the action during any portion of the period beginning with such date and ending with the date of the enactment of this Act;

(C)(i) is brought after July 4, 1984, and

(ii) with respect to which a final and unappealable judgment is rendered after the date of the enactment of this Act; or

(D)(i) is brought after July 4, 1984, and

(ii) with respect to which a final and unappealable judgment is rendered before the date of the enactment of this Act.

AMENDMENT NO. 561

(Purpose: To strengthen the provisions of the Education of the Handicapped Act with respect to fees and expenses in civil actions and procedures under section 615(e), and for other purposes)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator WEICKER, and Senators HATCH, KENNEDY, DOLE, STAFFORD, GRASSLEY, PELL, SIMON, METZENBAUM, and DODD, to the committee substitute, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE], for Mr. WEICKER, and Senators HATCH, KENNEDY, DOLE, STAFFORD, GRASSLEY, PELL, SIMON, METZENBAUM, and DODD, proposes an amendment numbered 561.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the committee amendment insert the following: That this Act may be cited as the "Handicapped Children's Protection Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. Section 615(e)(4) of the Education of the Handicapped Act is amended by inserting "(A)" after the paragraph designation and by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraphs:

"(3) In any action or proceeding brought under this subsection, the court, in its discretion, may award a reasonable attorney's fee in addition to the costs to a parent or legal representative of a handicapped child or youth who is the prevailing party.

"(C) Whenever the parent or legal representative of a handicapped child or youth—

"(i) is awarded fees under subparagraph (B), and

"(ii) is represented by a publicly funded organization which provides legal services, the reasonable attorney's fee which is awarded pursuant to this subsection shall be computed based upon the actual cost related to the bringing of the civil action under this subsection to the publicly funded organization, including the proportion of the compensation of the attorney so related, other reasonable expenses which can be documented, and the proportion of the annual overhead costs of the publicly funded organization attributable to the number of hours reasonably spent on such civil action.

"(D) For the purpose of this paragraph, the term 'publicly funded organization' means any organization which receives funds, other than attorney fee awards, from Federal, State, or local governmental sources which are available for use during any fiscal year in which the action or proceeding is pending to enable the organization to provide legal counsel or representation.".

SEC. 3. Section 615 of the Education of the Handicapped Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) Nothing in this title shall be construed to restrict or limit the rights, procedures, and remedies available under the constitution, title V of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, or other Federal statutes protecting the rights of handicapped children and youth, except that before the filing of a civil action under such laws seeking relief that is also available under this part, the procedures under subsections (b)(2) and (c) shall be exhausted to the same extent as would be required had the action been brought under this part.".

SEC. 4. The amendment made by section 2 shall apply with respect to actions or proceedings brought under section 615(e) of the Education of the Handicapped Act after July 3, 1984, and actions or proceedings brought prior to July 4, 1984, under such section which were pending on July 4, 1984.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 561) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there debate on the substitute amendment, as amended? If not, the question is on agreeing to the substitute, as amended.

The substitute amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I rise today to offer an amendment in the form of a substitute bill to S. 415 as it was reported out of the Labor and Human Resources Committee on July 10, 1985. This amendment is cosponsored by Senators HATCH, STAFFORD, GRASSLEY, DOLE, KENNEDY, KERRY, PELL, METZENBAUM, DODD, MATSUNAGA, and SIMON, and has been developed in conjunction with and agreed to by the Department of Education and the Department of Justice. The passage of this substitute bill will bring to fruition months of intensive work and negotiation among Senators and Representatives of the administration. The bill reverses the Supreme Court's Smith versus Robinson decision of July 5, 1984. In that decision, the Court ruled, contrary to the original intent of Congress, that Public Law 94-142 does not allow the award of attorney's fees to parents who, after exhausting administrative procedures, prevail in a civil court action to protect their child's right to a free appropriate public education. The Court's decision also raised questions about the extent to which rights, remedies, and procedures available under section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act and other Federal civil rights statutes will be applicable to claims made under the Education of the Handicapped Act [EHA].

The purpose of S. 415 is simple—to overturn the Smith Versus Robinson decision and thereby to clarify congressional intent regarding these matters. The fact that Congress did not intend to leave unprotected the rights of handicapped children and their parents to secure the free appropriate public education promised to them by EHA was made clear in the 1978 passage of section 505(b) of the Rehabilitation Act which attorney's fees available under section 504. Section 505(b) clearly does not make an exception for handicapped children seeking an appropriate education. Indeed, the 1978 Senate and House reports accompanying section 505(b) explain that disabled individuals were one of the very few minority groups in this country who had not been specifically authorized by Congress to seek attorney's fees. The purpose of section 505(b) was "to correct this ommission and thereby assist handicapped individuals in securing the legal protection guaranteed them."

Unfortunately, because the court, in Smith versus Robinson, misinterpreted Congress' intent, handicapped children are now provided substantially less protection against discrimination than other vulnerable groups of people. S. 415 would remove these inequities by restoring equivalent protection to handicapped children, a group undeniably deserving congressional protection.

Allowing courts to award attorney's fees to prevailing plaintiffs is not an unusual congressional remedy. In fact, according to the Congressional Research Service (Rept. No. 85-126A), Congress has already enacted more 130 fee shifting statutes which provide for the award of attorneys fees to parties who prevail in court to obtain what is guaranteed to them by law. Many of these statutes are civil rights statutes—that is, Age Discrimination Employment Act through 29 U.S.C. sec. 626(b); the Equal Pay Act through 29 U.S.C. sec. 216(b); the Fair Housing Act through 42 U.S.C. sec. 3612 (c); title II and title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 through 42 U.S.C. sec. 2000a-3(b) and 2000e-5(k); and the Civil Rights Attorney's Fees Awards Act of 1976 through 42 U.S.C. sec. 1988.; but similar attorney's fees statutes exist for a wide variety of laws ranging from the Safe Drinking Water Act through 42 U.S.C. sec. 300j-8(d), to the Deepwater Ports Act through 33 U.S.C. sec. 1515(d), to the National Historic Preservation Act through 16 U.S.C. sec. 470w-4.

The need for these fees statutes has been made apparent by Congress time and again through legislative findings fully applicable in this case. For example, as stated by Congress in enacting the Civil Rights Attorney's Fees Awards Act:

> Civil rights laws depend heavily upon private enforcement, and fee awards have proved an essential remedy if private citizens are to have a meaningful opportunity to vindicate the important congressional policies which these laws contain. Senate Report No. 1011, 94th Cong. 2d Sess. 2, 1976 U.S.C. Cong. Ad. News 5909.

The reason for the essential importance of fee awards is self evident: "In many cases arising under our civil rights laws, the citizen who must sue to enforce the law has little or no money with which to hire a lawyer," which in turn means that without the potential of fee awards citizens would not "be able to assert their civil rights * * *. If our civil rights laws are not to become mere hollow pronouncements which the average citizen cannot enforce, we must maintain the traditionally effective remedy of fee shifting." Id. at 6. in other words, unless the EHA is to become a mere hollow pronouncement which the financially strapped parents and legal representatives of handicapped children cannot enforce, Congress must guarantee access to legal counsel to assist parents in obtaining what is guaranteed to them by EHA.

With this amendment, S. 415 will enable courts to compensate parents for whatever reasonable costs they had to incur to fully secure what was guaranteed to them by the EHA. As in other fee shifting statutes, it is our intent that such awards will include, at the discretion of the court, reasonable attorney's fees, necessary expert witness fees, and other reasonable expenses which were necessary for parents to vindicate their claim to a free appropriate public education for their handicapped child.

The compromise bill which was unanimously agreed to by the full committee contained a provision which limits the amount of the award made to prevailing parents who are represented by a publicly funded organization. The amendment being offered today contains the same provision, but clarifies that the words "publicly funded organization" only refer to those organizations, such as a Legal Services, Inc., which receive Federal, State, or local government funds which are specifically available to provide legal counsel or representation to parents of handicapped children in EHA-related cases. It does not include organizations which only receive Government funds for other specified purposes, when that money is not available for representing parents of handicapped children in EHA cases.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this important piece of legislation which will restore to parents of handicapped children the right to be awarded attorney fees and other reasonable expenses when they must go to court to secure the educational rights promised to them by Congress. By restoring this right we will once again demonstrate that handicapped people should be accorded the same protections as all other citizens of our Nation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 415, the Handicapped Children's Protection Act of 1985. This bill amends Public Law 94-142, the Education for Handicapped Children Act, to make reasonable attorney's fees available to parents who prevail in court actions filed under 94-142. This clarification of congressional intent is necessary because of a Supreme Court ruling issued on July 4, 1984, that denied parents fee awards because their availability was not specified in statute. It is a bill that has been intensely reviewed and debated during the past 12 months. The language contained in S. 415 was carefully written to accommodate a wide range of views and therefore represents an important bipartisan and administrative compromise.

When 94-142 was originally drafted, prescriptive language concerning the administrative due process procedures was included in the law. The purpose for these administrative procedures was to provide each State with a vehicle to resolve disputes between parents and local school districts outside the judicial system. In the vast majority of cases, this system has worked well. Very few cases—1 in 10,000 to be exact—have had to be resolved by the courts.

Critics of S. 415 are fearful that the availability of attorney's fees awards to prevailing parents will increase litigation. It is my belief that the opposite situation will occur. State and local education agencies will be more inclined to work out effective compromises with parents before court action becomes necessary.

Parents must have every opportunity to participate with local school personnel to develop programs for their handicapped children if 94-142 is to provide the free and appropriate education that it promised. That includes making reasonable legal fees available if the services of an attorney are necessary.

A law that mandates a free and appropriate public education to handicapped children, that at the same time denies the awarding of legal fees incurred to uphold that mandate, is a hollow promise at best. It hurts the families most that can least afford it.

I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of S. 415. Senator WEICKER is to be commended for his leadership on this important legislation.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, S. 415, the Handicapped Children's Protection Act, was drafted in response to the Supreme Court's 1984 opinion in Smith versus Robinson. In that case, the Court decided that Public Law 94-142 does not allow the awarding of attorney's fees to parents under section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act when they prevail in an EHA civil action. S. 415 amends Public Law 94-142 to state the current intent of Congress in allowing attorney fees under certain circumstances and when deemed appropriate by the Court in order to protect the rights of handicapped children in obtaining an appropriate public education.

The Hatch-Weicker substitute we are considering today is a modification of the committee bill reported by my Labor and Human Resources Committee on July 10. It is similar to S. 415 as originally introduced with two substantive changes. The first requires exhaustion of administration remedies before pursuing litigation. The second places conditions upon fee awards for publicly funded attorneys representing parents who prevailed in EHA cases.

The committee on Labor and Human Resources does not intend that S. 415, a bill to amend the Education of the Handicapped Act, authorize any additional budget authority for fiscal year 1985 or 1986, other than that already available to the Federal agencies affected by this legislation. Consequently, no budget waiver will need to be obtained for S. 415.

At this time, I would like to thank Senator WEICKER for his work in drafting this bill. I would also like to commend the other Senators on my committee for their assistance in further refinement of the bill. Because of their dedication, we can continue to protect the rights of our 4.5 million handicapped children.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of this important bill that is before us today. The Handicapped Children's Protection Act clarifies the intent of Congress that handicapped children and their parents or legal guardians have available to them the full range of remedies to protect and defend their rights to a free, appropriate education. Last year, a Supreme Court decision, Smith versus Robinson, threatened the rights of the handicapped children to a free, appropriate education when it ruled that parents of handicapped children who prevail in a court case under Public Law 94-142 to protect these rights could not be reimbursed for attorney's fees. The Supreme Court also ruled that parents of handicapped children could not seek relief from education discrimination under section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act or other statutes guaranteeing civil rights.

I do not believe that Congress when it passed Public Law 94-142, the Education for All Handicapped Children Act intended to in any way limit handicapped children's educational rights or the remedies for protecting those rights. And so, this legislation will clarify congressional intent by authorizing the award of attorneys fees at the discretion of the judge to prevailing parents in Public Law 94-142 cases and by clearly stating that the educational rights of handicapped children are protected from discrimination under section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act and other civil rights statutes.

The basic purpose of this legislation and its primary intent states that handicapped children and their parents or legal guardians should be able to participate in the due process system and have access to the full range of remedies to protect their educational rights on an equal par with the school districts and I strongly support this purpose. However, one provision included in this bill contradicts the orignal purpose of S. 415. This contradictory provision provides lower attorneys fees to publicly funded attorneys who typically represent poor parents and their handicapped children in Public Law 94-142 cases. Mr. President, should this provision be included in the final version of this legislation, the access of poor parents to the full range of remedies to ensure their handicapped childrens educational rights would be seriously limited. Should this provision which provides for lower fees to these attorneys remain, we will essentially be telling poor parents that the fight for their handicapped children's educational rights does not have the same worth as the fight waged by the parents who can afford private attorneys. Mr. President, the basic intent of this legislation is to ensure that all children, rich or poor, have access to all remedies to protect their educational rights. We must not set this double standard and we cannot single out low-income handicapped children and their families. I intend to pursue this matter vigorously in conference on S. 415 and I call on my colleagues to carefully consider the ramifications of this provision.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I would like to rise in strong support of S. 415 the Handicapped Children's Protection Act and urge that my colleagues join me in passing this vital legislation. The bill is designed to ensure that all parents or legal guardians of handicapped children are able to fully access the available remedies to protect their handicapped children's educational rights.

In July of 1984, the U.S. Supreme Court decided a case, Smith versus Robinson which had a devastating effect on the ability of parents to secure free appropriate public education for disabled children. The Supreme Court ruled that all free and appropriate education cases were to be handled exclusively under the Education of the Handicapped Act, Public Law 94-142. Consequently, parents are precluded from bringing special education cases under section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and recovering attorneys' fees available under section 505 of that act.

The bill before us today reverses the Supreme Court decision and restores parent's capacity to be reimbursed for legal representation in order to assure their handicapped children's rights under the Education of the Handicapped Act.

As a cosponsor of S. 415, I strongly endorse the principles of rights to education for all handicapped children. However, there is one provision in the legislation which greatly undermines the strength of this bill and should be deleted. Language exists in the bill which limits attorneys' fees available to nonprofit, publicly funded organizations who provide legal services, yet will not place these same limitations on privately funded attorneys. To some this is considered double dipping, quite frankly Mr. President I view this as a double standard. This blatant double standard will have a particularly negative impact on lower income handicapped children most dependent on legal representation by publicly funded attorneys. Furthermore, requiring that attorneys' fees awarded to publicly funded attorneys be computed according to a cost-based standard rather than the prevailing market-based standard used by private attorneys, will set a dangerous precedent for all future cases litigated in this area.

I would like to note last year's U.S Supreme Court decision, Blum versus Stenson, where the Court ruled unanimously that under the Civil Rights Attorneys Act of 1976, all attorney's fees—including publicly funded attorneys' fees—must be calculated according to prevailing market rates. Before congressional intent is created through passage of this provision regarding lower attorneys' fees awards in cases brought to court on behalf of the educational rights of handicapped children, Congress should have the opportunity to closely examine this important issue. I believe that after extensive study of this precedent-setting issue, Congress will preserve the standards upheld in the Blum versus Stenson decision.

In addition, I would like to point out that families most in need of reimbursement of attorneys fees are families most likely to turn to public advocacy for assistance. Furthermore, money awarded to publicly funded attorneys is recycled back into the organization for which the attorney works to expand services to low-income individuals. As a lawyer who has worked in a public attorney's office, I have witnessed first hand that under our present system, offices which provide legal assistance to indigent handicapped children encounter an overwhelming demand for their services and unfortunately have very limited resources to meet this demand. I emphatically believe that any additional funds made available to expand legal services to our Nation's disabled poor citizens is money well spent.

Last, I would like to note, a cap on publicly funded attorneys' fees may deter schools from settling cases expeditiously. Schools not faced with having to pay more substantial attorneys' fees at the fair market rate will have an incentive to draw judicial proceeding out in an attempt to force plaintiffs to abandon their cases. In hearings last May, the Subcommittee on the Handicapped heard testimony on this issue. The testimony by Mary L. Tatro before the subcommittee portrays a clear example of a school district extending judicial proceedings for more than 5 years in an attempt to force the Tatro family into dropping their case due to exorbitant costs of attorneys' fees. If it were not for the assistance of a public advocacy group willing to take their case on, they would have been forced to abandon their daughter, Amber's cause and thus give up the right for Amber to attend school and receive a decent education.

Mr. President, I offered an amendment in the Labor and Human Resources Committee that would have deleted the provision to cap publicly funded attorneys' fees. The amendment was narrowly defeated by a 7 to 9 vote. The closeness of this vote leads me to believe that this issue is not a decisive one, and that great need still exists to further examine the issue. S. 415 is designed to reinforce the rights to education for all handicapped children provided in Public Law 94-142 the Education of the Handicapped Act, including their rights to access the courts when education is being denied to them. In essence, by limiting the attorneys' fees to those who represent handicapped children who are poor, we are ultimately limiting the rights to an appropriate education for less fortunate handicapped children in this country. This double standard weakens the legislation and while I urge my colleagues to vote for the Handicapped Children's Protection Act, I strongly urge that when this bill goes to conference committee, that we do all we can to uphold the educational rights of all handicapped children, rich and poor, and delete this provision.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, 10 years ago, as a member of the House Education and Labor Committee, I was proud to be a cosponsor of the bill that became Public Law 94-142, the Education of All Handicapped Children Act. That act was intended to provide the program, procedures and rights that would end discrimination against handicapped children in public education. Today, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of S. 415, the Handicapped Children's Protection Act of 1985, which will give parents the ability to accomplish the goals of Public Law 94-142 for their children.

In enacting Public Law 94-142, Congress was responding to a history of exclusion of handicapped children from a public education. This act was a specific response, which added to the protections assumed under the Constitution and such laws as the Rehabilitation Act. The key to assuring appropriate education services for handicapped children was seen to be parental participation in all aspects of educational planning and decisionmaking for their chidren. The act provided, in those States which accept Public Law 94-142 funds, an enforceable right to a free appropriate education for all handicapped children, and established due process procedures, including the right to judicial review, to protect those rights. Throughout our consideration of the Education of All Handicapped Children Act there was an awareness that all handicapped children must be provided equal protection under the law, and this was the clear intent of Public Law 94-142.

The Supreme Court's decision on July 5, 1984, in Smith versus Robinson, jeopardizes the educational rights provided under Public Law 94-142 and negates the intent of Congress to assure equal protection for all handicapped children. In eliminating a parent's ability to be reimbursed for attorney fees under Public Law 94-142, the Court has made the due process guarantees of that act, including the right to go to court when necessary, meaningless for all but the wealthy and well informed. By limiting the remedies available to parents under other statutes, the Court misinterpreted congressional intent to enhance, not replace, the rights of handicapped children under other laws.

The provisions of S. 415 reaffirm and clarify the original intent of Congress in providing a variety of effective avenues for parents to use in resolving questions concerning the appropriate educational services their handicapped children should receive. I would like to discuss two major aspects of this bill: the inclusion of the right to reimbursement for fees incurred during the administrative process; and the requirement that administrative proceedings be exhausted prior to court action.

The language of S. 415, which permits the award of a reasonable attorney fee in any action or proceeding brought under this subpart, is identical to the language of title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, interpreted by the Supreme Court in New York Gaslight Club v. Carey (447 U.S. 54) (1980). The Court stated:

> Congress' use of the broadly inclusive disjunctive phrase "action or proceeding" indicates an intent to subject the losing party to an award of attorney's fees and costs that includes expenses incurred for administrative proceedings.

The Court's decision in Gaslight further established the right under title VII to sue solely to obtain an award of attorney's fees for legal work done in State and local proceedings. As the Court stated:

> It would be anomalous to award fees to the complainant who is unsuccessful or only partially successful in obtaining state or local remedies, but to deny an award to the complainant who is successful in fulfilling Congress' plan that federal policies be vindicated at the state or local level.

Under the Court's reasoning, since the Education of the Handicapped Act, like title VII, requires parents to exhaust administrative remedies before seeking judicial relief, prevailing parties under the Education of the Handicapped Act must also be entitled to recover legal fees for the costs of mandatory proceedings.

It is important to note that in only a small number of instances, about .03 percent—a small fraction of 1 percent—of the 4.2 million students in special education, is there an appeal through the formal administrative procedures. An even smaller number, only 67 cases in 1983, go beyond the administrative proceedings to court. Clearly, schools and parents are working together effectively to meet the needs of handicapped children. The law is generally working well.

Nevertheless, we know that problems remain. For example, we know that discrimination on the basis of race and disability merge in the context of the over-classification of minorities as mentally retarded. In 1980, blacks were three times as likely as whites to be enrolled in trainable mentally retarded programs. Although blacks comprise only 16 percent of the school population, they represent 39 percent of the enrollment in classes for the educable mentally retarded. For minority group parents, for low-income as well as moderate income parents, the right to obtain reimbursement for assistance they may need at the administrative level is critically important to assure fair and equal access to the formal procedures mandated by Congress in Public Law 94-142.

The mandated proceedings are quasijudicial, and intimidating to many parents. School districts often employ attorneys to consult and prepare and/or present the district's position in due process hearings. The parent's tax dollars are helping to pay for that attorney and for any witness the school district may call in opposition to the parent. For even the most well educated and most self-confident parent, representing oneself on a matter as vital as the education of one's child, and having to be examined and cross examine witnesses, is an overwhelming prospect. When a parent is poor, of a minority group, or not well-versed in the intricacies of the law and regulations, the inequities of the situation are greatly increased. Increasing the possibility that such a parent may have access to representation when necessary is one step toward making the procedural rights of Public Law 94-142 work for everyone.

S. 415 reestablishes the relationships between the Education of the Handicapped Act [EHA] and other statutes protecting the rights of handicapped children that existed prior to the Smith versus Robinson decision. Section 3 of the bill makes clear, however, that nothing in S. 415 is intended to allow the circumvention of the due process procedures set out in sections 615(b) and (c) the Education of the Handicapped Act. When parents choose to file suit under another law that protects the rights of handicapped children, if that suit could have been filed under the Education of the Handicapped Act, parents are required to exhaust the administrative remedies to the same extent as would have been necessary if the suit had been filed under the Education of the Handicapped Act.

It is important to note that there are certain situations in which it is not appropriate to require the exhaustion of EHA administrative remedies before filing a civil law suit. These include complaints that: First, an agency has failed to provide services specified in the child's individualized educational program [IEP]; second, an agency has abridged or denied a handicapped child's procedural rights—for example, failure to implement required procedures concerning least restrictive environment or convening of meetings; three, an agency had adopted a policy or pursued a practice of general applicability that is contrary to the law, or where it would otherwise be futile to use the due process procedures—for example, where the hearing officer lacks the authority to grant the relief sought; and four, an emergency situation exists—for example, failure to provide services during the pendency of proceedings, or a complaint concerning summer school placement which would not likely be resolved in time for the student to take advantage of the program.

S. 415 is also clearly not intended to modify traditional standards used by the courts for determining when a class action suit can be filed, and the circumstances under which it is appropriate to grant a preliminary injunction. Nor is S. 415 intended to modify existing policy regarding the use of alternative avenues in pursuing complaints, including: the filing of a complaint with the State educational agency under the Education Department General Administrative Regulations [EDGAR]; or filing a complaint with the Office of Civil Rights of the Department of Education.

Mr. President, I wish that I could endorse S. 415 without qualification. There is one provision, however, that does not deserve our support and which I am hopeful will be removed in conference with the House. Under this provision, any organization which receives public funds for the purpose of providing legal assistance would be eligible for attorney fee awards only in the amount that could be documented to be the actual cost of the case. Attorneys awarded fees under the many other fee-shifting statutes—including such wide-ranging statutes as the Deepwater Ports Act, the National Historic Preservation Act, the Equal Pay Act and the Fair Housing Act—may be compensated on the basis of the prevailing market-based standard used by private attorneys. A serious question must be raised as to why this limit is being imposed on handicapped cases and on the seriously inadequate legal services available to the poor. This provision will hurt most those whom this bill as a whole is most intended to help.

To put the inequity of this dual standard into perspective, I have calculated the cumulative loss of Federal funding for the Legal Services Corporation over the past 4 years as a result of its cut in fiscal year 1981. Based on CBO estimates of current service increases in those years, the total lost by the Legal Service Corporation has been $382 million. In contrast, if every penny of attorney fees awarded under this statute went to Legal Services—which would not happen—with an average award of $5,000, and 1,400 cases—far more than likely, but the total of both administrative and court hearings in 1983, the reimbursement would be less than 2 percent of the funds Legal Services has lost in the past 4 years.

Fees awarded to publicly funded organizations do not enrich the attorneys who work for those organizations. Instead, these funds increase the organizations' ability to help persons who too often have turned to them in desperation. Let us remember that the adoption of this provision will specifically reduce services for low-income parents seeking legal assistance to assure the rights of their handicapped children to an appropriate education.

Mr. President, the chairman of the Subcommittee on the Handicapped, Senator WEICKER, and his staff deserve high praise for their diligence in bringing this bill to the floor. The effects of the Supreme Court ruling are already being felt in the inability and reluctance of parents to pursue their rights. As stated in the Senate report when Congress enacted the Civil Rights Attorney's Fees Act:

> In many cases arising under our civil rights laws, the citizen who must sue to enforce the law has little or no money with which to hire a lawyer. If private citizens are to be able to assert their civil rights, and if those who violate the Nation's fundamental laws are not to proceed with impunity, then citizens must have the opportunity to recover what it costs them to vindicate these rights in court.

I support prompt passage of this much needed legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

So the bill (S 415) was passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the Education of the Handicapped Act to authorize the award of reasonable attorneys' fees to certain prevailing parties, and to clarify the effect of the Education of the Handicapped Act on rights, procedures, and remedies under other laws protecting the rights of handicapped children, and for other purposes."

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I would like to inquire of the distinguished minority leader if he is in a position to pass or indefinitely postpone the following items: Calendar No. 252, S. 1398 indefinitely postpone; Calendar No. 256, H.R. 2908, pass; Calendar No. 258, S. 1514, pass.

Mr. BYRD. Yes. Mr. President, we are ready to proceed on this side.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the items just identified be considered en bloc, passed or indefinitely postponed en bloc, and that all amendments be considered and agreed to en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(Calendar No. 252, S. 1398, to amend title XI of the Education Amendments of 1978 relating to Indian education programs, was indefinitely postponed.)

INDIAN EDUCATION PROGRAMS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 2908) to amend title XI of the Education Amendments of 1978, relating to Indian education programs.

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I rise in support of H.R. 2908 which amends title XI of the Education Amendments of 1979. This legislation is similar to S. 1398 which I have cosponsored and, on which the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs held hearings July 17, 1986.

These amendments will make changes in existing Indian education programs in an effort to remove some of the barriers which have hampered full implementation of the 1978 law. These technical amendments are the result of a good faith effort by the House Education and Labor Committee, the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs and the Bureau of Indian Affairs. I am pleased that these negotiations have resulted in this bill, and I urge my colleagues to join in support of this legislation which will improve the education of native American students attending contract and BIA schools.

The bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

APPROVAL OF INTERSTATE COST ESTIMATE AND INTERSTATE SUBSTITUTE COST ESTIMATE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1514) to approve the interstate cost estimate and interstate substitute cost estimate.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, I am pleased that the U.S. Senate has before it today the release of $4.7 billion in interstate construction funds due States on October 1. Once again, the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee has agreed to separate the Interstate Construction Program from other complicated issues before the Transportation Subcommittee.

I would like to thank Senator BENTSEN for his statesmanship in agreeing to postpone again the discussion of the 85 percent minimum allocation formula. The equity question of whether or not donor States should receive more funds is important. Their contributions to the Highway Trust Fund made a national highway network for defense and commerce possible. However, since the Interstate System is 97 percent complete, it is only fair that this issue be addressed by Congress.

The Subcommittee on Transportation is in the process of holding hearings on the entire Federal-aid Highway Program and is working on legislation to reauthorize the program by October 1, 1986. I would hope that my colleagues can set aside their special concerns until the next highway bill.

If S. 1514 is delayed, it will cost State highway agencies approximately $18 million per month in lost construction dollars. We cannot afford to lose those dollars. FHWA estimates that the cost of maintaining our roads through the next 15 years varies from $296 to $324 billion depending on the level of travel.

It would be unfair to disrupt State programs again, as was the case, when similar funds were held up for nearly 2 years.

It is time for Congress to honor its commitment to highway users and States by releasing these construction dollars. Such action would demonstrate that we are serious about completing the Interstate System by 1990 and at a reasonable cost.

In closing, I would like to thank my colleagues for all the hard work they have put in this month on the highway hearings and preparing this legislation.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor this bill approving the ICE and ISCE for 1985.

This is a 1-year approval releasing in excess of $4 billion interstate construction and minimum allocation funds.

The State of Texas will receive more than $187.8 million in interstate constuction funds and approximately $198.9 million in minimum allocation funds. These funds for Texas and many other States are needed, and they represent a return of funds that have been contributed by the States.

My minimum allocation amendment is still of great concern to me, and I want it fully understood that I intend to press for inclusion of that language in the 1986 reauthorization bill.

I have said before and I will continue to point out that there is a matter of equity in including apportionment and allocations in calculating the 85 percent minimum allocation formula. States should be guaranteed a reasonable return on their contribution, and that is what Congress intended when we adopted the 85-percent minimum.

That formula was flawed because it omitted some categories, and my amendment simply corrects that error. The Senate agreed to correct this mistake in the name of fairness earlier this year, but because of the overwhelming need to enact legislation to approve construction funds, I agreed to House-passed legislation which did not include my amendment.

My colleagues on the Environment and Public Works Committee and I have discussed the equity of this measure, and it will be offered in the next reauthorization bill. Because the need for highway construction funds is still strong, I do not intend to hold up distribution by offering my amendment now.

This bill is free of amendments so that we can act promptly to conclude this important matter. It is only with the understanding that it will remain without amendments that I will not press the issue of minimum allocations. If the status changes, and amendments are added, I reserve the right to alter my position.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to clarify the status of the Central Artery (I-93) project in the bill we are enacting today. Does the present bill contain costs for the Central Artery (I-93) in Boston, MA?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. The cost estimate we are adopting today contains costs for the Central Artery project. This figure represents the costs for the Central Artery, which were included in the 1981 cost estimate—$369 million—updated for inflation from 1981 to the present time. The table 5 number in the cost estimate we are adopting today reflects the cost of the Central Artery and other Massachusetts interstate projects minus outstanding obligations and unobligated balances.

Mr. KERRY. What is the intent of the chairman of the Committee on Environment and Public Works regarding the effect this cost estimate will have on the legal status of the project?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is my intent that this cost estimate will not alter the legal status of the Central Artery project. Like the 1983 cost estimate we enacted in March 1985, this cost estimate contains the same costs for the Central Artery that were included in the 1981 cost estimate—$369 million—with adjustments for inflation since 1981. By including the 1981 cost figures for the Central Artery in this estimate and the 1983 cost estimate, it is my intent to maintain the legal status of the project as of the 1981 cost estimate. The cost estimates enacted since the 1981 cost estimate have not been intended to change the legal status of the Central Artery project.

The bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed; as follows:

S. 1514

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

APPROVAL OF INTERSTATE COST ESTIMATE FOR FISCAL YEAR 1987

SEC. 1. The Secretary of Transportation shall apportion for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, the sums authorized to be appropriated for such period by section 108(b) of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956, as amended, for expenditure on the National System of Interstate and Defense Highways using the apportionment factors contained in revised table 5 of the committee print numbered 99-68 of the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the Senate.

APPROVAL OF INTERSTATE SUBSTITUTE COST ESTIMATE FOR FISCAL YEAR 1986

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Transportation shall apportion for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, the sums to be apportioned for such year under section 103(c)(4) of title 23, United States Code, for expenditure on substitute highway and transit projects, using the apportionment factors contained in the committee print numbered 99-69 of the Committee on Environment and Public Works and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the votes by which the above identified bills were passed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

BILL HELD AT DESK—HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 299

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that once the Senate receives from the House, House Joint Resolution 299, recognizing the accomplishments over the past 50 years resulting from the Historic Sites Act of 1935, one of this Nation's landmark preservation laws, it be held at the desk pending further disposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

JOINT REFERRAL

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill introduced today by the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. MCCLURE], and others, dealing with a program to control grasshoppers and morman crickets on public lands be jointly referred to the Energy and Natural Resources Committee and the Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forest Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BILL PLACED ON CALENDAR—S. 1529

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send the enclosed bill to the desk and ask that it be placed on the calendar, Highway Safety Grants section from Calendar No. 122, S. 863.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RESOLUTION URGING MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL OWNERS AND PLAYERS TO AVOID PLAYERS' STRIKE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Labor Committee be discharged from further consideration of Senate Resolution 202, a resolution to urge negotiators for major league baseball owners and players to quickly settle their differences and avoid a scheduled players' strike, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 202) to urge negotiators for major league baseball owners and players to quickly settle their differences and avoid a scheduled players' strike.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to its immediate consideration.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, last week I introduced a resolution, Senate Resolution 202, which urges the baseball team owners and the baseball players to seek a resolution of their differences and not strike on August 6. I have received an enormous response from baseball fans regarding this resolution. The average fan cannot understand all the issues involved in this matter, but they do understand that they want to continue to enjoy baseball games throughout the summer. This resolution does not favor either side—it merely requests that both sides reach an agreement before August 6.

I am pleased that the chairman and ranking minority of the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources have agreed to allow the Senate to consider the resolution today.

Many fans from my part of the country are daily following the progress of Pete Rose in his attempt to break the all-time record for hits. I know that many of my colleagues in the Senate are also following Pete's progress. Recently, I read a sports column in the Washington Post that states that even though Tom Seaver defeated the local team, the Baltimore Orioles during the White Sox July 4 game series in Baltimore, that every baseball fan wishes Seaver luck in his pursuit of this 300th win. Both Rose and Seaver have had remarkable baseball careers, but neither of them will reach their goal this season if there is a baseball strike on August 6.

Individual achievements are important in baseball, but the most important element in this sport, the baseball fan, is not involved in the negotiations. I know the issues are complicated, but I am sure that all fans will agree that an agreement should and must be reached before the strike deadline.

What is a summer without baseball? Unfortunately, the fans have already experienced a hot summer without baseball and they do not like it.

My resolution, Senate Resolution 202, urges both sides to negotiate a settlement in order to avoid a strike. I believe that we, as Members of the U.S. Senate, owe the baseball fans, the folks that turn out at the ball park and continue to root for their baseball teams, every effort to keep the teams playing and have a World Series as scheduled in October.

Mr. President, it is my hope that the Senate will concur with my resolution which requests both sides to settle their differences before August 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 202) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 202

To urge negotiators for major league baseball owners and players to quickly settle their differences and avoid a scheduled players' strike.

Whereas baseball is America's national pastime;

Whereas major league baseball is an important source of family-oriented entertainment for millions of Americans;

Whereas major league baseball teams are a source of local pride for fans in communities across the Nation, as well as providers of substantial revenues and employment opportunities in related businesses;

Whereas the Major League Baseball Players Association has voted to strike on Tuesday, August 6, 1985, unless they have reached a new collective-bargaining agreement with team owners by then;

Whereas a prolonged players' strike would result in the cancellation of hundreds of baseball games, the loss of millions of dollars to related businesses, and endanger the long-term interests of the sport; and

Whereas those who would suffer greatest during a baseball players' strike would be the fans: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Major League Baseball Players Association and team owners have a responsibility to the baseball fans of America to ensure that the current season is not interrupted, and that both parties should do everything in their power to avoid a strike by players.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now go into executive session for the purpose of considering the following nominations on the Executive Calendar: Calendar Nos. 335, 336, and 337.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, we have no objection to proceeding on those three nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY

The bill clerk read the nomination of J. Winston Porter, of Virginia, to be Assistant Administrator, Office of Solid Waste.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is considered and confirmed.

POSTAL RATE COMMISSION

The bill clerk read the nomination of Patti Birge Tyson, of Texas, to be a Commissioner of the Postal Rate Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is considered and confirmed.

THE JUDICIARY

The bill clerk read the nomination of Curtis E. von Kann, of the District of Columbia, to be an Associate Judge of the Superior Court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, this Senator rises in support of the nomination of Mr. Curtis Emory von Kann as associate judge of the District of Columbia Superior Court. Mr. von Kann is the product of a proud Vermont heritage that reflects the best that the Green Mountain State has to offer.

His great-grandfather, Curtis Emory, after whom he is named, was a Vermont statesman in the truest sense of the word. A lawyer and town clerk in Chelsea, he was elected to the State legislature. Later he was appointed by Teddy Roosevelt to be collector of customs in Newport, VT, where he later entered business and was elected as the city's first mayor.

His grandfather was the legendary World War II hero, Col. Harry A. "Paddy" Flint. Paddy Flint, a Vermonter who graduated from West Point in 1912 alongside Dwight Eisenhower and George Patton, led his 39th Infantry through Italy as well as Normandy. It is said that Paddy Flint's men would have followed him through hell without a canteen, and it is probably true. In Normandy, shortly after D-Day, Paddy Flint was mortally wounded in action. The indomitable Flint fell, smiling, as a companion said: "You can't kill an Irishman, you can only make him mad." The next day Paddy Flint died, however, leaving behind an inspiring legacy and his regiment's famed motto, which he coined: "Anything, Anywhere, Anytime, Bar Nothing."

Curtis Emory von Kann is a summer resident of Vermont, the land where his heart and family roots are found. He lives on Cove's Island, which is located in northern Vermont's scenic Lake Memphremagog. This beautiful lake straddles the border of Vermont and Quebec and finds on its shores the city of Newport, where Mr. von Kann's great-grandfather served as mayor so many years ago.

Once again, I strongly support Curtis von Kann's nomination to the D.C. Superior Court. For it is his Yankee heritage and Vermont roots that represent to this Senator some of the finest things the Green Mountain State has to offer—her people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is considered and confirmed.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the votes by which the nominations were confirmed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediatley notified that the Senate has given its consent to these nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DOE WITHDRAWS SUPPORT FOR GREAT PLAINS

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I rise today to speak on the administration's withdrawal of support for the Great Plains coal gasification project. This marks a dark day for our efforts to gain energy self-sufficiency.

By letter of today to the Chairman of the Board of the U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corporation, Edward E. Noble, Secretary of Energy John S. Herrington indicated that, as currently constituted, the administration cannot support a proposed agreement for price guarantee assistance and debt restructuring for the Great Plains Gasification Associates project, as approved by the SFC Board of Directors last month.

Secretary Herrington indicated the withdrawal of administration support despite the fact that all parties bargained in good faith, and the proposal, and I quote, "represents the best that could be achieved under the circumstances."

The position was taken as the culmination of a process begun 2 years ago when the Department of Energy asked the Synthetic Fuels Corporation to consider providing assistance to Great Plains.

Mr. President, the position taken by the administration today on Great Plains is indeed unfortunate, and I hope not a fatal decision for the future of commercial synthetic fuels production from coal in the United States.

On numerous occasions, I have spoken in this body on the need for national synthetic fuels capability in the United States. I have spoken on the continuing need for the accelerated development of a selective number of commercial scale synthetic fuel plants. And Great Plains is one of the technologies that should be in that portfolio.

Focused only on the near-term, short-sighted opponents have pointed to falling international oil prices and an abundance of supplies. But what we are talking about here is the stability of long-term energy supplies at reasonable prices. Events in the Middle East continue to argue for increased efforts toward ensuring energy security for the United States.

The need still exists to ensure a long-term national capability for the domestic production of synthetic fuels. Such a capability for replication is needed as an insurance policy against an ever widening gap between domestic consumption and production. And such a capability is needed if our abundant reserves of coal are to contribute to filling this developing domestic supply gap in an environmentally compatible way.

But there is a complacency in the United States regarding the seriousness of our long-term energy vulnerability. The current ready availability of petroleum supplies at reduced prices is misleading. The suggested abundance of supplies has diverted our attention from the fact that over the longer term these supplies are politically and economically insecure. And the lack of secure energy supplies is indeed a grave national security problem.

Our complacency, while unwarranted, is understandable. As a nation, we are far better prepared to cope with disruptions in the world supply of petroleum than in the recent past. The strategic petroleum reserve now has over 100 days of imports. However, we also are importing approximately 28 percent of our oil needs. As consequence there is an ongoing trade deficit of $60 billion annually from crude oil alone.

This situation will change dramatically over the next decade, as it has over the last decade. By the turn of the century, we very likely may be importing more than 50 percent of our petroleum unless we develop alternative sources of domestic supply. Synthetic fuels is one of those alternatives. If we are to reduce our strategic vulnerability we must develop such alternatives, and Great Plains is one of those technologies.

Let us review some of the benefits to be derived from the long-term operation of Great Plains. First, the very existence of Great Plains as a synthetic fuels alternative has contributed to a dampening of international oil prices. Second, the Great Plains coal gasification project is state-of-the-art technology; it is the first commercial demonstration in the United States—using U.S. coals—of the coal gasification technology most widely used in the world. There are no alternative technologies waiting in the wings for commercial development.

Third, and critically, the technology when fully operational will be commercially operated under stringent environmental requirements that exist nowhere else in the world. Fourth, the technology is being demonstrated on the lower rank coals, such as lignite and subbituminous coals, which the United States has in great abundance.

Finally, and an added benefit, the Great Plains project is the only coal synthetic facility in the United States that can be used as a test bed both to demonstrate coals other than the current feedstocks and to demonstrate different synthetic fuels technologies.

Now, Mr. President, let us look at some of the losses should this project not proceed. In 1982, the Department of energy entered into a contract with Great Plains for a $2.02 billion loan guarantee. If Great Plains now elects to abandon the project there will be an immediate drain on the Federal Treasury of $1.5 billion, at a time of national budgetary concern. In addition, there will be a loss of nearly 1,000 jobs in communities near the project site.

Mr. President, this is not just an issue of disagreement between the SFC and the Department of Energy over a single synthetic fuels project; this is an issue of national energy policy.

In addition to the social and economic benefits to be realized from completion and long-term operation of the Great Plains coal gasification project, there are critical national security benefits to be derived from its completion and long-term operation. Before the project is allowed to collapse, there needs to be a very careful and thorough review of the remaining options for continuing operation of the project.

PROPOSED OIL IMPORT FEE

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, it was with great interest that I learned that the Senate Budget Committee proposed the imposition of an oil import fee as a way to break the budget deadlock and to reduce the Federal deficit. And President Reagan was right to reject it.

You can call it a fee, you can call it a tax, you can call it anything you like. But it has less to do with eliminating the Federal deficit than it does propping up the domestic oil and gas industry. And I guarantee you, once the particulars of this proposal are known, the American people will be outraged.

Proponents of the fee argue that it is needed for a number of reasons, the first of which is to reduce the Federal deficit. The second is to provide a safety net under the domestic oil industry. The third reason is that it is fair tax policy and will promote energy independence and conservation.

I oppose it, first, because more dollars will go into the pockets of the domestic oil industry than into the Federal Treasury. It will be a tax collected by American oil producers from American oil consumers. The price of oil is tied to the world price, and although it is unraveling, OPEC still sets the price of oil; 30 percent of the oil used in the United States is imported. If we raise the price of that oil by $5, we raise the price of all oil used by $5. For every $5 the Treasury gets, the oil companies get $10.

Based on annual 1984 statistics, for every dollar in revenue generated for the Treasury, an additional $2.52 would be added to domestic producers' revenues. Thus, a $5 per barrel fee on crude oil, which would raise approximately $6.270 billion a year for the Federal Treasury, would increase crude oil producers' revenues by approximately $15.771 billion per year.

Likewise, for every dollar in revenue generated by a $10 per barrel fee on imports of all finished petroleum products, an additional $8.72 would be added to the revenues of domestic oil companies. This, a $10-per-barrel fee on finished petroleum products, which would raise approximately $1.092 billion for the Federal Treasury, would enhance domestic oil companies' revenues by approximately $23.402 billion per year.

It is not fair. It is not fair to the American consumer, those at the end of the energy pipeline and it is not fair to prop up one industry at the expense of another. There is no doubt in my mind that this proposal will hurt, rather than help the economy of the State of Minnesota.

World oil prices are falling and a decline in crude oil prices from a current world average of approximately $26 a barrel to $20 a barrel—coupled with a comparable drop in natural gas costs—could within a matter of months lower prices for all goods and services by a percentage point or more. The drop in price levels would have the effect of transferring $125 billion from the owners of oil and gas—and the governments that tax its value—to energy consumers.

Finally, an oil import fee, by itself, does not encourage conservation or the development of alternative energy sources. It encourages and benefits the domestic oil industry, period. If we were really serious about reducing the deficit with an import fee, we would include an excise tax of some sort.

A 10-cent-per-gallon increase in the gas tax would raise the same amount of revenues without negatively impacting consumers, farmers, and States at the end of the pipeline. I am not necessarily advocating an increase in the excise tax, but I am saying that if what is good for the goose, is good for the gander.

If the domestic oil industry wants an import fee to protect the industry, then the industry should be willing to accept a similar fee. And we would have the added benefit of raising twice the revenue.

There is no doubt that the deficit is a serious problem. It is one this Senator is concerned about. But I am not willing to support the proposal the Budget Committee has put forth. It is not a solution. It may be part of a solution, but it is not the solution.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION ADJUDICATION PROCEDURE AND JUDICIAL REVIEW ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I see the distinguished Senator from Colorado is present. I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate turn to Calendar 219, S. 367, Veterans' Judicial Review.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The bill will be stated by title.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 367) to amend title 38, United States Code, to establish certain procedures for the adjudication of claims for benefits under laws by the Veterans' Administration; to apply the provisions of section 553 of title 5, United States Code, to rulemaking procedures of the Veterans' Administration; to provide for judicial review of certain final decisions of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs; to provide for the payment of reasonable fees to attorneys for rendering legal representation to individuals claiming benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I am pleased to present to the Senate today for its approval, S. 367, the proposed Veterans' Administration Adjudication Procedure and Judicial Review Act. This bill was ordered reported unanimously by the Committee on Veterans' Affairs on June 12, 1985, and was reported to the full Senate on July 8 of this year, without amendment. I urge my colleagues to join me in passing this legislation which would improve the rights of veterans and survivors who seek claims for benefits from the Veterans' Administration by allowing such individuals to exercise rights similar to those which exist for claimants of other Federal benefits.

Mr. President, the provisions of the proposed legislation are certainly not new to the Senate. On three prior occasions, this body has passed by voice vote bills which are virtually identical to S. 367.

In the 96th Congress, S. 330 was favorably reported by the Veterans' Affairs Committee on May 3, 1979, and was passed by the Senate on September 17, 1979. In the 97th Congress, similar legislation—S. 349—was unanimously reported by the committee on April 28, 1982, and was passed by the Senate on September 14, 1982. Also, in the 98th Congress, S. 636 was unanimously ordered reported by the committee on April 20, 1983, and was passed by the Senate on June 15, 1983.

S. 367 as reported is the same as S. 636 with two exceptions—the deletion of the provision in S. 636 which related to the size and membership of the Board of Veterans Appeals and a change in the effective date of the bill.

The major components of S. 367 would provide for: The codification of Veterans' Administration claims adjudication procedures; the imposition of formal rulemaking requirements for most VA matters; judicial review in the Federal court system of final decisions rendered by the Board of Veterans Appeals which are adverse to a claimant; and the payment of reasonable attorney's fees by a veteran, in lieu of the longstanding and outdated statutory $10 attorney fee limitation.

Mr. President, this year the passage of certain provisions of this legislation take on even greater importance than in the past, because of two recent court decisions which held contrary to the congressional intent of this legislation.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit held in Gott v. Walters (No. 82-1159, March 22, 1985) that current section 211(a) of title 38 United States Code bars judicial review of decisions of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs relating to regulations implementing veterans' benefits stututes, which is inconsistent with the legislative history of this bill. Enactment of S. 367 would create uniform access to judicial review and would eliminate the current confused state of existing case law.

Additionally, in Walters v. National Association of Radiation Survivors (No. 84-571, June 28, 1985), the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the existing $10 statutory limitation on attorney fees when an attorney represents an individual claimant for VA benefits. S. 367 would remedy this well-intentioned, but outdated statutory attorney fee limitation and would allow the payment of reasonable attorney fees in most situations pertaining to an individual's claim for VA benefits.

Mr. President, I express my appreciation and gratitude to my friend and colleague from California, the ranking minority member of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, Senator CRANSTON, who, along with Senator HART, the distinguished original sponsor of S. 367, have been so instrumental in the development of this committee bill. I commend their persistence in moving forward with this legislation during this Congress, as in past Congresses. I also thank my committee staff members for their diligent work on this legislation, particularly my chief counsel and staff director, Anthony Principi, Julie Susman, Kathleen McTighe, Kay Eckhardt, Lisa Gilman, and Jody Sanders. Additionally, I thank the minority chief counsel and staff director, Jonathan Steinberg, Ed Scott, and Bill Brew for their consistently outstanding work on this legislation. I also extend special thanks to Jim MacRae for his conscientious and diligent work on the committee bill and report.

Mr. President, I strongly urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important legislation which is long overdue.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as the ranking minority member on the Veterans' Affairs Committee, I am delighted to join with the committee chairman [Mr. MURKOWSKI], in urging our colleagues to give their unanimous approval to S. 367, the proposed Veterans' Administration Adjudication Procedure and Judicial Review Act, as reported by the committee on July 8.

If the Senate acts as we urge, this will be the fourth time that the Senate has gone on record in support of legislation to eliminate provisions in current law that accord veterans second-class citizenship in the very fundamental area of their relationship with the Federal Government with respect to statutory benefits and services. The first time was during the 96th Congress, on September 17, 1979, when the Senate passed a predecessor measure, S. 330; the second was during the 97th Congress when S. 349 was passed on September 14, 1982; and the most recent was on June 15, 1983, during the last Congress when S. 636, the immediate predecessor to the current legislation, was passed. On each of these prior occasions, the measure died in the House upon adjournment of that Congress.

I am convinced that the Senate's position on this issue is correct, and I hope that our colleagues in the other body will reevaluate their position and, once this measure arrives there, give it the full and favorable consideration it deserves. In this regard, I am very pleased to note that a companion measure to this bill, H.R. 585, introduced by my good friend from California, DON EDWARDS, has 164 cosponsors at this time.

Mr. President, the basic purpose of S. 367 as reported is to ensure that veterans and other claimants before the VA receive all benefits to which they are entitled under law by:

Providing veterans and other claimants with the opportunity for judicial review of final VA decisions denying claims for benefits.

Improving and codifying certain internal procedures of the VA relating to the adjudication of benefit claims.

Requiring that VA rulemaking processes comply with provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act relating to notice and comment.

Allowing claimants to pay attorneys reasonable fees for representation before the VA after a decision by the Board of Veterans' Appeals as well as for representation in judicial proceedings.

BACKGROUND

Mr. President, in January of this year, Senator HART and I, joined by Chairman MURKOWSKI and 23 other original cosponsors, introduced S. 367—which was substantively identical to S. 636 as passed by the Senate during the 98th Congress. At that time, I made a detailed statement in which I discussed the history of consideration of judicial review legislation in the Senate and the reasons supporting the bill we were then introducing. I refer my colleagues and others with an interest in this background to my remarks at the time of introduction, which begin on page 1562 of the RECORD for January 31, 1985. In addition, my statements on the predecessor measure in the last Congress, S. 636—which can be found on page S. 1895 [daily ed.] of the RECORD for March 1, 1983, at the time of introduction and on page S. 8494 [daily ed.] of the RECORD for June 15, 1983, at the time of Senate passage—provide further background information on this legislation.

The measure as it comes before the Senate today has been through an extended period of development which began in the 94th Congress. During this period, the Committee on Veterans' Affairs has held nine hearings on judicial review legislation, and the Senate Judiciary Committee has held one such hearing. Judicial review legislation has been before both the Veterans' Affairs Committee and the Judiciary Committee, with the Veterans' Affairs Committee four times voting to report the legislation favorably, and the Judiciary Committee, after referral of the reported bill to it for a limited period of time, twice allowing the reported measure to go to the full Senate unamended.

Finally, as I just noted, the Senate during the last three Congresses passed legislation quite similar to the pending measure.

In short, it is clear that the Senate has given a great deal of consideration to the issue of providing for judicial review of VA decisions and has indicated its support for providing an opportunity for a veteran aggrieved by a VA decision on a claim for benefits to obtain a carefully limited review in court of such a decision. I have every expectation that the Senate will go on record again today in support of such a result, and I strongly urge that action.

Mr. President, because, as I noted earlier, I have previously described in some detail the background of this legislation and the general reasons for my support for it, I will limit my remarks today to a discussion of two recent court actions bearing on the substance of this legislation—a decision by the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit relating to the availability of court review to challenge VA action on regulations, Gott versus Walters, and a decision by the Supreme Court on the limit on attorneys' fees for representation of claimants before the VA, Walters versus National Association of Radiation survivors.

AVAILABILITY OF JUDICIAL REVIEW OF VA ACTION ON REGULATIONS

In the committee report accompanying S. 349 in the 97th Congress—S. Rept. 97-466—filed on June 8, 1982, the committee addressed the issue of whether section 211(a) of title 38, United States Code, the provision of law which bars court review of certain Veterans' Administration decisions, acts as a bar to review of VA actions that do not involve individual claims for benefits but only regulations. The committee, expressing the view that section 211(a) did not bar such court review, noted that:

> Most Federal courts of appeals that have addressed the question have held that section 211(a) does not preclude judicial review on the issue of whether a particular VA regulation was promulgated in excess of the Administrator's statutory authority.

However, the committee also noted that this result was not uniform among the courts of appeals and was not settled since the VA and the Department of Justice have continued the practice of "raising the section 211(a) bar in cases where no individual adjudications are involved." Thus, the committee noted that its reasons for supporting S. 349 included its view that:

VA claimants in all parts of the country should have uniform access to the judicial system rather than having to litigate before various district courts and appellate court panels the questions of whether and to what extent section 211(a) operates as a bar in a particular case.

More recently, on October 4, 1984, during Senate debate on the legislation that was ultimately enacted as Public Law 98-542, the Veterans' Dioxin and Radiation Exposure Compensation Standards Act, I joined then Committee Chairman SIMPSON and three other members of the committee in again expressing the view that the then-existing case law provided for access to court review to challenge VA actions in issuing regulations. My remarks on this issue, which included the insertion into the RECORD of a memorandum by the American Law Division of the Congressional Research Service of the Library of Congress concerning the case law, appear at pages S. 13598 to S. 13600 [daily ed.] of the RECORD for October 4, 1984. The statement of Senator ALAN SIMPSON on this point is at page S. 13591 [daily ed.]; that of Senator ARLEN SPECTER, at page S. 13608 [daily ed.]; that of Senator SPARK MATSUNAGA, at page S. 13609 [daily ed.]; and that of Senator GEORGE MITCHELL, page S. 13610 [daily ed.]. During this debate, I also noted that, in addition to being the position of the Carter administration:

It is the VA's position under the current administration that court review of VA regulations is available.

This position was first articulated by Administrator Walters in an answer to a question I posed in connection with his confirmation hearing. In December 1983, Mr. Walters stated:

Should the VA promulgate regulations in excess of lawful authority? Federal court action is certainly available to the adversely affected veterans.

Administrator Walters repeated this position in an April 10, 1984, letter which provided the agency's views on S. 1651. He at that time took note of:

The body of case law permitting judicial review of constitutional challenges to agency regulations and procedures and allegations that the agency exceeded statutory authority in the promulgation of regulations.

In view of this consensus for the proposition that section 211(a) does not bar court review of VA actions relating to regulations, I must note with dismay the recent 2-to-1 decision of a three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in the case of Gott versus Walters, which was decided on March 22, 1985. That case involved a challenge to the propriety of the VA's issuance of certain documents relating to the resolution of claims based on exposure to ionizing radiation. Even though the Department of Justice did not raise the section 211(a) bar as an issue on appeal, the court of appeals did so on its own initiative and reversed the trial court, which had held that such review was available. The appeals court expressly disagreed with a line of cases from the other courts of appeals and held that section 211(a) bars review of decisions of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs relating to regulations—indeed bars challenges to the propriety of the process by which such regulations were issued—implementing veterans' benefits statutes.

I strongly disagree with much of the analysis and with the result in the Gott opinion. The reason I am noting it at this time, however, is to highlight the further disruption this decision creates in the state of the case law confronting a veteran who believes that the VA has acted in an unlawful manner. Gott versus Walters is a timely demonstration, if any further demonstration is needed, of the importance of clarifying the current confused state of the law regarding judicial review of VA actions, as S. 367 would do. Also, because the Federal courts in the District of Columbia have traditionally had a particularly significant role in resolving cases involving administrative law issues, veterans and others seeking to challenge VA actions on regulations will be denied a significant avenue of redress as long as the Gott decision remains the Federal law in the District of Columbia Circuit. In this regard, I note that the full court of appeals has vacated the panel's opinion and will be reviewing the case later this year. This, of course, serves only to compound the confusion and uncertainty about what the law is. It is Congress' job to clear this up.

ATTORNEYS' FEES FOR REPRESENTATION OF VA CLAIMANTS

On June 28, 1985, the Supreme Court decided Walters versus National Association of Radiation Survivors—which I will refer to as "NARS"—in which three veterans seeking service-connected disability compensation, a veteran's surviving spouse seeking dependency and indemnity compensation—DIC—based on a claim that the veteran died from a service-connected disability, and two organizations, the National Association of Radiation Survivors and Swords to Plowshares Veterans Rights Organization, challenged the constitutionality of the provisions of section 3404(c) of title 38 limiting to $10 the fee that an attorney may receive for representing an individual with respect to a claim for VA benefits.

The U.S. District Court for the Northern District of California had determined prior to the conduct of a trial that it was likely that the plaintiffs would prevail with respect to their claim that the fee limitation violated the due process requirements of the fifth amendment and VA claimants' right to freedom of speech under the first amendment. On that basis, the district court granted a nationwide preliminary injunction against the enforcement of section 3404(c).

The Supreme Court voted 6 to 3 to reverse the district court's grant of a preliminary injunction, and the case was returned to the lower court for a full evidentiary hearing and decision directly on the merits of the claim that the fee limitation is unconstitutional.

The decision and opinions handed down by the Supreme Court in that case raise certain issues relating to the provisions in S. 367 modifying section 3404 on which I wish to comment.

First, I note that two of the six Justices who voted to overturn the district court's injunction made clear their view that the Supreme Court's decision was not a ruling on the merits of the constitutional challenge. Rather, Justice O'Connor and Justice Blackmun, who joined Justice O'Connor in her concurring opinion, stated their view that the Supreme Court had decided only that pretrial issuance of a nationwide, preliminary injunction was an abuse of discretion on the part of the district court.

Thus, despite certain language in the majority opinion that might be read as expressing a firm conclusion that section 3404(c) is constitutional, a majority of the justices—the two concurring justices and the three dissenters, Justices Brennan, Marshall, and Stevens—expressly declined to take such a position. Justice Brennan made this point in his dissenting opinion at footnote 37 on page 18 of the slip opinion of his dissent.

The decision in this case, therefore, does not remove the cloud that has been cast regarding the constitutional validity of section 3404(c), and I believe that the existence of this continuing controversy underscores the need for congressional action to modify the fee limitation. The courts can only strike the provision down or sustain it. They do not have the authority to make the type of adjustments that the committee is recommending in S. 367, which would, I believe, both reflect sound policy judgments and eliminate questions regarding constitutional validity. In this regard, I note that Justice Stevens, on page 3 of his dissenting opinion, indicated that, at the time the $10 fee limit was first enacted in 1864, the fee was "roughly the equivalent of a $580 fee today." It is interesting to note that, if enacted, S. 367 would provide generally for a maximum fee of $500 for claims resolved before the VA, a level very similar to that enacted in 1864.

Second, I note that both the district court and the Supreme Court have thus far dealt only with the question of the per se, or facial, constitutionality of the fee limitation. The district court temporarily enjoined its enforcement nationwide in all cases and the Supreme Court reversed the district court's action. However, the plaintiffs also asserted—and neither court has yet ruled on the assertion—that, even if the statute is held to be constitutionally valid on its face, it is unconstitutional as applied in the individual plaintiffs' cases. That this question remains open is noted specifically in Justice O'Connor's opinion, at page 3 of the slip opinion of her concurring opinion.

In my view, the possibility that judicial decisions might uphold the fee limitation as not facially unconstitutional but leave it subject to challenges asserting that it is unconstitutional as applied in individual cases also underscores the need for legislation to eliminate constitutional issues and make the statute more appropriate and more fair to veterans in the contemporary context. For example, if "as applied" challenges were permissible despite a final, authoritative ruling that the statute is facially constitutional, there would be very real, undesirable barriers to veterans' ability to retain counsel in those cases in which a court ultimately might decide that the fee limitation is unconstitutional as applied. For an attorney to take such a case would mean risking the possibility of receiving no fee, even if the benefit in question is awarded. Moreover, the attorney would apparently have to make any fee of more than $10 contingent upon a judicial determination that the limitation was unconstitutional as applied and would have to resort to the potentially time-consuming and costly process of bringing suit in the Federal courts to obtain a ruling that the fee limit would be unconstitutional if applied in that case.

Such an extremely unwieldy, costly, and, very likely, often unsuccessful approach to protecting the veterans' constitutional right to legal representation would, in my view, be totally unsatisfactory in most cases.

Third, I note that the NARS case involved only two types of VA benefits—disability compensation paid to veterans with service-connected disabilities and DIC payable to the surviving spouses of those who die from service-connected causes—neither of which is need-based, as are certain welfare payments. The Supreme Court seemed to have attached considerable significance to this point. The Court noted that in the case of Mathews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319 (1976), it had held that no evidentiary hearing is constitutionally required prior to a temporary deprivation of non-means-tested Social Security benefits but that, in the case of Goldberg v. Kelly, 397 U.S. 254 (1970), it had ruled that a welfare recipient faced with possible termination of benefits was entitled to be represented by an attorney. Choosing which was more applicable to the fee limitation in the context of compensation and DIC, the Court stated:

> We think that the benefits at stake in VA proceedings, which are not granted on the basis of need, are more akin to the Social Security benefits involved in Mathews than they are to the welfare payments upon which the recipients in Goldberg depended for their daily subsistence. Just as this factor was dispositive in Mathews in the Court's determination that no evidentiary hearing was required prior to a temporary deprivation of benefits, 424 U.S., at 342-343, so we think it is here determinative of the right to employ counsel.

The Court took no note of the fact that VA pension under chapter 15 of title 38—payable to certain needy, non-service-connected totally disabled (or elderly) wartime veterans, and to needy survivors of wartime veterans—is, to use the Court's words, "granted on the basis of need" and that recipients of pension depend on it "for their daily subsistence."

From this part of the opinion, it appears that the Court might well consider a different result if the constitutionality of the fee limitation is challenged in a VA pension case.

I note, as was mentioned on page 26 of the committee report accompanying this bill, that compensation and DIC are a top priority of the committee and that the members of the committee would consider anomalous any set of circumstances in which applicants for and recipients of those service-connected benefits are afforded less in the way of procedural protections or advantages—such as the right to be represented by counsel—than are applicants for and recipients of non-service-connected benefits, such as VA pension.

Fourth, although I am not here undertaking any point-by-point rebuttal of possible areas of disagreement with the Court's opinion, I wish to correct a misimpression set forth in footnote 10 of the Court's opinion, at page 16 of the slip opinion. In that note, the Court correctly pointed out that S. 349, as reported by our committee and passed by the Senate in the 97th Congress, would have provided—as S. 367 would provide—for limited judicial review of certain VA decisions and for retention of the fee limitation for VA claims adjudications up to and including the first denial of a claim by the Board of Veterans' Appeals. However, the Court then erroneously asserted that out:

> Committee [had] explained that the limitation was retained to protect claimant's benefits, and because until judicial review was contemplated there was no need for attorneys.

Again, as is pointed out on page 26 of the committee report, the committee has never recommended retention of the fee limitation for the reason that there is no need for attorneys until judicial review is contemplated. The words "no need," quoted by the Court, were used in only one place on the page cited by the Court, in the following sentence:

> In light of the availability of national service officers and other nonlegal forms of free assistance, there would seem to be no need for the assistance of an attorney in order to initiate the claims process by completing and filing an application.

As the committee noted in the ensuing discussion, it did—and still does—see a need for lifting the fee limit "once the BVA renders a decision adverse to the claimant on the merits," and that need is not limited to representation in judicial proceedings. Rather, as noted, the need may exist "with respect to such issues as seeking a reopening and reconsideration" of the VA administrative process either at the BVA level or in the Department of Veterans' Benefits. In the following pages of that report, the committee discussed at length provisions allowing reasonable attorneys' fees for representation within the VA following an initial BVA denial of a claim, regardless of whether the case ever reaches Court. I fully support and agree with that discussion which the Court seems to have overlooked.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, approval of S. 367 by the Senate today will, I believe, hold out substantial hope to our Nation's veterans. This legislation promises to those who served their country the same right of independent review of the fairness with which their Government treats them through the VA that is available to virtually all other citizens in their dealings with agencies administering Federal benefits.

In closing, I want to express my gratitude to the chairman for moving forward on this legislation of such fundamental importance. He and his staff—especially Cathy McTighe, Julie Susman, and Tony Principi—have been fair, thorough, and most constructive in approaching S. 367. The chairman is owed a great vote of thanks by all veterans for taking a leadership role—as had his predecessor, Senator SIMPSON—on the legislation before the Senate today.

Mr. President, I also congratulate my good friend from Colorado, Senator GARY HART, for his longstanding commitment to and leadership on the cause of judicial review. I also want to express my gratitude to my many colleagues who are cosponsors of the measure. The broad, bipartisan support for this measure is demonstrated by the list of 38 sponsors. Adoption of the bill by the Senate today will ratify this support and send a strong signal that this body is strongly committed to removing the archaic bar to judicial review and modifying the nonsensical $10 limit on the amount an attorney may be paid to represent a VA claimant and, in so doing, opening the inner workings of the VA to the light of day.

I also note the very hard work on this legislation by members of the minority staff on the committee, including Bill Brew, Ed Scott, Jon Steinberg, Ingrid Post, and Charlotte Hughes.

Mr. President, S. 367 as it comes before the Senate today is a measure worthy of my colleagues' full support, and I urge that they give it their unanimous backing.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I rise today to speak in support of S. 367, the Veterans' Administration adjudication procedure and Judicial Review Act. This bill would allow for the judicial review of the final decisions of the Administrator of the Veterans' Administration and to raise the $10 cap on legal fees for attorneys who represent veterans to a reaonable amount. I was pleased to join Senator HART in being an original cosponsor of this bill.

Mr. President, this is the fourth time that the Senate has voted on legislation similar to this. Last Congress, the Senate passed similar legislation in S. 636, which I was also pleased to cosponsor, but no action was taken on this measure in the House. Again, I hope that the Senate will pass this much needed legislation, and that the House of Representatives will also take action and pass this legislation.

At the present time, the Veterans' Administration is one of the few Federal agencies whose decisions are not subject to judicial review. While the Veterans' Administration has a well established claims procedures for deciding the merits of veterans claims, a procedure that does provide the veterans with the benefit of the doubt in deciding claims. However, once a final decision has been made by the Board of Veterans Appeal, that decision is final unless new evidence can be presented by the claimant. Though in many cases this system works well for the veteran, it has become clear that in other instances this system has not worked well in deciding many claims, such as the claims filed by atomic and agent orange veterans.

Mr. President, let me briefly detail to my colleagues an example of the system's failure to act. A constituent of mine, John Smitherman, who died in September 1983, was exposed to atomic radiation during an atmospheric test in the South Pacific in 1946 while a sailor in the Navy. He developed lymphatic cancer that caused him to lose two legs, and one hand to swell abonormally. He repeatedly sought relief and compensation from the Veterans' Administration only to be denied service-connection compensation. Seven times he appealed to the Veterans' Administration and seven times he was turned down on a technicality. While several physicians certified that his cancer was caused by his exposure to radiation, the Veterans' Administration continued to deny his claim. John Smitherman's case was a bureacratic nightmare, a classic case of Government insensitivity to its citizens. This insensitivity was compounded by his inability to seek judicial review of this claim. His case is an excellent example of why S. 367 is needed. This legislation will at least grant the John Smithermans' of this Nation the opportunity to appeal their case to the courts, a right that is granted to all citizens, in an effort to seek a just hearing in an independent body.

In addition to providing for judicial review, this legislation raises the outmoded $10 limitation on attorney fees to a reasonable amount. This legislation would provide for a fee of $500 in most cases, but it does not bar the veterans from entering into a contingency fee agreement with an attorney. As this body is aware, and the issue was addressed in the report that accompanied S. 367, the Supreme Court recently upheld the $10 fee that is part of current law. While there may be questions on the constitutionality of the fee limitation, it is clear that the $10 fee has served as an impediment to veterans being able to obtain counsel. And it seems clear that if we are going to allow veterans the right of judicial review, we should also raise the $10 fee. Without raising the fee, all we would do is grant the right while effectively prohibiting veterans from retaining counsel in order to seek judicial review of their claims.

We must enact S. 367 promptly. It has 38 cosponsors and has passed the Senate three times previously. I urge my colleagues to continue their support for this measure that grants our Nation's veterans the basic right of having their day in court. This is a right that all American citizens deserve, most especially our veterans.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE], and the minority leader [Mr. BYRD] for scheduling this bill so that the Senator from Colorado could be present. I appreciate very much their indulgence. I wish to make a brief statement, if I may.

Mr. President, today the Senate again considers the Veterans' Administration Administrative Procedures and Judicial Review Act.

As the author of this legislation, I am grateful to the chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, Senator MURKOWSKI, the ranking minority member, Senator CRANSTON, and the other members of the committee for bringing this bill back to the Senate floor this year.

This bill will provide veterans and other claimants before the Veterans' Administration [VA] the right to judicial review of the final decisions by the Administrator denying their benefit claims. It is also designed, as were the predecessor bills I introduced in the last several Congresses, to codify certain VA benefit claim procedures, to require that the VA comply with important procedural protections in the Administrative Procedures Act, and to grant reasonable attorneys fees.

None of these rights exist today.

The Veterans' Administration—the second largest client agency of the Federal Government—is one of the few agencies whose benefit decisions are not subject to the scrutiny of the Federal courts. Too often in the past, this exclusion, together with an outdated $10 limitation on attorneys fees, has meant that fundamental constitutional rights of veterans have been abridged in hearings before the VA.

Mr. President, this bill we consider today represents the fifth attempt by the Senator from Colorado to seek correction of these inequities and to bring the Veterans' Adminstration in line with the established administrative procedures of other agencies of the Federal Government.

This bill has 38 cosponsors, including a majority of the members of the Veterans' Committee, both Democrats and Republicans. This significant display of biapartisanship, in my judgment, underscores the importance which Senators from both parties attach to making the changes in law and procedure which we are asking today.

Mr. President, a veteran seeking VA benefits must file a claim with the VA regional office's rating board to determine eligibity for disability, pension, or other benefits. If the local rating board renders an unfavorable decision, the veteran can appeal to the Board of Veterans Appeals [BVA] in Washington, DC, which is also part of the VA. Under existing law, the decision of the BVA on "any question of law or fact under any laws administered by the Veterans' Administration providing benefits for veterans and their dependents or survivors, shall be final and conclusive, and no other official or any court of the United States shall have power or jurisdiction to review any such decision" (38 U.S.C. 211(a)). Unlike claimants before other Federal agencies, who enjoy independent judicial recourse, a veteran who believes that the BVA has misinterpreted the law, or decided a case without taking all relevant facts into account, has no reasonable means for appeal outside the Veterans' Administration.

By contrast, the Social Security Administration—which means also adjudicates disability claims—has been subject to judicial review of its final benefit decisions (42 U.S.C. 405(g)) for more than 2 decades.

Mr. President, the insulation of any agency from the scrutiny of the courts runs counter to our most cherished constitutional principles. In human terms, this denial of the due process rights of veterans has too often resulted in hardship and disillusionment for those who have defended our country and are most deserving of the guarantees of our constitutional form of government.

Mr. President, I first introduced legislation to open the Veterans' Administration to outside court review in May 1976. Since that time, my colleagues in the Senate have joined me in successfully passing on three occasions legislation similar to this legislation in the 96th, 97th, and 98th Congresses. Both Senators CRANSTON and SIMPSON have supported this legislation through their distinguished leadership as chairmen of the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee. And, this year, our colleagues, Senator MURKOWSKI, who acceded to the position of chairman after Mr. SIMPSON won his leadership post, has continued that tradition of bipartisan cooperation and support.

Mr. President, let me conclude with these observations.

The Senator from Colorado who has been working on this legislation for a decade. As an opponent of the Vietnam war, a conflict which often and unfairly divided principled citizens and dedicated servicemen and women, I have felt a special obligation to the veterans of this land—not only Vietnam-era veterans, but the veterans of prior conflicts as well. I have tried to reach out to veterans, particularly those whose bodies and souls continue to bear the scars of their sacrifice and courage.

Because this legislation has been a personal priority for me, I have used forums and constituent meetings in Colorado to discuss the bill and publicize the fact that the denial of these fundamental constitutional rights must come to an end. More often than not, as I explain these legally enshrined barriers to veterans' rights, my constituents are shocked. They ask, "How can veterans, many of whom fought to preserve and protect democratic values abroad, be denied these basic protections here at home?" I must answer with regret: "That's the law." And they say, "the law must be changed."

That is the central issue in this debate, Mr. President. The central issue is whether we are going to afford the American veteran the same constitutional rights we grant other citizens in this country. The central issue is whether we are going to end now, today, this frightening anomoly, this powerful irony, that veterans receive less protection under the law then their fellow citizens.

We can provide veterans their rights to simple justice. We can improve oversight of VA procedures. We can respond to the challenge in the Supreme Court's ruling, which upheld the archaic $10 limitation on attorneys fees, and give veterans their civil and legal rights to competent legal representation. Surely, our veterans deserve no less.

It is my hope that a strong statement of support by the Senate for this legislation will prompt the House of Representatives to pass the bill and send it to the White House. I am anxious to work with my colleagues in the Senate, and those responsible for veterans legislation in the House, to ensure that the action we take today will settle this issue once and for all.

Mr. President, again I thank the Senator from Kansas, the majority leader, and the minority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I commend the distinguished Senator from Colorado for his tireless efforts on behalf of the veterans and particularly this legislation. I share the concerns he expressed and extend my commendations to the Senator from Colorado, along with the Senator from Alaska [Mr. MURKOWSKI] and the Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON].

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I wish to associate myself with the remarks of the distinguished majority leader. I also compliment the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. HART] for the noble efforts that he put forth and the support that he has consistently given to legislation on behalf of the veterans and their families.

I also compliment Mr. CRANSTON, the distinguished Democratic whip, on the support that he has given such matters, and also Mr. SASSER. I wish to make the same comments with respect to him, and also to commend Mr. MURKOWSKI for his good work and for the leadership that he along with these other Senators continue to demonstrate on behalf of veterans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) this Act may be cited as the "Veterans' Administration Adjudication Procedure and Judicial Review Act".

(b) Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 38, United States Code.

TITLE I—ADJUDICATION PROCEDURES

SEC. 101. (a) Chapter 51 is amended by adding at the end of subchapter I the following new section:

"§ 3007. Burden of proof; benefit of the doubt

"(a) Except when otherwise provided by the Administrator in accordance with the provisions of this title, a claimant for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration shall have the burden of submitting evidence sufficient to justify a belief by a fair and impartial individual that the claim is well grounded. The Administrator shall assist a claimant in developing the facts pertinent to his or her claim.

"(b) When, after consideration of all evidence and material of record in any proceeding before the Veterans' Administration involving a claim for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, there is an approximate balance of positive and negative evidence regarding the merits of an issue material to the determination of such claim, the benefit of the doubt in resolving each such issue will be given to the claimant, but nothing in this section shall be construed as shifting from a claimant to the Administrator the burden described in subsection (a) of this section.".

(b)(1) The table of chapters at the beginning of title 38, United States Code, and the table of chapters at the beginning of part IV of such title are each amended in the item relating to chapter 51 by striking out "Applications" and inserting in lieu thereof "Claims".

(2) The heading of such chapter is amended to read as follows:

"CHAPTER 51—CLAIMS, EFFECTIVE DATES, AND PAYMENTS".

(c)(1) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended in the item relating to subchapter I by striking out "APPLICATIONS" and inserting in lieu thereof "CLAIMS".

(2) The heading of subchapter I of such chapter is amended to read as follows:

"Subchapter I—Claims".

(d) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding after the item relating to section 3006 the following new item:

"3007. Burden of proof; benefit of the doubt.".

SEC. 102. Section 3311 is amended by adding at the end the following new sentences: "Subpenas authorized under this section shall be served by any individual authorized by the Administrator by (1) delivering a copy thereof to the individual named therein, or (2) mailing a copy thereof by registered or certified mail addressed to such individual at such individual's last known dwelling place or principal place of business. A verified return by the individual so serving the subpena setting forth the manner of service, or, in the case of service by registered or certified mail, the return post office receipt therefor signed by the individual so served shall be proof of service.".

SEC. 103. Section 4001 is amended—

(1) in the second sentence of subsection (a), by inserting before the period at the end of such sentence "in a timely manner"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) The Chairman of the Board shall submit a report to the appropriate committees of the Congress, not later than December 31, 1986, and annually thereafter, on the experience of the Board during the prior fiscal year together with projections for the fiscal year in which the report is submitted and the subsequent fiscal year. Such report shall contain, as a minimum, information specifying the number of cases appealed to the Board during the prior fiscal year, the number of cases pending before the Board at the beginning and end of such fiscal year, the number of such cases which were filed during each of the 24 months preceding the prior fiscal year and the then current fiscal year, respectively, the average length of time a case was before the Board between the time of the filing of an appeal and the disposition during the prior fiscal year, and the number of members of, and the professional, administrative, clerical, stenographic, and other personnel employed by, the Board at the end of the prior fiscal year. The projections for the current fiscal year and subsequent fiscal year shall include, for each such year, estimates of the number of cases to be appealed to the Board and an evaluation of the Board's ability, based on existing and projected personnel levels, to ensure timely disposition of such appeals as provided for by subsection (a) of this section.".

SEC. 104. Section 4003 is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by inserting a comma and "after notice of such additional information is furnished to the claimant and the claimant is provided an opportunity to be heard in connection with such information," after "concerned"; and

(2) in subsection (b)—

(A) by striking out "When" and inserting in lieu thereof "(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), when";

(B) by inserting a comma and "after notice of such additional information is furnished to the claimant and the claimant is provided an opportunity to be heard in connection with such information," after "concerned"; and

(C) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) When, without the vote of a temporary member designated under section 4001(c)(1) of this title or the vote of an acting member designated under section 4002(a)(2)(A)(ii) of this title, a section would be evenly divided, such member shall not vote.".

SEC. 105. Section 4004 is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)—

(A) by striking out "involving" in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "for"; and

(B) by inserting before the period at the end of the second sentence "after affording the claimant an opportunity for a hearing and shall be based exclusively on evidence and material of record in the proceeding and on applicable provisions of law";

(2) by striking out subsection (b) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, when a claim is disallowed by the Board, it may not thereafter be reopened and allowed and no claim based upon the same factual basis shall be considered.

"(2) Following such a disallowance, the Board (directly or through the agency of original jurisdiction, as described in section 4005(b)(1) of this title)—

"(A) when new and material evidence is secured, shall, and

"(B) for good cause shown, may authorize the reopening of a claim and a review of the Board's former decision.

"(3) A judicial decision under subchapter II of chapter 71 of this title, upholding, in whole or in part, the disallowance of a claim shall not diminish the Board's authority set forth in paragraph (2) of this subsection to authorize the reopening of a claim and a review of the former decision."; and

(3) by striking out subsection (d) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(d) After reaching a decision in a case, the Board shall promptly mail notice of its decision to the claimant and the claimant's authorized representative, if any, at the last known address of the claimant and at the last known address of the claimant's authorized representative, if any. Each decision of the Board shall include—

"(1) a written statement of the Board's findings and conclusions, and reasons or bases therefor, on all material issues of fact and law and on matters of discretion presented on the record; and

"(2) an order granting appropriate relief or denying relief.".

SEC. 106. Section 4005(d)(5) is amended by striking out "will base its decision on the entire record and".

SEC. 107. Section 4009 is amended by adding after subsection (b) the following new subsection:

"(c) Whenever there exists in the evidence of record in an appeal case a substantial disagreement between the substantiated findings or opinions of two physicians with respect to an issue material to the outcome of the case, the Board shall, upon the request of the claimant and after taking appropriate action to attempt to resolve the disagreement, arrange for an advisory medical opinion in accordance with the procedure prescribed in subsection (b) of this section. If the Board denies the request of such claimant for such an opinion, the Board shall prepare and provide to the claimant and the claimant's authorized representative, if any, a statement setting forth the basis for its determination. Actions of the Board under this subsection, including any such denial, shall be final and conclusive, and no other official or any court of the United States shall have the power or jurisdiction to review any aspect of any such decision by an action in the nature of mandamus or otherwise, the provisions of subchapter II of chapter 71 of this title to the contrary notwithstanding.".

SEC. 108. (a) Chapter 71 is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"§ 4010. Adjudication procedures

"(a) For purposes of conducting any hearing, investigation, or other proceeding in connection with the consideration of a claim for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, the Administrator may administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence.

"(b) Any oral, documentary, or other evidence, even though inadmissible under the rules of evidence applicable to judicial proceedings, may be admitted in a hearing, investigation, or other proceeding in connection with the consideration of a claim for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, but the Administrator, under regulations which the Administrator shall prescribe, may provide for the exclusion of irrelevant, immaterial, or unduly repetitious evidence.

"(c)(1) In the course of any proceeding before the Board, any party to such proceeding or such party's authorized representative shall be afforded opportunity—

"(A) to examine and, on payment of a fee prescribed pursuant to section 3302(b) of this title (not to exceed the direct cost of duplication), obtain copies of the contents of the case files and all documents and records to be used by the Veterans' Administration at such proceeding;

"(B) to present witnesses and evidence, subject only to such restrictions as may be set forth in regulations which the Administrator shall prescribe, pursuant to subsection (b) of this section, as to materiality, relevance, and undue repetition;

"(C) to make oral argument and submit written contentions, in the form of a brief or similar document, on substantive and procedural issues;

"(D) to submit rebuttal evidence;

"(E) to present medical opinions and request an independent advisory medical opinion pursuant to section 4009(c) of this title; and

"(F) to serve written interrogatories on any person, including any employee of the Veterans' Administration, which interrogatories shall be answered separately and fully in writing and under oath unless written objection thereto, in whole or in part, is filed with the Administrator by the person to whom the interrogatories are directed or such person's representative.

"(2) The fee provided for in paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection may be waived by the Administrator, pursuant to regulations which the Administrator shall prescribe, on the basis of the party's inability to pay or for other good cause shown.

"(3) In the event of any objection filed under paragraph (1)(F) of this subsection, the Administrator shall, pursuant to regulations which the Administrator shall prescribe establishing standards consistent with standards for protective orders applicable in the United States District Courts, evaluate such objection and issue an order (A) directing that, within such period as the Administrator shall specify, the interrogatory or interrogatories objected to be answered as served or answered after modification, or (B) indicating that the interrogatory or interrogatories are no longer required to be answered.

"(4) If any person upon whom interrogatories are served under paragraph (1)(F) of this subsection fails to answer or fails to provide responsive answers to any such interrogatories within 30 days after service or such additional time as the Administrator may allow, the Administrator shall, upon a statement or showing by the party who served such interrogatories of general relevance and reasonable scope of the evidence sought, issue a subpena under section 3311 of this title (with enforcement of such subpena to be available under section 3313 of this title) for such person's appearance and testimony on such interrogatories at a deposition on written questions, at a location within 100 miles of where such person resides, is employed, or transacts business.

"(d) In the course of any hearing, investigation, or other proceeding in connection with the consideration of a claim for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, an employee of the Veterans' Administration may at any time disqualify himself or herself, on the basis of personal bias or other cause, from adjudi-cating the claim. On the filing by a party in good faith of a timely and sufficient affidavit averring personal bias or other cause for disqualification on the part of such an employee, the Administrator shall determine the matter as a part of the record and decision in the case.

"(e) The transcript or recording of testimony and the exhibits, together with all papers and requests filed in the proceeding, and the decision of the Board (1) shall constitute the exclusive record for decision in accordance with section 4004(a) of this title, (2) shall be available for inspection by any party to such proceeding, or such party's authorized representative, at reasonable times and places, and (3) on the payment of a fee prescribed under section 3302(b) of this title (not to exceed the direct cost of duplication), shall be copied for the claimant or such claimant's authorized representative within a reasonable time. Such fee may be waived by the Administrator, pursuant to regulations which the Administrator shall prescribe, on the basis of the party's inability to pay or for other good cause shown.

"(f) Notwithstanding section 4004(a) of this title, section 554(a) of title 5, or any other provision of law, adjudication and hearing procedures prescribed in this title and in regulations prescribed by the Administrator under this title for the purpose of administering veterans' benefits shall be exclusive with respect to hearings, investigations, and other proceedings in connection with the consideration of a claim for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration.

"§ 4011. Notice of procedural rights

"In the case of any disallowance, in whole or in part, of a claim for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, the Administrator shall, at each procedural stage relating to the disposition of such a claim, beginning with disallowance after an initial review or determination, and including the furnishing of a statement of the case and the making of a final determination by the Board, provide to the claimant and such claimant's authorized representative, if any, written notice of the procedural rights of the claimant. Such notice shall be on such forms as the Administrator shall prescribe by regulation and shall include, in easily understandable language, with respect to proceedings before the Veterans' Administration, (1) descriptions of all subsequent procedural stages provided for by statute, regulation, or Veterans' Administration policy, (2) descriptions of all rights of the claimant expressly provided for in or pursuant to this chapter, of the claimant's rights to a hearing, to reconsideration, to appeal, and to representation, and of any specific procedures necessary to obtain the various forms of review available for consideration of the claim, and (3) such other information as the Administrator, as a matter of discretion, determines would be useful and practical to assist the claimant in obtaining full consideration of the claim.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding after the item relating to section 4009 the following new items:

"4010. Adjudication procedures.
"4011. Notice of procedural rights.".

SEC. 109. (a) In order to evaluate the feasibility and desirability of alternative methods of (1) assuring the resolution of claims before the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration as promptly and efficiently as feasible following the filing of a notice of disagreement pursuant to section 4005 (as amended by section 106 of this Act) or 4005A of title 38, United States Code, and (2) affording claimants the opportunity for a hearing before or review by a disinterested authority at a location as convenient and on as timely basis as possible for each claimant, the Administrator is authorized to conduct a study, commencing not more than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, for a period of 24 months, involving either or both of the alternative methods described in subsection (b) of this section for resolution of claims.

(b)(1) In not more than three geographic areas, the Administrator is authorized to provide an intermediate-level adjudication process whereby each claimant may, within the time afforded such claimant under paragraph (3) of section 4005(d) or 4005A(b) of title 38, United States Code, to file an appeal, request a de novo hearing at the agency of original jurisdiction (as described in section 4005(b)(1) of such title) before a panel of three Veterans' Administration employees, each of whose primary responsibilities include adjudicative functions but none of whom shall have previously considered the merits of the claim at issue. Following such hearing, such panel shall render a decision and prepare a new statement of the case in accordance with the requirements of paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 4005(d) of such title. Such new statement of the case shall, for all purposes relating to appeals under chapter 71 of such title, be considered to be a statement of the case as required by paragraph (1) of such section 4005(d).

(2) In not more than three other geographic areas, the Administrator is authorized to provide for an enhanced schedule of visits, on at least a quarterly basis each year, by a panel or panels of the Board of Veterans' Appeals to conduct formal recorded hearings pursuant to section 4002 of such title in such areas.

(c) Not later than 6 months after the completion of such study, the Administrator shall report to the Congress on the results thereof, including an evaluation of the cost factors associated with each alternative studied and with any appropriate further implementation thereof, the impact on the workload of each regional office involved in such study, and the impact on the annual caseload of the Board of Veterans' Appeals resulting from each alternative studied, together with any recommendations for administrative or legislative action, or both, as may be indicated by such results.

SEC. 110. Section 3010(i) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after "(i)"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2) Whenever any disallowed claim is reopened and thereafter allowed on the basis of new and material evidence in the form of official reports from the proper service department, the effective date of commencement of the benefits so awarded shall be the date on which an award of benefits under the disallowed claim would have been effective had the claim been allowed on the date it was disallowed.".

TITLE II—VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION RULE MAKING

SEC. 201. (a) Subchapter II of chapter 3 is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 223. Rulemaking

"Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a)(2) of section 553 of title 5, the promulgation of rules and regulations by the Administrator, other than rules or regulations pertaining to agency management or personnel or to public property or contracts, shall be subject to the requirements of section 553 of title 5.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding after the item relating to section 222 the following new item:

"223. Rulemaking.".

TITLE III—JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. 301. Section 211(a) is amended by striking out "sections 775, 784" and inserting in lieu thereof "sections 775 and 784 and subchapter II of chapter 71 of this title".

SEC. 302. (a) Chapter 71 is further amended—

(1) by inserting after the table of sections the following new heading:

"Subchapter I—General";

and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subchapter:

"Subchapter II—Judicial Review

"§ 4025. Right of review; commencement of action

"(a) For the purposes of this chapter—

"(1) 'final decision of the Administrator' means—

"(A) a final determination of the Board of Veterans' Appeals pursuant to section 4004 (a) or (b) of this title; or

"(B) a dismissal of an appeal by the Board of Veterans' Appeals pursuant to section 4005 or 4008 of this title; and

"(2) 'claim for benefits' means—

"(A) an initial claim filed under section 3001 of this title;

"(B) a challenge to a decision of the Administrator reducing, suspending, or terminating benefits; or

"(C) any request by or on behalf of the claimant for reopening, reconsideration, or further consideration in a matter described in clause (A) or (B) of this paragraph.

"(b) Except as provided in subsection (f) of this section, after any final decision of the Administrator adverse to a claimant in a matter involving a claim for benefits under any law administered by the Veterans' Administration, such claimant may obtain a review of such decision in a civil action commenced within 180 days after notice of such decision is mailed to such claimant pursuant to section 4004(d) of this title. Such action shall be brought against the Administrator in the district court of the United States for the judicial district in which the plaintiff resides or the plaintiff's principal place of business is located, or in the district court of the United States for the judicial district where the principal offices of the Board of Veterans' Appeals (established under section 4001 of this title) are located.

"(c) The complaint initiating an action under subsection (a) of this section shall contain sufficient information to permit the Administrator to identify and locate the plaintiff's records in the custody or control of the Veterans' Administration.

"(d) Not later than 30 days after filing the answer to a complaint filed pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, the Administrator shall file a certified copy of the records upon which the decision complained of is based or, if the Administrator determines that the cost of filing copies of all such records is unduly expensive, the Administrator shall file a complete index of all documents, transcripts, or other materials comprising such records. After such index is filed and after considering requests from all parties, the court shall require the Administrator to file certified copies of such indexed items as the court considers relevant to its consideration of the case.

"(e) In an action brought pursuant to subsection (b) of this section, the court shall have the power, upon the pleadings and the records specified in subsection (d) of this section, to enter judgment in accordance with section 4026 of this title or remand the cause in accordance with such section or section 4027 of this title.

"(f)(1) No action may be brought under this section unless (A) the initial claim for benefits is filed pursuant to section 3001 of this title on or before the last day of the fifth fiscal year beginning after the effective date of this section, and (B) the complaint initiating such action is filed not more than 180 days after notice of the first final decision of the Administrator rendered after the last day of such fiscal year is mailed to the claimant pursuant to section 4004(d) of this title. If the case is reopened pursuant to section 4004(b)(2)(A) of this title within 180 days after such notice is mailed, the next final decision shall, for purposes of this subsection, be considered the first final decision of the Administrator.

"(2) No action may be brought under this section with respect to matters arising under chapters 19 and 37 of this title.

"§ 4026. Scope of review

"(a)(1) In any action brought under section 4025 of this title, the court, to the extent necessary to its decision and when presented, shall—

"(A) decide all relevant questions of law, interpret constitutional and statutory provisions, and determine the meaning or applicability of the terms of an action of the Administrator;

"(B) compel action of the Administrator unlawfully withheld;

"(C) hold unlawful and set aside decisions, findings (other than those described in clause (D) of this paragraph), and conclusions of the Administrator found to be—

"(i) arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law;

"(ii) contrary to constitutional right, power, privilege, or immunity;

"(iii) in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitations, or in violation of a statutory right; or

"(iv) without observance of procedure required by law; and

"(D) in the case of a finding of material fact made in reaching a decision on a claim for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, hold unlawful and set aside such finding when it is so utterly lacking in a rational basis in the evidence that a manifest and grievous injustice would result if such finding were not set aside.

"(2) Before setting aside any finding of fact under paragraph (1)(D) of this subsection, the court shall specify the deficiencies in the record upon which the court would set aside such finding and shall remand the case one time to the Administrator for further action not inconsistent with the order of the court in remanding the case. In remanding a case under the first sentence of this paragraph, the court shall specify a reasonable period of time within which the Administrator shall complete the ordered action. If the Administrator does not complete action on the case within the specified period of time, the case shall be returned to the court for its further action.

"(b) In making the determinations under subsection (a) of this section, the whole record before the court pursuant to section 4025(d) of this title shall be subject to review, and the court shall review those parts of such record cited by a party, and due account shall be taken of the rule of prejudicial error.

"(c) In no event shall findings of fact made by the Administrator be subject to trial de novo by the court.

"(d) When a final decision of the Administrator is adverse to a party and the sole stated basis for such decision is the failure of such party to comply with any applicable regulation of the Veterans' Administration, the court shall review only questions raised as to compliance with and the validity of the regulation.

"§ 4027. Remands

"(a)(1) In any action brought under section 4025 of this title, the court shall, on motion of the Administrator made before the expiration of the time specified for the filing of an answer to a complaint filed pursuant to subsection (b) of such section, allow a single remand of a case to the Administrator for further review by the Administrator. If such review is not completed within 90 days after the date of such remand, the matter shall be returned to the court for its action.

"(2)(A) At any time after the Administrator files an answer, the court may, in the exercise of its discretion, remand the case to the Administrator for further action by the Administrator.

"(B) If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there is good cause for granting such leave, the court shall remand the case to the Administrator and order such additional evidence to be taken by the Administrator.

"(C) In the case of a remand under subparagraph (A) or (B) of this paragraph, the court may specify a reasonable period of time within which the Administrator shall complete the required action.

"(b) After a case is remanded to the Administrator under subsection (a) of this section, and after further action by the Administrator, including consideration of any additional evidence, the Administrator shall modify, supplement, affirm, or reverse the findings of fact or decision, or both, and shall file with the court any such modification, supplementation, affirmation, or reversal of the findings of fact or decision or both, as the case may be, and certified copies of any additional records and evidence upon which such modification, supplementation, affirmation, or reversal was based. Any such modification, supplementation, affirmation, or reversal of the findings of fact or decision shall be reviewable by the court only to the extent provided in section 4026 of this title.

"§ 4028. Survival of actions

"Any action brought under section 4025 of this title shall survive notwithstanding any change in the person occupying the office of Administrator or any vacancy in such office.

"§ 4029. Appellate review

"The decisions of a district court pursuant to this chapter shall be subject to appellate review by the courts of appeals and the Supreme Court of the United States in the same manner as judgments in other civil actions.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended—

(1) by inserting before the item relating to section 4001 the following new item:

"SUBCHAPTER I—GENERAL";

and

(2) by adding after the item (added by section 108(b) of this Act) relating to section 4011 the following new items:

"SUBCHAPTER II—JUDICIAL REVIEW

"4025. Right of review; commencement of action.
"4026. Scope of review.
"4027. Remands.
"4028. Survival of actions.
"4029. Appellate review.".

SEC. 303. Section 1346(d) of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and "except as provided in subchapter II of chapter 71 of title 38".

TITLE IV—ATTORNEYS' FEES

SEC. 401. Section 3404 is amended by striking out subsection (c) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(c) The Administrator shall approve reasonable attorneys' fees to be paid by the claimant to attorneys for representation before the Veterans' Administration in connection with a claim for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, but in no event shall such attorneys' fees exceed—

"(1) for any claim resolved prior to or at the time that a final decision of the Administrator is first rendered, $10; or

"(2) for any claim resolved after such time—

"(A) if the claimant and an attorney have entered into an agreement under which no fee is payable to such attorney unless the claim is resolved in a manner favorable to the claimant, 25 percent of the total amount of any past-due benefits awarded on the basis of the claim; or

"(B) if the claimant and an attorney have not entered into such an agreement, the lesser of—

"(i) the fee agreed upon by the claimant and the attorney; or

"(ii) $500, or such greater amount as may be specified from time to time in regulations which the Administrator shall prescribe based on changed national economic conditions subsequent to the date of enactment of this subsection, except that the Administrator may, in the Administrator's discretion, determine and approve a fee in excess of $500, or such greater amount if so specified, in an individual case involving extraordinary circumstances warranting a higher fee.

"(d)(1) If, in an action brought under section 4025 of this title, the matter is resolved in a manner favorable to a claimant who was represented by an attorney, the court shall determine and allow a reasonable fee for such representation to be paid to the attorney by the claimant. When the claimant and an attorney have entered into an agreement under which the amount of the fee payable to such attorney is to be paid from any past-due benefits awarded on the basis of the claim and the amount of the fee is contingent on whether or not the matter is resolved in a manner favorable to the claimant, the fee so determined and allowed shall not exceed 25 percent of the total amount of any past-due benefits awarded on the basis of the claim.

"(2) If, in an action brought under section 4025 of this title, the matter is not resolved in a manner favorable to the claimant, the court, taking into consideration the likelihood at the time such action was filed that the claimant would prevail, may determine and allow a reasonable fee not in excess of $750 to be paid to the attorney by the claimant for the representation of such claimant.

"(e) To the extent that past-due benefits are awarded in proceedings before the Administrator or a court, the Administrator shall direct that payment of any attorneys' fee that has been determined and allowed under this section be made out of such past-due benefits, but in no event shall the Administrator withhold for the purpose of such payment any portion of benefits payable for a period subsequent to the date of the final decision of the Administrator or court making such award.

"(f) The provisions of this section shall apply only to cases involving claims for benefits under the laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, and such provisions shall not apply in cases in which the Veterans' Administration is the plaintiff or in which other attorneys' fee statutes are applicable.

"(g) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) the terms 'final decision of the Administrator' and 'claim for benefits' shall have the same meaning provided for such terms, respectively, in section 4025 (a) of this title; and

"(2) claims shall be considered as resolved in a manner favorable to the claimant when all or any part of the relief sought is granted.

"(h) In an action brought under section 4025 of this title, the court may award to a prevailing party, other than the Administrator, reasonable attorneys' fees and costs in accordance with the provisions of subsection (d) of section 2412 of title 28, as in effect on the day before the effective date of the repeal of such subsection (as provided in section 204(c) of the Equal Access to Justice Act (Public Law 96-481; 94 Stat. 2329; 28 U.S.C. 2412 note)).".

SEC. 402. Section 3405 is amended—

(1) by striking out "or" after "title,"; and

(2) by striking out "him" and inserting in lieu thereof "such claimant or beneficiary, or (3) with intent to defraud, in any manner willfully and knowingly deceives, misleads, or threatens a claimant or beneficiary or prospective claimant or beneficiary under this title with reference to any matter covered by this title".

TITLE V—EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 501. This Act and the amendments made by this Act shall take effect on the first day of the first month beginning not less than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 502. A civil action authorized in subchapter II of chapter 71 of title 38, United States Code (as added by section 302(a) of this Act) may be instituted to review decisions of the Board of Veterans' Appeals rendered on or after April 1, 1985.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Saunders, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

DEFERRAL OF CERTAIN BUDGET AUTHORITY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 70

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with accompanying papers; which, pursuant to the order of January 30, 1985, was referred jointly to the Committee on the Budget, the Committee on Appropriations, and the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the Impoundment Control Act of 1974, I herewith report one new deferral of budget authority for 1985 totaling $16,004,810. The deferral affects an account in the United States Information Agency.

The details of this deferral are contained in the attached report.

RONALD REAGAN.

By Mr. SPECTER:

S. 1524. A bill to amend the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 as amended by the Justice Assistance act of 1984 in order to establish a police corps training pilot project; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

POLICE CORPS TRAINING ACT

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to establish a Police Corps Training Program pilot project.

The Police Corps is an innovative plan for upgrading and augmenting law enforcement resources, developed under a Justice Department grant by a distinguished New York lawyer, Adam Walinsky, former Philadelphia policeman, Johnathan Rubenstein, and others at the Center for Research on Institutions and Social Policy. It offers a cost-effective way to build up our police forces with well-educated, professional, and enthusiastic young people who will add an important new dimension to police service.

Similar to the military's Reserve Officers Training Corps [ROTC], the Police Corps will provide college students with 4-year scholarships in exchange for 3 years in local police departments in communities near their homes at a reduced salary. The scholarships will be funded under the Justice Assistance Act in the form of loans, which will be forgiven over the 3 years of service at a rate of 20 percent the first year, 30 percent the second, and 50 percent the third.

The view that a college education provides valuable training for police officers is not new. More than 50 years ago, such advocates of professional policing as Fosdick and Vollmer were calling for higher education for the police.

In 1967, the report by the President's Commission on Law Enforcement and Administration of Justice emphasized the need for substantially raising the quality of police personnel to inject into police work knowledge, expertise, initiative, and integrity that would contribute importantly to crime control. The report noted that a high standard of education is an important aspect in achieving that higher quality:

> Police work always will demand quick reflexes, law enforcement know-how and devotion to duty, but modern police work demands much more than that . . . . A policeman today is poorly equipped for his job if he does not understand the legal issues involved in his everyday work, the nature of the social problems he constantly encounters, the psychology of those people whose attitudes toward the law differ from his. Such understanding is not easy to acquire without the kind of broad general knowledge that higher education imparts, and without such understanding a policeman's response to many of the situations he meets is likely to be impulsive or doctrinaire. Police candidates must be sought in the colleges, and especially among liberal arts and social science students.

This conclusion was subsequently supported by the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations in 1971; by the American Bar Association, in 1972; and by the National Advisory Commission on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals, on which I served, in 1973.

Yet, to date, higher education in the police forces has generally been restricted to college courses in criminal justice for career officers.

The Police Corps Training Program offers a way to recruit committed and qualified students who might not otherwise go into the police force and provide them with a broad college education as a way of bringing in fresh blood and new ideas. Like the Peace Corps, VISTA, and other public service efforts, this program will encourage a new attitude about police service and instill a new concept of professional idealism.

As Santa Ana Police Chief Ray Davis has said:

> Getting people from a multitude of disciplines would bring a more enlightened, more humanistic level of [police] service . . . and those who leave will be taking with them an understanding of law enforcement they've never before had.

In addition to attracting a new kind of officer, the Police Corps training will turn out young men and women better qualified to meet the challenges of contemporary law enforcement. They will not only gain the general benefits of education and experience at a college, these recruits will also spend the summers of their sophomore and junior years training as police cadets. After graduation, they will undergo final training at a police academy.

The result should be a well-trained, well-disciplined, and well-rounded individual who brings to the job not only enhanced professionalism, but a greater flexibility and sensitivity to the environment in which the officer must function. These officers will be better equipped to deal with the age old problems of policing such as race relations and dispute resolution, as well as new threats like urban terrorism.

Another significant aspect of this program is that it is likely to result in a police force more reflective of the community it serves, since students will fulfill their service commitment in departments near their homes. And student surveys conducted as part of the feasibility study for this project revealed that the program will attract many well-qualified minority students, something that has long been urged as an essential step toward improving police-community relations.

And finally, because these specially trained officers will be hired at reduced salaries, the program authors suggest 60 percent of the normal starting salary, in return for their free education, this program could provide a cost-effective way to increase not only the quality but also the quantity of police officers. Mr. Walinsky and his colleagues are quick to point out that many of these recruits would serve their 3 years and get out of police work to be replaced by others, which means their cost is even less because there is no retirement to pay. The feasibility study for this project calculated that by year 10 of a national program, the cost of each new Police Corps member, including the costs of continuous recruitment, training, and education would be $24,700—a figure considerably less than the average first-year cost for an officer serving in a large metropolitan area.

The need for more police is well documented. As the crime rate has dramatically increased overtime, police manpower has failed to keep pace. In fact, the ratio of police officers to violent crimes committed has fallen continuously over the past four decades. In 1948, for every violent crime reported in an American city, there were 3.32 police officers. Thirty years later, the ratio had nearly reversed itself, with one officer for every two violent crimes. In New York City in 1951, a police force of 19,000 had to cope with 15,812 violent crimes, less than one per officer. In 1981, a force of 22,000 confronted 157,026 violent crimes, which correlates to more than seven violent crimes for each officer.

Contributing to this shrinking ratio is not only an increased crime rate, but a reduction in the number of police. The vast majority of police chiefs responding to the police corps feasibility study believe their departments are operating with less than an adequate number of personnel. Among small departments, 75 percent of the chiefs affirmed that they were operating with fewer officers than they felt they needed to meet their department's responsibilities. For large departments, the number was even higher: 82.5%.

With Federal scholarships providing the incentive, municipalities will be able to hire more of these college-educated recruits to augment their overburdened staffs, and the summer training is designed to allow these new officers to immediately begin providing essential service.

The legislation I am introducing today provides for a 7-year pilot project in three cities. But it is my hope that it can soon be expanded to a national program, available to any interested and qualified municipality.

This innovative and practical proposal has, already, a number of supporters. Numerous articles and editorials have been written applauding the Police Corps concept and urging its consideration. One who saw the potential benefits of the program early on is Mr. Edwin Guthman, editor of the Philadelphia Inquirer. On August 15, 1982, he alerted his readers to this promising new scheme and urged its serious consideration; and he has persisted, with subsequent articles appearing on March 13, 1983, on March 4, 1984, and on January 20, 1985. I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Guthman's articles be printed below in the RECORD as a succint summary of the Police Corps Training Program and its benefits.

Additional support for the Police Corps can be found in articles by William F. Buckley, April 4, 1985, and the editors of the New York Times, August 6, 1982 and January 27, 1985, also reprinted.

It is my strong sense that this program offers great hope in our ongoing struggle to bring greater security to our streets and homes. I urge my colleagues to join me in support of the Police Corps Training Program pilot project.

I ask unanimous consent that the articles and the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1524

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

This Act may be cited as the "Police Corps Training Act of 1985".

ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM

SEC. 2. (a) Title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3701-3799) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new part:

"PART N—POLICE CORPS TRAINING: PILOT PROGRAM

"ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM

"SEC. 1401. (a) The Secretary of Education is authorized to enter into contracts to make, and to make payments to institutions of higher education for, loans, not exceeding $7,000 per academic year, to persons enrolled on a full-time basis in undergraduate or graduate programs, if such persons are in the police corps of an eligible unit of local government.

"(b) Such loans shall be on such terms and conditions as the Secretary of Education and the police corps involved may determine, except that the total amount of any such loan, plus interest, shall be canceled for service as a full-time officer or employee of a police department at the rate of—

"(1) 20 percent of the total amount of such loan plus interest for the first complete year, or its equivalent, of such service;

"(2) 30 percent of the total amount of such loan for the second complete year, or its equivalent, of such service; and

"(3) 50 percent of the total amount of such loan for the third complete year, or its equivalent, of such service, as determined under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Education.

"(c) For purposes of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the amount of a loan canceled for service for provided in subsection (b) shall not be included as gross income of the recipient of such loan.

"APPROVAL OF POLICE CORPS

"SEC. 1402. The Attorney General shall approve police corps as eligible for purposes of this Act for a period of seven years if the Attorney General is satisfied that—

"(1) participants in the police corps are to undergo at least as much training as regular police officers before taking up police duties;

"(2) the eligible unit of local government for which the program is approved will use the program to supplement but not supplant existing police workers, and the force level of such unit will be maintained at no less than the average of the three years before workers are made available by the police corps;

"(3) the eligible unit of government is likely to use workers made available by the program for "on-line" duties, and pay scales for such workers are set at a fixed percentage of regular officers' pay and benefits and can be known by such workers before they decide to participate in the police corps;

"(4) participants undertake to engage in police work for three years after graduation, and after the end of that three-year period, any participants retained by the employing force will be subject to collective bargaining agreements to the same extent as police workers who were not participants in the police corps.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 1403. As used in this part—

"(1) the term "eligible unit of local government" means the locales determined by the Attorney General in consultation with the Secretary of Education.

"(2) the term "institution of higher learning" means any such institution as defined in section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1141(a)), subject to such modifications for this purpose as the Secretary of Education may determine to be appropriate.".

(b) The table of contents of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"PART N—POLICE CORPS TRAINING: PILOT PROGRAM

"1401. Establishment of program.
"1402. Approval of Police Corps.
"1403. Definitions.".

FUNDING

SEC. 3. Subsection (a) of section 1001 of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 as amended by the Justice Assistance Act of 1984 which is part of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, is amended by—

(1) redesignating paragraph (6) as paragraph (7); and

(2) adding after paragraph (5) the following:

"(6) There is authorized to be appropriated $7,500,000 for fiscal year 1987, $10,000,000 for fiscal year 1988, $14,000,000 for fiscal year 1989, and $17,500,000 for each of the fiscal years 1990 through 1993 to carry out part N."

A NEW APPROACH TO COMBAT CRIME: A POLICE CORPS

(By Edwin Guthman)

A new idea that holds promise of effectively reducing serious crime in the cities and suburban and rural communities has been put forward in New York by a panel of private citizens with expertise in law enforcement.

The essence of the panel's proposal—double the effective police presence on the streets and the transit systems—is not new. What is new is how that objective can be achieved without busting state, county or city budgets.

It can be done, the panel urges, by recruiting young men and women for police work by offering them free college or professional education in return for three years of service in local police forces after graduation.

The panel proposed in a report published Aug. 4 that the State of New York establish a Police Corps, similar in outline to the military Reserve Officer Training Corps. Volunteers would receive from the state four-year scholarships covering tuition, room, board and books, up to $8,000 a year at any accredited New York college or university.

During summers of their sophomore and junior years they would be given training as police cadets. After graduation they would undergo final training at a police academy. Upon completion of their course and satisfaction of all tests and legal requirements they would be sworn into the State Police and assigned for local service.

Volunteers who are unable, or choose not, to complete their service obligation would have their scholarships treated as loans to be repaid. "The program can be implemented well within New York's fiscal restraints," the panel said. New York now provides $302 million for aid to students on a basis of financial need and $19 million in scholarship regardless of need as part of a $1 billion annual appropriation for higher education.

The panel proposed using part of those funds together with available federal funds but said additional money would have to be appropriated if the number of student police it recommends is authorized. The additional cost however, would be modest in relation to the need and in relation to the cost of existing police salaries, fringe benefits and pensions, the panel said.

New York City calculates that the average police officer costs up to $42,000 in pay, benefits and pensions. Police Corps graduates would receive $15,000 in wages and fringe benefits costing another $5,000, but as short-term officers would not be eligible for pensions.

Thus the corps would be far less costly than any other alternative, the panel said.

If it is created without delay, New York, by 1990, could increase the number of police throughout the state by 30,000 with 20,000 assigned to New York City, 7,000 in other city and suburban areas and the remaining 3,000 to rural districts. The first groups of graduates should be assigned to two areas, the panel said, some to the New York subway system and the others to police rural areas to free experienced state troopers for other assignments such as narcotics and illegal dumping of toxic wastes.

"These new officers would serve under the command of local police forces," the panel said. "They are not intended as a budget subsidy to local governments, but as the fulfillment by state government of its obligation to restore public order and peace throughout the state.

"We can and should attract many of our finest young people to police service. Most volunteers no doubt would resign at the end of their terms, to be replaced by the class of the graduating year. But even if they were to perform no additional service . . . the presence of well-trained, experienced former police officers in ever-increasing numbers would greatly aid efforts to mobilize the entire community to fight the criminality that is undermining our way of life."

The panel's study was co-authored by Adam Walinsky, a New York city lawyer and former chairman of the State Investigations Commission, and Jonathan Rubenstein, who worked with the Philadelphia police for a year in 1969–70 and with complete cooperation of Mayor Frank Rizzo, then police commissioner, studied the department and wrote a definitive report which was published under the title "City Police". He now is research director for the Center of Research on Institutions and Social Policy in New York.

Another member of the panel was Neil Welch, the former crime-busting special agent-in-charge of the Philadelphia and New York offices of the FBI and now secretary of justice in Kentucky.

"It is a decent plan," Welch told me. "It has the right numbers. It can be done."

Walinsky said the panel developed the plan in a series of discussions about crime, government and citizen participation in a democratic society.

"Nobody is a real citizen any more," he said, "not in the sense of being a full participant in the society and there is widespread feeling that the bureaucracies don't respond to needs. Crime becomes worse and the debate about it—talk about the death penalty and stiffer sentences—is puerile, stupid and damaging. The politicians can't think of a way out."

Walinsky sees the plan not only as the best feasible way to double effective police presence, but also as breaking the way for other programs to get young people involved for a limited time in other government functions as well as police work.

At first blush law enforcement officials and police unions may resist having a flock of young short-term officers in the ranks and other people may fear that having so many new police would create a police state.

To the latter concern, the panel said, "What will bring us a police state is the unchecked growth of violence and disorder. The police—and especially these new police—are citizens, citizen police. They are us; our children. They are not, and will not be, an alien occupying force.

"It is the crime and fear that are now depriving us of freedom, life and liberty."

Statistics indicate that crime is more pervasive in New York than Pennsylvania. In New York City, violent crimes—murder, rape, robbery and aggravated assault—occurred in 1981 at a rate of seven for every serving officer. The 1981 rate in Philadelphia was 2.33 violent crimes per officer.

Other numbers in the panel's report also may not fit Pennsylvania's situation tightly, but crime is taking a heavy toll here as elsewhere with increasing viciousness and seeming irrationality.

So, here's a new approach that, as the New York Times commented editorially, is "a genuine breath of fresh air." It deserves a real hard look by Gov. Dick Thornburgh—and his Democratic challenger, Alan Ertel.

The plan is imaginative and practical. I think it would work in any state that has a governor who would implement it and has the commitment and leadership to ensure its success.

THE POLICE CORPS CONCERT IS GAINING SUPPORTERS

(By Edwin Guthman)

It's been just a little more than seven months since a panel of law-enforcement experts went public with a well-defined proposal "to double the effective police presence in every area with a serious crime problem" in New York State.

They advocated that New York create a Police Corps by recruiting college students on a competitive basis and giving them full four-year scholarships in return for which the students would agree to serve three-year hitches with local or state police forces after graduation.

It would be similar to the Army or Navy's Reserve Officer Training Corps with the students spending the summers of their sophomore and junior years training as police cadets, and the panel members weren't thinking small.

They said that six to eight years after being implemented the number of police in New York could be increased by 30,000 and they proposed that 20,000 of them be assigned to New York City, 7,000 in other city and suburban areas and the remaining 3,000 to rural areas.

"We believe," the panel said, "that such a program, on a strictly voluntary basis, would attract the best of New York's young people, of both sexes and every ethnic background.

"America's young people have repeatedly demonstrated their eagerness to serve the highest public purposes of the nation. Nor has their service always been military. Tens of thousands have served in the Peace Corps, in VISTA, and in hundreds of less-publicized efforts to improve American life.

"We can offer young New Yorkers a voluntary public service alternative to the military. Police Corps service would be an opportunity at once to meet the most vital need of their home communities, and to acquire the education of their choice free of financial burdens on themselves and their families."

The proposal made a lot of sense to me, both in broad outline and in detail, including the panel's recommendation that the corps be financed by using part of $302 million New York now provides for student financial aid and $19 million in state scholarships plus federal funding that might be available.

And recognizing that there probably would be opposition from local mayors and police brass and that some persons would fear that adding so many new police officers might create a police state danger, I thought the plan was imaginative and practical, and last August I wrote:

"I think it would work in any state that has a governor who would implement it and has the commitment and leadership to ensure its success."

So, what's happened to it?

Well, it's moving along slowly, but it is moving.

New York City Mayor Ed Koch has embraced the idea and made it an endorsed position of his administration. Gov. Mario Cuomo has not taken a position on it yet, but a bill to implement it is being drafted for introduction in the New York legislature.

Florida Gov. Robert Graham has had the plan carefully studied and has received a favorable report.

California's new attorney general, John Van de Kamp, has evinced interest and will meet next month with the panel's chairman, New York lawyer Adam Walinsky, former head of the New York State Investigations Commission, when Walinsky goes to the coast at the invitation of Assembleman Tom Hayden to tell California legislators about the Police Corps.

A Police Corps bill has been introduced in the Maryland legislature by Rep. Leo Green, the former mayor of Bowie.

Pennsylvania Attorney General Leroy Zimmerman obtained the panel's report last fall. Members of his staff are studying it so he is not ready to decide whether to recommend it for the state or not.

Officials at the U.S. Department of Justice and in Massachusetts and several other states also are looking into it.

Meanwhile, Walinsky, an ex-Marine, has been meeting with New York police officers to overcome their concerns about having a flock of young, short-term officers in the ranks. After Walinsky outlines the plan, invariably the first question is asked something like this:

"Well, now wait a minute. These kids are going to be cops for only three years and how do we know that they will be committed and do the work? Will they be willing to take chances or will they just want to hide?"

That's the way it was put two weeks ago when Walinsky spoke at a meeting of Brotherhood in Action, a council of the presidents and vice presidents of all the benevolent and ethnic societies of the New York City Police Department.

Walinsky responded by asking another question. "How many of you were in the armed forces of the United States?" Virtually every cop raised a hand.

"Were you in there for a career or just a few years?" Walinsky asked. "Not a career," was the unanimous reply.

"Well," said Walinsky, "I bet that you were every bit as good soldiers, sailors, Marines or airman as the lifers that you were serving with." "That's right."

"And I bet a few of you took some chances while you were in there and got shot at and you probably had some friends who took so many chances that they got killed, but none of you thought that you were doing it because it was your career."

There was another chorus of "That's right" and then one of the oldest officers in the audience asked: "Okay, but are they going to learn fast enough and how do we know they're not going to goof off?"

Walinsky looked at the man for a moment. Then he said slowly, "If I give you eight or 10 of these kids and tell you that they are your responsiblity, I think you can teach them how to work and make sure that they are working."

The veteran cop nodded his head.

In New York City the police refuse to work alone in the streets. They know and all of their commanders know that the force is desperately short of personnel and that is why at these meetings Walinsky is turning skeptics into supporters.

The Police Corps plan can be a real alternative to the present situation in New York, Philadelphia and wherever violent crime flourishes because police departments are undermanned. It offers the prospect of increasing the number of police and attracting well-motivated young people to law enforcement at a cost that would be modest in relation to the need and in relation to the cost of existing police salaries, fringe benefits and pensions.

THE POLICE CORPS CONCEPT IS GAINING MOMENTUM

The Police Corps—a proposal to increase the number of police by giving college students four-year scholarships in return for three years of service as police officers after graduation—is not a panacea for fighting crime.

But it is a promising, relatively low-cost plan to increase effective police presence in cities large and small and in the suburbs and rural areas. And with the criminal justice system overloaded and the response of law enforcement officials and politicians rooted in calls for tougher laws, mandatory sentencing and building more prisons, the Police Corps is the only genuinely new idea for reducing crime to surface recently.

As such and because it seemed to have a lot going for it, I wrote about it when it was proposed in August 1982 by a panel of private citizens with law enforcement expertise and I updated readers of this column a year ago.

Now I can report that the idea is gaining support around the country and moving toward the first stage of implementation in seven states, including Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

Pennsylvania Attorney General LeRoy S. Zimmerman began looking at the concept last year and several people close to New Jersey Gov. Kean have expressed interest in it. As a result, the two states—along with the New York, Massachusetts, Florida, Texas, and California—were selected for a feasibility study financed by a $328,000 grant from the Reagan administration.

The study got under way last month with the mailing of questionnaires to all police departments in the seven states asking them to report their present manpower strength, how that relates to their needs and whether they would want Police Corps recruits.

It is being coordinated by a former Philadephia police officer, Jonathan Rubenstein, research director for the Center of Research on Institutions and Social Policy in New York City.

The study has a two-fold purpose—gauging police manpower needs and informing police chiefs about the concept and getting their reaction.

In New York, where Rubenstein and Adam Walinsky, former head of the New York State Investigations Commission, have been plugging the Police Corps in meetings with police, they encountered resistance based on concerns that young, short-term officers would not have the commitment to withstand the pressures of pounding beats and could be used to weaken police unions.

But the Police Corps has received generally favorable notices in the press and from key political or law enforcement officials like Zimmerman in the other states being surveyed.

This is particualrly true in California. San Jose Mayor Tom McEnery and Police Chief Joseph McNamara are moving to give the proposal its first pilot test. Attorney General John Van de Kamp is a moderate supporter and a Police Corps bill has been submitted to the California legislature.

In Philadelphia, Police Commissioner Gregore J. Sambor has some skepticism.

It appears to Sambor that the disadvantages outweigh the advantages, but Common Pleas Court Judge Harvey M. Schmidt is taking a close look in connection with his role as co-chairman of the newly formed Urban Education Foundation. The foundation is overseeing the transformation of the former Provident Mutual Life Insurance Co. headquarters in West Philadelphia into an urban campus for Cheyney and Lincoln Universities.

The Police Corps would work this way. College students would be recruited on a competitive basis and, similar to the Army and Navy Reserve Officer Training Corps, successful applicants would receive four-year scholarships.

In return, the students would spend the summers between their sophomore and junior years training as police cadets and then serve three-year hitches with local or state police forces. For those who were unable to or chose not to meet their service obligation, their scholarships would become loans that would have to be repaid.

The program is seen not only as a way of increasing the number of police, but also as a way of steering more college-educated young men and women toward making their careers in law enforcement.

"The Police Corps would be a priceless gift and a priceless opportunity for all of us," Rubenstein told a criminal justice seminar of the National Association of Attorneys General here recently.

"The United States has the most disgraceful rates of violence in the civilized world—and some parts of the uncivilized world—and the Police Corps offers a way to increase the number of police at a price we could afford."

The cost-savings would come by paying the Police Corps graduates about half of what regular police recruits receive in salary and benefits that over a three-year period would add up to a meaningful sum in the aggregate.

But financing the scholarships looms as a hurdle. The Reagan administration is reluctant, at least now, to pledge federal support for scholarships so it will be up to the states and local areas to find the money.

But look at the alternative. Crime statistics have improved somewhat in recent years, but crime is rampant and municipal finances in Philadelphia and most other urban and suburban centers are strained to the point where it is more likely that the number of police will be reduced rather than increased.

So, the Police Corps, it seems, is an idea whose time is coming, if it is not already here.

SUBWAYS AND STREETS CAN BE SAFER WITHOUT VIGILANTES

(By Edwin Gutham)

The real issue that people ought to be discussing in the now-celebrated New York subway shooting is how cities, particularly the nation's largest city and its massive subway system, can be made safer.

It is not whether 37-year-old Bernhard Hugo Goetz was a hero, shooting justly in self-defense, or a trigger-happy vigilante.

It is not whether the four young blacks whom he wounded, after one of them asked him for $5, got what was coming to them.

It surely is not whether New Yorkers should draft Goetz to run for mayor, as New York Daily News columnist Jimmy Breslin proposed in baiting his readers to put themselves on record by signing "Write-in for Goetz" coupons if "you like what Bernhard Goetz stands for."

Whatever happens to Goetz and the four young blacks should—and no doubt will—be decided in the toils of the law, and there is nothing that all the people who are lionizing Goetz can do about that.

But what they can do is apply maximum pressure on public officials—particularly mayors, governors and legislators—to do more than they are now doing to reduce the menacing level of homicides, robberies, rapes, muggings and vandalism.

I'm not among those cheering Goetz because it's not clear that he needed to shoot to defend himself on that subway train on Dec. 27 and because he shot two of the young men in the back. But whatever was in his mind, there have been two positive results from what he did.

One was to expose—as no other event has in recent years—how many law-abiding people have lost faith in the criminal justice system and how intensely they resent and fear being victimized by street thieves.

The other is that the reaction to Goetz is showing politicians how vulnerable they are to that loss of faith and anger; that people are demanding more from them than statements that citizens have no right to take the law into their own hands.

And the fact is that most of them can't think beyond imposing stiffer sentences and building more prisons. Without question both are needed, but we've been moving steadily in that direction over the last two decades and people are no safer in the streets or in their homes.

One obvious answer is to have a police force that is large and effective enough to turn the tide, but in a time of strained city budgets and resistance to higher taxes that is not easy to accomplish. An example is Mayor Goode's difficulty in delivering on his promise to have 30 additional police officers assigned by Jan. 1 to fight neighborhood drug trafficking.

But there is a well-defined proposal that has been around for 2½ years that could put more cops on the streets and in the subways without busting city, state or county budgets. And it should be given a fresh look in response to Goetz.

It is the Police Corps, an idea put forward by a New York panel of private citizens with extensive experience in law enforcement I've written about it before because it seemed to me to be eminently sensible and practical. Here's how it would work:

Young men and women would be recruited for police work by offering them a free college education in return for three years of service in local police forces after graduation. It's similar to the military's Reserve Officer Training Corps.

Volunteers would receive scholarhips. During the summers of their sophomore and junior years they would be trained as police cadets. After graduation they would undergo final training at a police academy and upon meeting all qualifications would take their place in the ranks. Those who were unable to or chose not to meet their service obligation would have to repay their scholarships.

Police Corps graduates, as short-termers, would be paid a lower wage than career police officers and would not be eligible for pensions. That's what makes the plan attractive from a cost standpoint. But it also is causing opposition beyond the natural tendency of professional law enforcement chieftains to resist having a flock of young "outsiders" on the force.

In New York, for example, where the police have been working for eight months without a contract, the Police Corps is seen as a threat to the police union and its ability to call a strike. And Mayor Ed Koch is said to prefer spending money on "real cops."

The Police Corps has attracted interest and some curiosity on the part of public officials from New York to California. Among them is Pennsylvania's Attorney General LeRoy S. Zimmerman, but no one has moved to put it into effect. However, a feasibility study, conducted by the Center of Research on Institutions and Social Policy in New York and financed by a $428,000 grant from the Reagan administration, is nearing completion.

There is an ironical connection between the Police Corps and the subway shooting. When the panel outlined its plan in August 1982, it targeted the New York City subway as "the first field of action."

"Full implementation of this plan would take several years," the panel said. "But there is no need to wait, indeed, the need is too great in delay at all.

"The new governor [Mario Cuomo] should begin implementation in January 1984. By the end of that calender year the state could begin to put elements of a reorganized police force in the most dangerous place in New York State—the New York City subway.

If Cuomo had done so the world might never have heard of Bernhard Goetz.

[From the New York Times, Aug. 6, 1982]

A BREATH OF FRESH AIR FOR POLICE

Running a big city these days is an exercise in managing scarcity—and so requires special ingenuity. Therein lies the appeal of a new idea for expanding police forces.

The proposal, broached by an independent group led by Adam Walinsky, former head of the New York State Commission on Investigation, is to create a state "Police Corps" of 30,000 recruits who would agree, in exchange for college scholarships, to serve as police officers for three years after graduation. Twenty thousand would serve in New York City, doubling current police manpower, while the rest would be spread throughout the state.

There is broad agreement that the city needs more police officers. The department, with about 22,000 members, survived the loss of 10,000 others in the 70's by focusing on major crimes. That was sound policy; felony arrests stayed up despite the cutbacks. But now the department is chronically overworked. New corruption indictments are ominous signs. The lack of attention to lesser crimes, meanwhile, demoralizes the whole city. Yet the cost of simply expanding the department is high: up to $42,000 a year per officer including benefits.

The Police Corps wouldn't necessarily be cheap. The cost of scholarships and 30,000 new officers on the payroll might approach $800 million a year by 1986. But promoters of the plan believe existing state education programs could cover some of the scholarship money and they point out that the payroll cost would be a state, not a city expense.

In any case, taxpayers would get much more for their money than by simply hiring more regular police officers. Salaries and benefits for each Police Corps member would total only about $20,000 per year and wouldn't lock the department into long-term salary and pension commitments.

Officers of the Police Corps would likely bring enthusiasm and imagination to police work. Those who decided to stay on would form a pool of highly qualified candidates for promotion. The rest would carry back to civilian life an invaluable understanding of law enforcement and urban crime.

The plan draws predictable criticism from police unions. But handled properly, the inevitable shake-up it would cause could be constructive. In New York City, the proposal envisions using the new officers initially to reclaim the subway system for civilization. Success in that effort would benefit all the city's police.

For the last few years, voters have been reluctant to approve major spending on criminal justice. Their resistance, despite growing anxiety about crime, reflects good sense, for the politicians and experts continue to offer only stale suggestions for more of the policies that haven't worked very well. The Police Corps, a genuine breath of fresh air, merits real interest.

GATES, GUARDS, GUNS AND GOETZ

There's little to be pleased with in the fact that Bernhard Goetz has now been indicted only for possessing an illegal weapon. The public explosion he set off a month ago was not for owning the gun but for using it, and perhaps not so bravely at that. Two of the four men were shot in the back.

But the grand jury knew all that. By charging him only with lesser offenses, it expressed what 110 percent of the American public has already expressed: support for the subway vigilante. What accounts for it?

It's not hard to understand the frustration and anger of New Yorkers who ride the subways. But why do people in San Francisco and Spokane, who don't know the difference between the IRT and the P.B.A., also raise their voices, fists and dollars? Don't they know the danger that's unleashed when someone starts shooting in a crowded place, when someone takes the law into his own hands?

Of course they do, but they also know something else, bitterly. Government has failed them in its most basic responsibility: public safety. To take the law into your own hands implies taking it out of official hands. But the law, on that subway car on Dec. 22, was in no one's hands.

And not just then. People everywhere have learned that all too often they have to protect themselves. They have to take matters into their own hands. Considering all the billions they have felt they had to spend for lights, locks, alarms, dogs, gates, guards and guns, the way Bernhard Goetz protected himself does not look so startling.

Why doesn't The System better protect itself? Part of the answer surely is that crime is so difficult a collection of problems—and that the fears it arouses make it as daunting as the facts. Keeping drugs out of the country is one kind of problem; keeping pushers out of the park is another. To think of crime as one problem is to doom ourselves to a futile search for a simplistic, nonexistent solution.

There are plenty of solutions like that, offered by politicians who insist that, for instance, the true villain is civil liberties, as if abolishing the exclusionary rule would somehow make the subway safe at 2 A.M. And yet society is not powerless. No one can credibly promise to conquer crime, but the fact is that promising steps can be taken to curtail it. One of the most important, as Roger Starr suggests in today's New York Times Magazine, is for each community to concentrate resources on a prime target—in New York, the transit system.

There are also some splendid specific ideas to try, and some obvious crises ahead. An example of the ideas is the Police Corps proposed by two serious students of law enforcement, Adam Walinsky and Jonathan Rubinstein. It woud give college scholarships to 30,000 recruits who agree to serve three years as police officers.

In New York, more and more school dropouts constitute an obvious crisis. About 40 percent of New York City's teen-agers leave school before graduation. There is no population more vulnerable to the temptations of street crime. Yet where is the dropout-prevention program?

There is reason to think the public would support a Police Corps or dropout prevention. Consider the sophistication that New Yorkers demonstrated in a Times Poll two weeks ago. When asked "What would help reduce crime a lot?", 50 percent said more police on foot—and about 75 percent said more youth job training and better schools.

So there's a mystery here, a big one. Given such attitudes, why hasn't government undertaken any serious new anti-crime program? Crime is a powerful, passionate issue everywhere. Yet where is there an officeholder willing to sponsor anything more than trivial symbolism? The last Federal initiative was the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, and that was four Presidents ago. The only local initiative that comes to mind is the Victim Services Agency—worthwhile, but hardly a crime prevention measure.

What has the public gotten from the Reagan Administration? Another commission study. What has it gotten from the Cuomo administration? A brave stance on mandatory life sentences. The Koch administration talks about locking up people with illegal guns. Senator D'Amato's crime program amounts to bring your own bodyguard, and Senator Moynihan muses about combining transit and city police.

What crime program?

No wonder a grand jury brushes away serious charges. No wonder the public supports the Goetz Anti-crime and Self-Defense Act of 1984. No wonder people applaud someone taking the law into his own hands. When it comes to initiatives, the hands of the law are empty.

[From the Daily News, April 4, 1985]

MORE COPS? THIS IDEA IS AMONG THE FINEST

The Bernhard Goetz affair has left everyone in New York unhappy. On the one hand, the laws are there, and we need to enforce them. Indeed, we may be looking squarely at the old law that tells you that the best way to modify an unsatisfactory law is to enforce it.

The unsatisfactory law we speak of has to do with pistol licenses. We know that criminals in New York feel no inhibition about carrying handguns. They do so all the time, and use them with panache. Bernhard Goetz applied for a license after being mugged and after witnessing other muggings, was denied his application, purchased a gun anyway—as anyone apparently can do with about the same difficulty one has in purchasing an illegal toke of marijuana—and then used it against four aggressors armed with sharpened screwdrivers and police records.

And yet—and yet, the law is there, and prosecutors are bound by oaths of office. So where do we go from here? Surely it is time to reexamine the proposal of Adam Walinsky, a proposal now several years old: a college ROTC for cops. Here are the pieces in the jigsaw:

1. In 1982, 7 million calls were made on the police emergency line, 911. Policemen were available to act on only 3 million of those 7 million calls. That means statistically that if a burglar or rapist is breaking into your apartment and you call the police, you have less than a 50-50 chance that a cop will be available to help you.

The figures are all the more intimidating when you note that most crimes take place in circumstances in which there is no opportunity to use the telephone. They don't have phones in the parks, or in the middle of a street, or in subway cars. And these are the favorite beats of the criminal.

2. In 1951, New York had 19,000 policemen and 15,812 instances of violent crime. Thirty years later New York had 22,000 policemen and 157,026 violent crimes. One thousand per cent more crime, 15% more cops. The odds overwhelmingly favor the criminal.

Is the solution as simple as hiring more policemen? Sure. By the same reasoning, the solution is as simple as everyone hiring a private bodyguard. There is the slight matter of cost. A rookie cop costs the city $50,000 a year.

3. Enrollment in primary and secondary schools has dropped in New York State by 500,000 pupils, the baby boom having been processed. There are unused facilities in the state colleges. And this has brought on the inevitable: higher costs of higher education, as fewer students are required to put up the money to finance existing educational facilities.

Enter Mr. Walinsky, a former think-tanker for Bobby Kennedy, now associated with such conservatives as Lewis Lehrman. His plan: Let the state provide four years of college for needy students in exchange for their pledges to repay the state by contributing three years' service to the police corps.

The principle is like that of the ROTC, or even West Point and Annapolis. You get free education and you pay back your benefactor by giving service at less than market price for a stipulated period of time.

Mr. Walinsky estimates that the City of New York, which would inherit 70% of the 30,000 cops trained every year under the proposed system, would need to pay only $20,000 a year per cop inasmuch as there would be no retirement commissions or other costly perquisites. The idea is to put these cops, well-motivated and well-trained, on the street, there, by their presence, to discourage criminals.

The plan was opposed two years ago by uninventive types who complained about the difficulty in keeping the graduates in uniform in the event they thought better of it and decided not to serve. Walinsky's answer: They would then be required to repay the state the cost of their education, so what is the net loss from the defaulters?

Some police officials don't like the proposal because they smell elitism in the air, to which Walinsky responds that the whole police corps would benefit from the infusion of young, educated students, many of them black or Hispanic. Moreover, the relatively brief careers spent as policemen would not mean long-range competition for the better jobs. Indeed, the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association has not disapproved of Walinsky's idea.

Perhaps the Goetz dilemma will act as the solvent. Indeed, perhaps the Walinsky corps members will be referred to as Goetzmen.

By Mr. SPECTER (for himself, Mr. PELL, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. BRADLEY):

S. 1525. A bill to amend the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 to provide grants to local educational agencies for dropout prevention demonstration projects; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

DROPOUT PREVENTION AND REENTRY ACT

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which will enable the elementary and secondary schools in our Nation to combat the problem of school dropouts.

The problem of school dropouts has reached an alarming level in this country. Some estimates indicate that around a million children drop out of school each year, and more than a quarter of our Nation's children never graduate.

In Pennsylvania the most recent statistics available from the Department of Education, 1981-82, show a total enrollment of 955,648 students in grades 7 to 12. The dropout rate was 2.8 percent or 26,960 youngsters.

Figures for the Philadelphia Public Schools indicate that during the 1983-84 school year 90,639 students between the ages of 14 and 20 were enrolled in school, in grades 7 to 12. Of this total, 7,996 children or 8.8 percent of the total number dropped out.

A breakdown of these figures show that the black/white dropout rate was more than 2 to 1, closely corresponding to their overall enrollment in school. Nevertheless, the percentage of blacks who dropped out—8.7 percent—was only 0.4 percentage points higher than whites, who had an 8.3 percent dropout rate. Hispanics dropped out at a rate of 11.9 percent, although the actual number was only 856, as compared to 2,008 for whites, and 4,592 for blacks.

As chairman of the District of Columbia Appropriations Subcommittee, I addressed the problems of dropouts and truancy in the fiscal year 1985 District of Columbia appropriations bill by providing $1.5 million for programs to combat the D.C. problem. District officials estimate the dropout rate to be 17 percent.

My legislation, the Dropout Prevention and Reentry Act of 1985, seeks to reduce the number of children who do not complete their elementary and secondary education by providing funds to local educational agencies to establish and demonstrate:

First, effective programs to identify potential dropouts and prevent them from dropping out.

Second, effective programs to identify and encourage children who have already dropped out to reenter school and complete their elementary and secondary education.

Third, model systems for collecting and reporting informaiton to local school officials on the number, ages, and grade levels of the children not completing their elementary and secondary education and the reasons why such children have dropped out of school.

Fifty million dollars is authorized to be appropriated for dropout prevention programs in fiscal year 1987.

Applications submitted to the Department of Edcuation for grants under this title must include a plan for the development and implementation of a project which will address the special needs of pregnant minors and school-age parents. In addition, the plan must establish an advisory council which is broadly representative of the entire community and the dropout population to be served.

Another eligible use of funds is the establishment or expansion of work-study, apprentice, or intern programs. This will encourage young people to stay in school who might otherwise drop out for financial reasons.

Students who do not attend school cannot be prepared academically to assume their community and family responsibilities as adults or to obtain employment. Young people who drop out of school and who are unsupervised are high risk for delinquency and activities such as drug and alcohol abuse and teenage pregnancies.

In an increasingly technological, information-oriented society, the future for dropouts is less than bleak.

Dropouts who are fortunate find their way to dead-end jobs. The unfortunate ones often find their way to jail.

The dropout prevention and Reentry Act of 1985 can help determine whether many children graduate from high school and have acces to further education or employment opportunities, or whether they will join the growing number of persons who are shut out of the mainstream of job opportunities.

Working together, we can wage a successful battle against this national problem.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1525

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended by redesignating title X as title XI, by redesignating the sections of such title as sections 1101 to 1106, and by inserting the following new title after title IX:

"TITLE X—THE DROPOUT PREVENTION AND REENTRY ACT OF 1985

"SEC. 1001. SHORT TITLE.

"This title may be cited as the 'Dropout Prevention and Reentry Act of 1985'.

"SEC. 1002. PURPOSE.

"The purpose of this title is to reduce the number of children who do not complete their elementary and secondary education by providing grants to local educational agencies to establish and demonstrate—

"(1) effective programs to identify potential dropouts and prevent them from dropping out;

"(2) effective programs to identify and encourage children who have already dropped out to reenter school and complete their elementary and secondary education; and

"(3) model systems for collecting and reporting information to local school officials on the number, ages, and grade levels of the children not completing their elementary and secondary education and the reasons why such children have dropped out of school.

"SEC. 1003. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this title $50,000,000 for fiscal year 1987 and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1988, 1989, and 1990.

"SEC. 1004. GRANTS TO LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.

"(a) ALLOTMENT TO CATEGORIES OF LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.—From the amount appropriated under section 1003 for any fiscal year, the Secretary shall allot 20 percent to each of the following categories of local educational agencies:

"(1) Local educational agencies containing schools with an enrollment of 250,000 or more elementary and secondary school students.

"(2) Local educational agencies containing schools with an enrollment of at least 100,000 but fewer than 250,000 such students.

"(3) Local educational agencies containing schools with an enrollment of at least 50,000 but fewer than 100,000 such students.

"(4) Local educational agencies containing schools with an enrollment of at least 20,000 but fewer than 50,000 such students.

"(5) Local educational agencies containing schools with an enrollment of fewer than 20,000 such students.

"(b) AWARD OF GRANT.—From the amount allotted for any fiscal year to a category of local educational agencies under subsection (a), the Secretary shall award as many grants as practicable within each such category to local educational agencies whose applications have been approved by the Secretary for such fiscal year under section 1005 and whose applications propose a program of sufficient size and scope to be of value as a demonstration. The grants shall be made under such terms and conditions as the Secretary shall prescribe.

"(c) MAXIMUM NUMBER OF GRANTS.—A local educational agency may receive no more than one grant in each of three fiscal years under this title.

"(d) AMOUNT.—The amount of a grant awarded under this section to a local educational agency for any fiscal year, to the extent practicable, shall be proportionate to the extent and severity of the local dropout problem, except that the amount of the grant shall not exceed 90 percent of the total cost of a project during the project's first fiscal year, 80 percent of such cost during the project's second fiscal year, and 70 percent of such cost during the project's third fiscal year.

"SEC. 1005. APPLICATION.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—A grant under this title may be made only to a local educational agency which submits an application to the Secretary containing such information as may be required by the Secretary by regulation. Such application shall—

"(1) provide documentation of (A) the number of children formerly enrolled in the applicant's schools who have not completed their elementary or secondary education, and (B) the percentage that such number of children is of the total school-age population in the applicant's schools;

"(2) include a plan for the development and implementation of a dropout information collection and reporting system for documenting the extent and nature of the dropout problem, in accordance with standards established by the national school dropout study under section 1008;

"(3) include a plan for the development and implementation of a project which will—

"(A) implement comprehensive identification, prevention, outreach, and reentry programs for dropouts and potential dropouts,

"(B) address the special needs of pregnant minors and school-age parents,

"(C) disseminate information to students, parents, and the community related to the dropout problem,

"(D) include coordinated activities involving at least one high school and its feeder junior or middle schools and elementary schools for those local educational agencies having such feeder systems,

"(E) establish annual procedures for (i) evaluating the effectiveness of the project, and (ii) where possible, determining the cost-effectiveness of the particular dropout prevention and reentry methods used and the potential for reproducing such methods in other areas of the country,

"(F) establish an advisory council which is broadly representative of the entire community and the dropout populations to be served, and

"(G) use the resources of the community and parents to help develop and implement solutions to the local dropout problem; and

"(4) contain such other information as the Secretary considers necessary to determine the nature of the local needs, the quality of the proposed project, and the capability of the applicant to carry out the project.

"(b) SPECIAL CONSIDERATIONS.—For the purpose of approving applications under this section, the Secretary shall give first priority within each category under section 1004(a) to applicants that have either very high numbers or very high percentages of school dropouts.

"(C) REVIEW OF PROJECTS.—In any application from a local educational agency for a grant to continue a project for the second or third fiscal year following the first fiscal year in which a grant was awarded to such local educational agency, the Secretary shall review the progress being made toward meeting the ojectives of the project. The Secretary may refuse to award a grant if he finds that sufficient progress has not been made toward meeting such objectives, but only after affording the applicant notice and an opportunity for a hearing.

"SEC. 1006. AUTHORIZED ACTIVITIES.

"Grants under this title shall be used to carry out plans in applications approved under section 1005. In addition, grants may be used for the following activities:

"(1) to establish systemwide or school-level policies, procedures, and plans for dropout prevention and school reentry;

"(2) to provide guidance and counseling services, including peer interaction activities;

"(3) to provide ombudsman or mentor services;

"(4) to develop and implement activities, including extended day or summer programs, to address poor achievement, language deficiencies, or course failures, in order to assist students at risk of dropping out of school and students reentering school;

"(5) to establish or expand work-study, apprentice, or internship programs;

"(6) to use the resources of the community, including contracting with public or private entities or community-based organizations, to provide services to the grant recipient or the target population;

"(7) to evaluate and revise program placement of students at risk;

"(8) to review curriculum relevancy;

"(9) to implement activities which will improve student motivation and the school learning environment;

"(10) to provide training for school staff on strategies and techniques to identify children at risk of dropping out, to intervene in the instructional program with support and remedial services, to develop realistic expectations for student performance, and to improve student-staff interactions; and

"(11) to provide other services and implement other activities which directly relate to the purpose of this title.

"SEC. 1007. PROGRAM LIMITATIONS.

"Not less than 30 percent of each grant shall be used for activities related to dropout prevention, and not less than 30 percent of each grant shall be used for activities related to persuading dropouts to return to school and assisting former dropouts with specialized services once they return to school.

"SEC. 1008. NATIONAL SCHOOL DROPOUT STUDY.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—From amounts appropriated to the Secretary for fiscal year 1986, the Secretary shall use not more than $500,000 to conduct a one-year study of the nature and extent of the dropout problem in the United States. In conducting the study, the Secretary shall—

"(1) establish a standard definition of a school dropout;

"(2) develop a standard list of reason why children are dropping out of school, including major factors that contribute to children dropping out;

"(3) develop a model dropout information collection and reporting system;

"(4) develop minimum reporting system requirements;

"(5) identify the numbers of children and the general reasons for their dropping out of school among population groups with particularly high dropout rates;

"(6) identify the characteristics of children who appear to be at risk of dropping out of school;

"(7) identify the factors or policies which may attract children who have dropped out to reenter school and complete their elementary and secondary education;

"(8) identify methods and techniques being used successfully to reduce the number of school dropouts; and

"(9) provide recommendations for activities and policies which can be implemented at each level of government and in communities to ameliorate the dropout problem.

"(b) OTHER REQUIREMENTS.—Recipients of grants under this title shall cooperate with the Secretary in carrying out the study under subsection (a) by providing data and information on the nature and extent of the dropout problem and the effectiveness of techniques used to address the problem.

"SEC. 1009. GENERAL PROVISIONS.

"(a) WITHHOLDING PAYMENTS.—Whenever the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing to any local educational agency, finds that the local educational agency has failed to comply substantially with the provisions set forth in its application approved under section 1005, the Secretary shall withhold payments under this title until the Secretary is satisfied that there is no longer any failure to comply.

"(b) ANNUAL REPORT.—The Secretary shall prepare and submit to Congress an annual report on January 1 on the activities assisted under this title during the preceding fiscal year.

"(c) AUDIT.—The Comptroller General shall have access for the purpose of audit and examination to any books, documents, papers, and records of any local educational agency receiving assistance under this title that are pertinent to the sums received and disbursed under this title.

"(d) GRANTS MUST SUPPLEMENT OTHER FUNDS.—A local educational agency receiving funds under this title shall use the Federal funds only to supplement the funds that would, in the absence of such Federal funds, be made available from non-Federal sources for activities to prevent students from dropping out of elementary and secondary school and to persuade dropouts to reenter school and complete their education.

"SEC. 1010. DEFINITIONS.

"As used in this title—

"(1) the term 'community-based organization' means a private nonprofit organization which is representative of a community or significant segments of a community and which provides educational or related services to individuals in the community;

"(2) the term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Education; and

"(3) the terms 'State educational agency', 'local educational agency', 'elementary school', and 'secondary school' have the same meanings given those terms in section 198 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 3381).".

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am pleased to be joining my colleagues, Senators SPECTER, CHAFEE, STAFFORD, KENNEDY, DODD, and BRADLEY in the introduction of the Dropout Prevention and Reentry Act of 1985. To my mind, this legislation is long overdue. The high school dropout problem is of serious proportions and devastating consequences. It is estimated that, on the average, 25 percent of students entering school in the ninth grade drop out of school before graduating. In my own State of Rhode Island, the dropout rate is 24.8 percent. Frighteningly, these rates have remained relatively steady over the past 20 years. Quite simply, these statistics indicate that we are failing to reach and educate close to one-quarter of our high school population. This situation is unconscionable in a nation which claims to be the most highly educated in the world. It is shameful that this country, which rests squarely on the principle of educational opportunity, has allowed this situation to continue at such a high rate for two decades.

The high school dropout problem is of serious national concern, with very severe economic and social ramifications. While the average dropout rate is 25 percent, in some States it is as high as 40 percent. In many urban areas, it is close to 50 percent. The problem is far more threatening for minority populations. Black students are almost twice as likely to drop out as are white students, and in many urban schools, hispanic students drop out at a rate of 70 percent.

Teenagers from families at the lower end of the economic ladder comprise the majority of high school dropouts. Sadly, the propensity of this population to leave school only serves to entrench the cycle of poverty these families have endured for generations. Without basic skills, these high school dropouts have scant chance of achieving even a very minimum standard of living.

One of the proudest achievements of this Nation is its strong conviction that each American be given the opportunity to reach to the limits of his or her potential, regardless of economic, language, or physical handicap. Enactment of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, in which I was proud to have played a role, provided a legislative basis for the thought that only through education could the dream of breaking the economic barriers to success be accomplished. It is shocking to realize that we have failed to make this dream a reality for close to one-quarter of our children. As a social worker in New York so aptly stated: "The poor in America have only one legal option to escape poverty and the problems associated with being poor. That option is education."

The effect of having large numbers of students leaving school has a devastating impact on the economic sector. Dropouts fill the welfare and unemployment rolls. Many of them turn to crime. Those who do gain employment frequently have to be trained in basic skills. In the military, there are massive programs of remedial education and basic skills instruction that are integral parts of basic training.

The greatest single contributor to youth unemployment is the lack of a high school degree. According to the National Center for Education Statistics, 36 percent of high school dropouts were unemployed, compared to 21 percent of high school graduates not enrolled in college. Men and women 25 years old and older who did not complete high school earned about one-third less than those who had graduated.

Youth unemployment also imposes severe penalties on the economy. The city of New York estimated the yearly costs per 1,000 unemployed youth at almost $12 million in a loss in productivity, $63,000 in ungenerated income tax, $250,000 in ungenerated sales tax, and $300,000 in total tax loss. The State of Michigan estimates that the cost of youth unemployment is $100 million annually.

With respect to remedial training, business and industry currently spend $40 billion annually to train employees. Most of this training involves remedial work in reading, mathematics, and other basic skills. The Defense Department allocated close to $100 million over the past 6 years solely for basic skills training and remedial education for new recruits. In fact, in education and training, the Department of Defense annually spends as much as the entire Department of Education, some $18 billion.

The dropout rate, furthermore, forces us to pay a heavy price in the area of incarceration and crime. Without skills, and unemployed, many dropouts drift into delinquency and serious crimes. The U.S. Department of Justice, for example, found that the majority of inmates in local jails lacked a high school diploma—about 59 percent of white inmates, and 63 percent of black inmates. Estimates are that we spend over $15,000 per year to house each inmate in a correctional facility. This amount exceeds the cost of education for 1 year at either Harvard or Yale. In fact, on the average, this country spends 2½ times as much money on keeping a person incarcerated than on sending a young man or woman to college.

It is sadly true that what we fail to invest in dropout prevention, we will eventually be forced to pay many times over in social costs. This includes the heavy prices of incarceration, unemployment and welfare assistance, and a sharp loss in productivity and generated taxes. We cannot afford as a nation to continue to ignore this problem. In the words of the President's Commission on Industrial Competitiveness:

> If the dropout rate continues to accelerate, part of an entire generation could be lost to the productive process and to society. The quality of life for the Nation as a whole is at risk when large numbers of our youth fall by the wayside.

The Dropout Prevention and Reentry Act we are introducing today will provide Federal direction and assistance to address this need. It authorizes $50 million in fiscal year 1987 and such sums through fiscal year 1990 to fund demonstration projects and exemplary programs.

Under this legislation, the Secretary of Education is directed to make grants to local educational agencies to fund programs which will attack the problem on two fronts. Programs must address the need both to prevent students from dropping out, and to encourage them to reenter and finish high school if they have left. The Secretary is directed to award grants to LEA's according to population: 20 percent to LEA's with an enrollment of 250,000 or more; 20 percent to LEA's with an enrollment between 100,000 and 250,000; 20 percent to LEA's with an enrollment between 50,000 and 100,000; 20 percent to LEA's with an enrollment between 20,000 and 50,000; and 20 percent to LEA's with an enrollment less than 20,000. This will ensure that we attack this problem on all fronts through action in school districts of all sizes.

One of the most critical elements of this legislation is a provision that $500,000 be allocated in the first year to conduct a study to identify the dropout population, the factors contributing to dropping out, and effective methods for successfully reducing this rate. Unfortunately, considering its magnitude, far too little is known about this problem. Identification alone of the numbers of dropouts on a State-by-State basis is hard to come by. For example, the National Center for Education Statistics can only give us a rough estimate of dropout numbers. It calculates the dropout rate as the difference between the total number of high school graduates and the number of public school students enrolled in the ninth grade 4 years previously. Beyond that, we need far more accurate information on the reasons for dropping out so that we may better meet the needs of differing dropout populations.

The reasons behind dropping out are many: family circumstances, pregnancy, drugs, low self-esteem, economic necessity, language barriers, physical and mental handicaps. Because these factors must be approached differently, we have fashioned this legislation to provide for maximum flexibility in program design. We are hopeful that it will encourage creative approaches toward solving this problem. We further envision that projects funded under this act will be viewed as pilot efforts, the most successful of which might serve as models for more comprehensive programs.

In the past, the limited Federal efforts in this area have been extremely effective. Between 1969 and 1976, under title VIII of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, Congress authorized grants to LEA's for demonstration projects for dropout prevention. Although appropriation levels never reached more than $4 million, the program was highly successful. The U.S. Office of Education reported that of the 10 projects which were originally funded, there had been a 45-percent reduction in the number of dropouts over a 3-year period.

Five years ago, we considered at length the Youth Act of 1980. One of the major objectives of that legislation was to provide unemployed dropouts with training and assistance that would improve their prospects for employment. Unfortunately, that bill was not passed by the full Senate.

I am very encouraged that we are once again focusing our attention on this issue. The time is opportune for initiating new Federal leadership in the area of dropout prevention and assistance. We begin today by introducing modest legislation that will immediately address the problem at hand.

To my mind, we have a clear choice at this time as to whether we as a Nation will uphold our commitment to educational opportunity, or whether we will continue to ignore the needs of a quarter of our high school population. Quite simply, we have a choice as to whether we will invest prudently in programs that will see these students through high school, or whether we will be forced to pay a social cost many times more expensive in later years.

Mr. President, I am very encouraged that Senator STAFFORD, the esteemed chairman of our Senate Education Subcommittee, has already agreed to a hearing on October 17 to address this very serious problem. I look forward to that hearing and to the additional information it will provide us in our deliberations.

To my mind, it is crucial that we move quickly to address this problem and to end a situation that has been with us for far too long. Very simply, we cannot afford in both economic and human terms to allow this very grave problem to continue undeterred. I commend the legislation we are introducing today to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle and urge them to join us in cosponsoring this very important bill.

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am pleased today to join my colleagues, Senators SPECTER, PELL, STAFFORD, KENNEDY, DODD, and BRADLEY, in introducing the Dropout Prevention and Reentry Act of 1985. This measure will provide grants to local educational agencies for dropout prevention demonstration projects, and fund a national school dropout study to obtain more data on this deeply troubling problem.

In the last few years observers of the American educational system have made a great many disturbing conclusions on the state of our Nation's public schools. A number of extensive studies have called for more rigorous academic standards, modernization of curriculums, and improvement in the quality of teaching. This overdue reassessment of the quality of education has engendered a reform movement that promises to return high standards to our Nation's classrooms.

Largely overlooked in this drive for renewed excellence and rigor in public education are the millions of students who drop out of school each year. These are students for whom more demanding requirements and reform measures such as minimum competency tests are irrelevant. Alienated by the school environment, and often burdened with family problems and poverty, America's dropouts are falling through the cracks of our educational system in appalling numbers.

Roughly 1 in 4 of the students who enter U.S. high schools do not finish. In Providence, RI, the figure has been estimated at 40 percent. In some urban areas, particularly among minorities and the poor, the dropout rate exceeds 50 percent.

Dropouts disappear from high school corridors, but they do not disappear from society. Rather, their names show up on the welfare rolls, they become drug abuse statistics, or they wind up in our overcrowded prison system. In the majority of cases the results are tragic, both for the dropouts themselves and for the society to which most of them are unable to make a real contribution. The visible products of the dropout exodus are lives spent on the margin of society, with our social welfare system or our penal institutions incurring the monetary costs.

As anyone who has closely examined the issue knows, there is no simple way to keep our young people in school. Every dropout has a different set of reasons for leaving school, and many will never succeed in the traditional curricular structure. This measure does not purport to be a complete solution, but it does set forth a number of actions that American schools can take today to begin fighting the dropout problem. Under this measure, schools can begin to: locate dropouts and develop ways of drawing them back into the system; identify potential dropouts by recognizing early warning signs; explore the reasons why students drop out and use counseling and remedial help to encourage them to stay in school; offer alternative educational opportunities including vocational training; and establish a dissemination network for information on dropout prevention.

The legislation my colleagues and I are introducing today will provide funding, on a competitive-grant basis, for local educational agencies to establish demonstration projects involving these kinds of actions. The project must only reach dropouts and assist them in completing their education, but also identify students who are likely to become dropouts and work to prevent their leaving school.

Since future dropouts are often identifiable well before they enter the ninth grade, these programs must also develop ways to coordinate dropout prevention efforts between the high school and the junior high levels. Projects funded under this act will address the special needs of high school-age parents, who are high-risk candidates for dropping out. In addition, grantees must disseminate any valuable information they obtain from the projects to other educational agencies dealing with the dropout problem.

Despite the gravity of this problem, there is a dearth of information on exactly who is dropping out, what kinds of schools they are leaving, and what has caused them to leave the system. For this reason, our bill also calls for a national school dropout study to be conducted while the demonstration projects are underway. The projects will indicate which methods are most successful in helping dropouts and potential dropouts, while the national study determines where we should concentrate future efforts in this area.

In the face of the shocking dropout rates currently plaguing school systems in every part of the Nation, a reversal of the dropout tide will grow only out of bold, original approaches devised by the educators who are closest to the problem. This act represents a vital step in helping our schools to meet this challenge, and will produce information valuable to education agencies all over the United States. The demonstration projects and the national study will help us determine how to proceed in cutting the dropout rate. They will save many students from the bleak prospect of leaving their education behind for a future of limited possibilities and dead ends. I hope that our colleagues will support this urgently needed initiative.●

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am proud to join my colleagues Senator SPECTER, Senator CHAFEE, Senator PELL and others in introducing the Dropout Prevention and Reentry Act of 1985. I commend my colleagues for their hard work in developing this important legislation.

This is not the first time that Congress and the Federal Government has attempted to address the critical problem of students dropping out of school. In 1968, we provided financial assistance through the then U.S. Office of Education to a small number of school districts for the express purpose of preventing students from dropping out. Projects supported by this aid represented a wide variety of approaches to dealing with this problem and it was found that most projects were effective in reducing the dropout rate. Of the 10 orignally funded projects, it was reported that there had been a 45-percent reduction in the number of dropouts in these school districts over a 3-year period. Better attendance rates were also reported. This authority is now included as an optional State activity under the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act and there is limited information on whether States have elected to develop dropout programs with this money.

We have not made much progress in reducing the number of students who drop out of school. Presently our national dropout rate is close to 26 percent. This means that one in every four young Americans entering high school does not graduate on time, or does not graduate at all. The dropout problem is more severe in big cities with a rate of 16 percent above the national average and, the dropout problem is dramatically higher for minorities. Almost 20 percent of black youth and 33 percent of Hispanics are dropping out today as opposed to 14 percent of white students.

We know that this problem exists and we know that it will not disappear on its own. The consequences of leaving school early are most times devasting for the students and for their future. These young people lose access to good jobs, reduce the amount of their lifetime earnings and risk experiencing more and longer periods of unemployment in their lifetime. These students, by dropping out, are limiting their chances and opportunities to reach their fullest potential.

The bill we are introducing today will begin to address the dropout problem by providing local education agencies with grants to develop demonstration programs to identify and prevent student from dropping out, encourage students who have dropped out to reenter and complete high school, and to establish model reporting and data collection systems on students who have dropped out. As well, this bill calls on the Secretary of Education to conduct a 1-year study on the nature and extent of the dropout problem in the country and to develop a standard definition and list of reasons why children are dropping out of school. I believe that the development of standards in this area is important and it is my hope that the individuals who will be involved in this study and the development of these standards will be representative of a wide range of individuals who have expertise in the area of school dropouts. I would like to address this issue when the bill comes before the committee.

The United States has become a great nation because of the contributions of each individual citizen. Our country cannot move forward without support and assistance from every American. It is our Nation's responsibility to guarantee that each individual has an opportunity to reach his or her fullest potential and education is the most important path to reaching that potential. The students who are dropping out today are dropping out for many reasons. We must identify the causes and begin to provide the solutions. The answers are complex and many times as different as each individual student. But, I believe that we have the resources and the ability to help these young people to complete their education. This is a small investment now which will undoubtedly reap untold benefits for these students as they grow into adults and for the future of our country.●

● Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues, Senator SPECTER, Senator PELL, Senator CHAFEE, Senator STAFFORD, Senator KENNEDY, and Senator DODD in introducing the Dropout Prevention and Reentry Act. A year ago January, as a member of the Senate Children's Caucus, I participated in a forum on the causes and consequences of dropping out of school. We held the hearing to highlight the seriousness of the problem, both with respect to the increasing numbers of students dropping out and the long-term social and economic consequences of these decisions.

If our Nation's secondary schools were businesses that depended on repeat customers, many would soon go bankrupt. The proportion of students who begin, but fail to complete, high school is distressing, particularly in inner-city schools. In 1983 nearly 28 percent of all 18- and 19-year-olds failed to graduate from high school. The attrition rate has risen by 19 percent over the last decade. In my home State of New Jersey, over 16,000 youths dropped out of school last year. In many urban schools the dropout rate is above 50 percent, and that does not include students who are officially enrolled in school but attend irregularly.

The consequences of dropping out for the individual student, and the costs to this Nation, are well known. Nearly 4 out of every 10 16- to 24-year-olds who have dropped out of school are unemployed. Nearly 50 percent of all young females who drop out are unemployed. A recent study conducted by the Educational Testing Service in New Jersey found that students completing high school scored substantially higher on a series of tests measuring abilities linked to good job performance than did those dropping out after junior high or early in high school. It is quite clear that those who fail to complete high school will lack the basic skills necessary to function in an increasingly complex and demanding world.

Students who drop out do so for a variety of reasons. Most report reasons related to school performance. Many students simply lack the basic skills necessary to keep up and see no hope of catching up. Right or wrong, they see dropping out as preferable to the humiliation experienced in classes where their lack of basic skills makes keeping up impossible. Ironically, this problems may be exacerbated by the recent trend toward instituting tougher standards in our schools. It may turn out that low achievers—including a disroportionate number of inner city youths—are not swept up and carried to new heights by the educational reform movement, but are pushed over the edge by it. A recent report by the Johns Hopkins Center for Social Organization of the Schools suggests that this may already be occurring. This does not argue for lower standards; it does call for special attention to make sure more students keep up with required skill levels.

Other students leave school early to take jobs in order to help their families make ends meet. These students often find themselves working in low-paying positions with little or no opportunity for advancement. Students who leave school for this reason frequently regret that decision shortly thereafter. Many young girls leave school early because they become pregnant. Some feel so stigmatized and embarrassed that they leave school rather than subject themselves to ridicule and scorn from their classmates and instructors. Others find themselves forced into second-class "special" programs which meet neither their educational nor emotional needs and, thus, see dropping out as an attractive option. Other students leave school before graduating because they simply are not challenged in traditional classroom situations. I was disturbed to learn, during a children's caucus forum on gifted and talented children, that a high percentage of gifted children fail to complete high school.

High school dropouts are not simply children who were destined to fail. These children can be reached, and I believe we must reach out to those who are on the verge of giving up or have given up and offer them a second chance to master the skills they need if they are to become self-sufficient members of our society. Earlier this year I introduced legislation designed to assist in this task—the Secondary School Basic Skills Act. That bill would authorize funds necessary to teach basic skills to educationally disadvantaged secondary school students—precisely those students who, without a mastery of basic skills, may be driven out of the educational system by tougher academic standards.

Today I am pleased to join my colleagues in offering another bill designed to reach out to those who would give up or have given up. The Dropout Prevention and Reentry Act would authorize funds to allow schools to establish demonstration projects to identify potential dropouts, to find ways to prevent dropping out, and to help dropouts reenter schools. Special attention is to be devoted to the needs of pregnant students and students with children. Schools with a good idea can apply for grants and test those ideas. Successful prevention and reentry programs would be disseminated. The bill would also authorize a 1-year study of the nature and extent of the dropout problem. The study would attempt to identify successful methods in ongoing programs designed to prevent dropouts or encourage their return to school.

Mr. President, we can succeed in this task. I recently became aware of an excellent program in Seattle, WA, designed to assist dropouts in completing their educations. The organization, Educational Clinics, Inc., is a company certified by the Washington State Board of Education to offer an educational program in basic skills areas to students who have severed their ties with the school system and are unlikely to reestablish them. The program is a model of what can be accomplished when we reach out to youths and treat them as individuals with unique strengths as well as problems. The Dropout Prevention and Reentry Act would assist us in learning more about successful existing programs such as ECI and would provide the means to fund other innovative programs for addressing the needs of actual and potential dropouts.

In our pursuit of excellence in education, we must be careful not to leave behind those students who, for whatever reasons, struggle and fall behind their classmates and choose to leave school. We must commit ourselves to the belief that every student can excel, regardless of past failures, regardless of deeply entrenched and deeply deficient study habits, regardless of the educational background of his or her parents. This bill is designed to help young people be the best they can be. I urge my colleagues to support this important and timely legislation.●

By Mr. MATHIAS:

S. 1526. A bill to amend title 17, United States Code, to clarify the definition of the local service area of a primary transmitter in the case of a low power television station; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LOW POWER TELEVISION

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, today I am introducing a technical amendment to the Copyright Act to clarify the status of a new communications technology that has great appeal in rural areas—low power television. My amendment will allow nearby cable television systems to carry low power television signals as local broadcasts, just as they do for other local television signals, rather than as remote, or distant signals, for which the copyright laws now require cable operators to pay royalties. This clarification is, as far as I know, a noncontroversial change in the law. It is supported by the Copyright Office, which helped in its drafting, and it is unopposed by any affected parties in the private sector. Representative KASTENMEIER, chairman of the Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties and the Administration of Justice of the House Judiciary Committee, is introducing and identical measure in the House today. I commend his initiative and leadership in this issue.

To give a fuller idea of the background of this effort, I submit the correspondence Representative KASTENMEIER and I had with the Copyright Office last year on the subject. I ask unanimous consent that these letters, along with the text of the amendments, be printed in the RECORD following these remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1526

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the fourth paragraph of section 111(f) of title 17, United States Code, relating to the definition of local service area of a primary transmitter, is amended by adding after the first sentence the following new sentence: "In the case of a low power television station, as defined by the rules and regulations of the Federal Communications Commission, the local service area of a primary transmitter comprises the area within 35 miles of the transmitter site, except that in the case of such a station located in a standard metropolitan statistical area which has one of the 50 largest populations of all standard metropolitan statistical areas (based on the 1980 decennial census of population taken by the Secretary of Commerce), the number of miles shall be 20 miles.".

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC, October 1, 1984.

Hon. DAVID LADD,
Register of Copyrights, Copyright Office, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. LADD: We are writing to you in reference to provisions of section 111 of the Copyright Act and its potential effect on the carriage by cable systems of local signals of low power television. As you know, provisions of section 111 which define and distinguish "local" carriage and "distant" carriage were considered by Congress and the rules formulated prior to the introduction of low power service by the Federal Communications Commission. The distinction between "distant" and "local" is important because in most instances the royalty is computed on the basis of distant carriage.

It is our understanding that the Copyright Office may feel constrained by certain language in section 111 to classify the cable carriage of purely local low power television station signals as "distant" signals due to the fact that the Office might conclude that a signal must be subject to the FCC's must-carry rules before it could be considered local. This conclusion, of course, would result in carriage of these signals generating the same copyright liability as if they were "distant," thereby subjecting cable systems to the payment of significant royalties. Under such circumstances, we are informed that cable systems would be very reluctant to include low power stations within their complement of local services on a "may-carry" basis, which in turn would seriously damage the development and viability of low power television.

During the time that Congress was considering how section 111 should operate, all local television signals were subject to must-carry treatment and inclusion into the statute of a reference to FCC must-carry rules merely provided a convenient way to establish a clear dividing line between the "local" signals and the "distant" signals. The recent introduction of may-carry local low power signals was not contemplated at the time of passage of the Copyright Act of 1976, but Congress' intention was clear in wanting to distinguish between signals that were truly local and others that would be classified as distant. This was made manifest when, during consideration by the House of the Senate-passed bill, an amendment was added to mandate royalities for the carriage of signals when they were carried beyond the local coverage area of the station. Congress concluded that there would be no harm to copyright holders from such local carriage.

At a time in the near future, we intend to ensure that any ambiguity in the law is clarified by a technical amendment. Unfortunately, with a crowded legislative calendar and only a few days left in the 98th Congress, such an amendment is unlikely to occur this year. We believe, however, that an interim indication from the Copyright Office resolving any ambiguities in a manner to effectuate original intent can serve as a temporary solution to the problem.

Such an effort by the Copyright Office to resolve this problem will have our wholehearted support. It will also be supported by the Honorable Majority Leader Jim Wright and Senator Lloyd Bentsen, who have expressed personal interest in this issue.

Accordingly, we request you to consider the questions raised by this letter, and ask that you keep us apprised of your progress and any problems that might arise. If there is any way that we or our staffs can assist in this endeavor, please let us know.

In advance, thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,

ROBERT W. KASTENMEIER,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties and the Administration of Justice.

CHARLES MCC. MATHIAS, JR.
Chairman, Subcommittee on Patents, Copyrights and Trademarks.

NOVEMBER 29, 1984.

Hon. CHARLES McC. MATHIAS,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Patents, Copyrights and Trademarks, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MATHIAS: On October 1, 1984 you wrote to David Ladd, Register of Copyrights expressing certain views about the status of low power television (LPTV) signals under the cable compulsory license of 17 U.S.C. section 111. The Copyright Office held a public hearing on October 12, 1984 and received public comment through October 22, 1984. Your letter was made a part of the record of this proceeding.

The record discloses that owners of copyright, except for the National Association of Broadcasters, argued that under the Copyright Act definition of "local service area of a primary transmitter," the signal of an LPTV station must be classified as "distant" since the distinction between "local" and "distant" signals is frozen as of April 15, 1976 and LPTV stations have never been accorded "must-carry" status. Representatives of LPTV stations and cable system operators argued for a contrary interpretation of the Act. They argued that the Copyright Act's reference to the Federal Communications Commission's April 15, 1976 "must-carry" rules as the demarcation between "local" and "distant" signals was fundamentally based on geographic considerations, and the FCC's rules merely provided a convenient method of describing the geographic limits of local signals. Some members of the public advanced an alternative argument for classifying LPTV signals as "local." They asserted that LPTV stations should be viewed as "deregulated translator stations." Translator stations did exist an April 15, 1976 and were covered by the "must-carry" rules.

After reviewing the Copyright Act and its legislative history in connection with the divergent views expressed on the public record, including your letter of October 1, 1984, the Copyright Office has concluded that the status of low power television signals under the cable compulsory license is ambiguous. Accordingly, in examing cable Statements of Account, the Copyright Office will not question the determination by a cable system that a low power station's signal is "local" within an area approximating the normal coverage zone of such station.

A Notice of this policy decision was published in the Federal Register on November 28, 1984 at volume 49, pages 46829-31. A photocopy of the Notice is enclosed.

In your letter of October 1, 1984, you expressed the intention to clarify any ambiguity in the law by a technical amendment of the Copyright Act. The Copyright Office recommends such an amendment. We would be pleased to submit draft language, at your request.

Sincerely yours,

DOROTHY SCHRADER,
General Counsel.●

By Mr. STEVENS (for himself and Mr. ROTH):

S. 1527. A bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to establish a new retirement and disability plan for Federal employees, postal employees, and Members of Congress, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

CIVIL SERVICE PENSION REFORM ACT

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, today, I am introducing the Civil Service Pension Reform Act of 1985. Joining with me is the distinguished chairman of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, Senator ROTH. This bill establishes a new retirement program for the Federal Government. It is applicable to all Federal and postal employees and Members of Congress who began service after December 1983 and to any other employee who opts to join this plan.

Enactment of the Social Security Act Amendments of 1983 precipitated the need for a new Federal retirement program. Prior to the bill's enactment, Federal employees were not covered by Social Security but instead participated in the civil service retirement system or other related Federal retirement plans. The Social Security amendments brought Federal employees hired after December 1983, under the Social Security system, thus necessitating a change in the Federal retirement laws to coordinate the systems.

Later in 1983 another bill passed to alleviate the burden of dual contributions new Federal employees would have to pay once the Social Security amendments went into effect. This temporary reduction of retirement contributions will expire upon the enactment of a new Federal retirement program or January 1986, whichever is earlier. This legislation was enacted to provide time to design a well-thought-out and permanent new retirement program.

The plan, introduced today, consists of three tiers. The first tier is Social Security. The second is a defined benefit plan, similar to but less generous than the current retirement system. The third tier is an optional thrift plan accompanied by certain tax advantages.

It was our intention to design a plan that would parallel private sector plans where possible. This three-tier approach is very common in private industry.

Because of our desire to parallel private industry, the overall value and cost of this plan is approximately 17-percent less than the current system. This would put the plan on par with better than average private plans. The Government has a certain responsibility toward its own workers and to the rest of the Nation to design a model retirement plan which provides good benefits while restraining the cost. According to experts, the ideal retirement plan provides benefits that will maintain the standard of living of a career employee into retirement. This, in effect, means replacing a low-income worker's earnings at about 70 percent to 80 percent and a high-income worker around 60 percent. This plan accomplishes that task.

The plan is also designed with several classes of employees in mind, including short career workers, age 55 and 30-year workers and long career workers. The current retirement system primarily benefits the middle category of employees retiring at earliest eligibility. This plan offers greatest benefits to the long career worker but also provides retirement alternatives for employees seeking more flexibility. For example, under this plan employees could retire at 55 with 10 years of service, an option which may be particularly beneficial for female workers.

The current retirement program severely penalizes the employee who leaves prior to retirement eligibility. This individual may receive back his or her own retirement contributions at little or no interest or may leave the contributions in the system to receive a significantly diminished benefit as a result of intervening years of inflation. The new plan resolves two-thirds of this problem.

First, the Social Security benefit is almost fully portable. Second, upon separation from Government, an employee may withdraw his or her thrift plan account and roll it over into an IRA, thus never losing the value of that part of the plan. We feel it is important to remove obstacles from mobility in and out of the Federal sector. Both the Government and the private sector can benefit by increased mobility. By introducing portable retirement benefits into the Federal system, far more flexibility in transferring from the Federal and non-Federal sectors will ensue.

As mentioned previously the current retirement system provides very generous benefits for the age 55-60 retiree with 30 years of service. According to the Office of Personnel Management, more Federal employees retire at age 55 than at any other individual age. While prevailing practice in private industry permits retirement at age 55, private plans generally gear their benefit structures toward age 62 retirements. Therefore, an annuity receivable before age 62 is usually reduced by 2 percent to 6 percent for each year under 62. Not only does the cost of a retirement plan for earlier retirement rise dramatically, but for the purposes of the Federal Government the question must be asked, "Is it wise to retire workers with many years of experience who by and large will be reemployed in the private sector?" Our answer to that question is no. The best plan is to reward workers who make the Government a full career and to remove obstacles from employee mobility. The Government should not be burdened by excessive costs to reward those who continue in the national work force for another 10 years.

Thus, this plan provides retirement benefits to an age 55 employee with 30 years of service that are less generous than the current program. On the other hand, an employee who works until age 62 or beyond in this system will fare better than an employee who retires at the same age in the current program.

The most unique aspect of this plan is the third tier, a tax deferred thrift plan with options for private investment. For the first time, Federal employees will enjoy a program widely available in private industry. Voluntary employee contributions will be matched by their employing agencies and transferred to individual employee accounts with an investment board. This board will grant at least three general investment options for employees. Employees, once a year, will direct their moneys into one of these general investment categories. The contributions and their earnings are available to an employee upon retirement in the form of a lump sum or an annuity or may be rolled over into an employee's IRA upon separation from Government prior to retirement.

This new feature provides a host of benefits for employees. First, it involves employees in their own retirement planning. Employees will decide whether setting aside additional moneys and how much for retirement is desirable. Employees will also direct their investments to conform with their expected needs during retirement.

Second, it grants employees flexibility for career planning, knowing that the money can be rolled over into an IRA upon separation from Government. Third, private investments ensure employees have the widest possible choices for good investment returns. Fourth, employee contributions are tax deferred, thus alleviating the burden on disposable income by participating in the plan.

Mr. President, this plan is fairly complex and is the result of 4 years of work. I will ask a sectional analysis of the bill be inserted at the end of my remarks, but I first want to outline some additional rationale for various provisions of the bill.

As I mentioned previously, Social Security is the first tier. Everyone who participates in this plan will be covered by Social Security. The second tier is a defined benefit plan in which 1 percent of an employee's high 5 years of salary is multiplied by the employee's years of service. To receive an unreduced annuity an employee must be 62 with 5 years of service. Receipt of a reduced annuity, 2 percent for each year under age 62, is available to an employee at age 55 with 30 years of service, or 5 percent for each year under age 62 for an employee at age 55 with 10 years of service but less than 30.

Determination of the accrual rate was a result of finding the amount necessary to provide a good retirement benefit at age 62 when combined with Social Security and a reasonable level of participation in the thrift plan while holding the cost down to comparable levels of good private plans.

Age 62 retirement is the normal retirement age for plans in private industry. It is also the earliest age of eligibility for Social Security benefits.

The plan deviates from private practice in that it is not explicitly integrated with Social Security. Generally, plans offset a portion of the Social Security benefit in order to provide overall retirement income equally distributed to all salary levels. Social Security redistributes income to lower wage earners. Thus, most private plans redistribute the pension benefit in the other direction to compensate for the Social Security tilt.

This plan does not attempt to redistribute retirement income in such a manner and preserves the Social Security tilt in favor of lower income workers. Given the size and nature of the Federal Retirement Program, the add-on approach is a less complex and more manageable system. Besides, a levelling of replacement of preretirement salaries should occur with the expected more extensive usage of the thrift plan by higher income employees. While participation in the thrift plan is expected by all income levels, a greater percentage of high income employees and a greater percentage of salaries of high income employees should utilize the plan's provisions. In so doing the tilt in overall retirement income will level off. With the add-on approach, lower-income workers will not find it necessary to contribute substantially to the thrift plan to provide good retirement benefits.

Similar to the current system, the new plan establishes a few special retirement classes. Unlike the current system, however, the new plan does not include Members of Congress or congressional staff in the special classes. Instead, they are treated in the same manner as the rest of the work force.

The special retirement classes include law enforcement personnel, firefighters, and air traffic controllers. They will be eligible to retire after 25 years of service at any age, but retirement benefits drawn before age 55 will be reduced by 5 percent a year under age 55.

The thrift plan, a very common feature in private plans, will now be available to Federal employees. The thrift plan complements the defined benefit plan, encourages maximum participation and flexibility throughout the work force, prevents governmental absorption of potential liabilities from cost-of-living features inherent in defined benefit plans, and increases employees' involvement as much as possible in their own retirement planning.

Availability of thrift plan moneys upon separation is slightly more restrictive than in most private plans. Because the thrift plan is an integral part of the new plan's retirement income policy, lump sum withdrawals prior to retirement are prohibited except for hardship loans. Thus, it is intended the thrift account be used for retirement purposes solely. However, to promote portability of benefits, rollover of accounts into an IRA or a subsequent employer plan without tax consequences are permitted.

The defined benefit part of the new plan provides for automatic cost-of-living adjustments equal to the Consumer Price Index minus 2 percentage points. Automatic cost-of-living adjustments are critical to maintaining the real income level of retirement income. However, such adjustments are the single most costly feature of a retirement plan. This plan still protects beneficiaries from the ravages of inflation while limiting the cost. Besides, Social Security currently is fully indexed to inflation and will make up a large part of the total benefit. Private plans rarely provide automatic cost-of-living adjustments. Instead, increases are made on an ad hoc basis.

This plan requires full funding. The thrift plan is fully funded by its very nature. For the defined benefit plan, agencies are required to contribute to the retirement fund the full cost of their employees. Any portion of the plan found to be underfunded will trigger amortized payments from the Treasury over a 30-year period. This funding scenario will make it comparable to Federal requirements of private plans.

Thrift plan moneys will be contributed to a new fund. Contributions to the defined benefit plan will be directed into the civil service retirement fund. This will maintain funding continuity with the current civil service retirement system.

For investment of thrift plan contributions, employees may choose from among the three following investment funds at a minimum—a Government securities investment fund, a guaranteed income investment fund, and a common stock index investment fund. Thrift plan moneys will gradually be available for private investment. To ensure maximum rates of return on contributions and to thus maintain projected retirement income, private investment is necessary.

Historically, rates of return on Federal securities lag far behind returns on corporate bonds and common stocks. All State and local government plans and private plans invest their moneys outside of their own entities. While private plans are required to invest outside of their own companies, State and local governments are not. All of these entities have determined that the increased risk of outside investments has been worth it when cost factors and benefit amounts have been considered. Additionally, the few Federal entities that maintain thrift plans, for example, the Federal Reserve Board and the Tennessee Valley Authority, invest in the private markets.

In order to minimize the impact on the Federal budget and the private markets, moneys are phased into private investments, at a rate of 20 percent a year after the first year for employee contributions and 20 percent a year after the sixth year for employer contributions. After the 10th year all new moneys contributed to the thrift plan will be available for outside investment.

The new plan provides an option for current employees to join with the employee retaining credit in the old system and in effect starting anew in the new system. His years of service in both systems count toward an eligibility to retire in both, and his highest years of salary in his career count toward the salary base in both systems. Prior Federal service does not entitle an employee to retroactive Social Security credit.

A thrift Investment Board will be established as an off budget agency to manage the thrift plan. It will be composed of five members: the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Director of OPM, and two representatives of Federal employee organizations appointed by the President. The Board will appoint an Executive Director who will be responsible for running the agency and directing the investments. The Board will not make any direct investment, but instead contract with investment firms to accomplish the task. The Board may establish other categories for investments in addition to the Government securities, fixed income, and common stock index investment funds specifically provided for in this plan. Except for the 2 years when the agency will receive Federal appropriations, the agency will be funded through a portion of investment returns.

Disability benefits differ according to eligibility for Social Security benefits. Vesting in either case is 18 months. If one is eligible for Social Security disability benefits or is ineligible only as a result of insufficient quarters of coverage, the employee is guaranteed 60 percent of his average salary totally offset by the receipt of Social Security benefits until reaching age 62. If the employee, as a result of nonwork related illness or injury, is no longer qualified for his position or another similar position, but is ineligible for Social Security benefits, he is entitled to a civil service disabilty benefit. This benefit provides 60 percent of his average pay in the first year after entitlement to disability benefits and 40 percent of his average salary in subsequent years until the employee recovers or reaches age 55.

Disability benefits are provided through a long term disability insurance plan purchased by the Government and administered by a third party. Using this approach to provide generous benefits for total disability and limited benefits for occupational disability is common in private industry. These benefits do not include the added amount available through an employee's thrift plan.

Preretirement survivor benefits are payable to a spouse of a deceased employee who had 5 years of service. If the deceased employee was eligible to retire, the survivor gets 50 percent of the accrued annuity with applicable early retirement reductions plus Social Security. If the deceased employee was ineligible to retire, the survivor will receive 50 percent of the deceased employee's accrued annuity at the point the employee would have been eligible to retire. In addition, the survivor receives a noncontributory amount of life insurance equal to the basic contributory amount available under current law through Federal Employees Group Life Insurance.

Post retirement survivor benefits follow the same policy as long as such benefits are not waived. Those eligible will receive 50 percent of the annuity, in addition to any Social Security benefits payable.

Mr. President, hearings on this legislation have been scheduled before the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee on September 9, 10, and 11.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill, a sectional analysis, and a Congressional Research Service cost and benefit analysis be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1527

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

That this Act may be cited as the "Civil Service Pension Reform Act of 1985".

PURPOSES

SEC. 2. The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to provide Federal employees with a retirement benefits plan which is comparable to good private sector retirement benefits plans;

(2) to promote financial stability and flexibility for the future of each Federal employee;

(3) to ensure a fully funded and financially sound Federal Government retirement benefits plan;

(4) to enhance portability of retirement assets between Federal jobs and jobs outside the Federal Government;

(5) to increase the options of each Federal employee with respect to retirement benefits plans;

(6) to encourage Federal employees to increase personal savings for retirement;

(7) to include Federal employees in the investment decisionmaking process with respect to the assets of the retirement system; and

(8) to extend financial protection from disability to additional Federal employees and to increase such protection for eligible Federal employees.

"SUBCHAPTER I—DEFINITIONS; CIVIL SERVICE PENSION SYSTEM

"§ 8401. Definitions

"Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, for the purposes of this chapter—

"(1) the term 'account', when used with respect to a participant or annuitant, means an account established and maintained under section 8428(a) of this title;

"(2) the term 'annuitant' means a former participant who is entitled to an annuity under this chapter and who has applied under this chapter for the payment of the annuity to commence;

"(3) the term 'average pay', when used with respect to a participant, means the largest annual rate resulting from averaging the participant's rates of basic pay in effect over any 5 consecutive years of creditable service or, in the case of an annuity under this chapter based on service of less than 5 years, over the total service, with each rate weighted by the period it was in effect;

"(4) the term 'basic pay', when used with respect to a participant—

"(A) means the lesser of—

"(i) the basic pay of the participant established pursuant to law, without regard to any provision of law (except sections 5308 and 5382(b) of this title) limiting the rate of pay actually payable in any pay period (including any provision of law restricting the use of appropriated funds); or

"(ii) the rate of basic pay payable for level I of the Executive Schedule; and

"(B) includes the items described in subparagraphs (A) through (D) of paragraph (3) of section 8331 of this title and does not include the items excluded by such paragraph;

"(5) the term 'Board' means the Civil Service Thrift Investment Board established by section 8491(a) of this title;

"(6) the term 'Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund' means the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund referred to in section 8348 of this title;

"(7) the term 'court', when used with respect to a judgment, decree, order, or other judicial action, means any court of the United States, a State, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, or a territory or possession of the United States, or any Indian court, having jurisdiction to issue such judgment, decree, or order or to take such other judicial action;

"(8) the term 'Director' means the Director of the Office of Personnel Management;

"(9) the term 'dynamic assumptions' means economic assumptions that are used in determining actuarial costs and liabilities of a retirement system and in anticipating the effects of long-term future—

"(A) investment yields,

"(B) increases in rates of basic pay, and

"(C) rates of price inflation;

"(10) the term 'earnings', when used with respect to the Thrift Savings Fund, means the amount of the gain realized or yield received from the investment of sums in such fund;

"(11) the term 'eligible former spouse', when used with respect to a participant or former participant, means a former spouse of the participant or former participant who was married to the participant or former participant for at least 9 months;

"(12) the term 'employee' means—

"(A) each individual referred to in subparagraphs (A), (E), (F), (H), (I), and (J) of section 8331(1) of this title, including an employee of the United States Park Police and an employee of the United States Secret Service; and

"(B) a Congressional employee as defined in section 2107 of this title, including a temporary Congressional employee;

any of whose service after December 31, 1983, is employment for the purposes of title II of the Social Security Act and chapter 21 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, except that such term does not include any individual referred to in clause (i), (ii), (v), (vi), or (ix) of paragraph (1) of section 8331 of this title or in the undesignated material after clause (ix) of such paragraph, any individual excluded under section 8402(b)(2) of this title, or any individual who was subject to subchapter III of chapter 83 of this title on December 31, 1983, and has not commenced participation in the System pursuant to section 8471 of this title;

"(13) the term 'Executive Director' means the Executive Director appointed under section 8493(a)(1) of this title;

"(14) the term 'firefighter' means an employee the duties of whose position—

"(A) are primarily to perform work directly connected with the control and extinguishment of fires; and

"(B) are sufficiently rigorous that employment opportunities are required to be limited to young and physically vigorous individuals, as determined by the Director considering the recommendation of the employing agency;

"(15) the term 'Fund' means the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund;

"(16) the term 'Government' means the Federal Government and Gallaudet College;

"(17) the term 'law enforcement officer' means an employee, the duties of whose position—

"(A) are primarily (i) the investigation, apprehension, or detention of individuals suspected or convicted of offenses against the criminal laws of the United States, or (ii) the protection of officials of the United States against threats to personal safety; and

"(B) are sufficiently rigorous that employment opportunities are required to be limited to young and physically vigorous individuals, as determined by the Director considering the recommendation of the employing agency;

"(18) the term 'loss', when used with respect to the Thrift Savings Fund, means the amount of the loss realized from the investment of sums in such fund;

"(19) the term 'lump-sum credit' has the same meaning as provided by section 8331(8) of this title;

"(20) the term 'Member' has the same meaning as provided in section 2106 of this title, except that such term does not include a person who (A) was a Member of Congress on December 31, 1983, and (B) has not commenced participation in the System pursuant to section 8471 of this title;

"(21) the term 'military reserve technician' means a member of one of the reserve components of the Armed Forces specified in section 261(a) of title 10 who—

"(A) is assigned to a civilian position as a technician in the administration and training of such reserve components or in the maintenance and repair of supplies issued to such reserve components; and

"(B) as a condition of employment in such position, is required to be a member of one of such reserve components serving in a specified military grade;

"(22) the term 'net earnings' means the excess of earnings over losses;

"(23) the term 'net losses' means the excess of losses over earnings;

"(24) the term 'normal cost' means the entry-age normal cost of the provisions of the System which relate to the Fund, computed by the Office in accordance with generally accepted actuarial practice and standards (using dynamic assumptions) and expressed as a level percentage of aggregate basic pay;

"(25) the term 'Office' means the Office of Personnel Management;

"(26) the term 'participant' means an employee or Member or a person who is receiving disability benefits under subchapter V of this chapter;

"(27) the term 'price index' has the same meaning as provided in section 8331(15) of this title;

"(28) the term 'service', when used with respect to a participant or former participant, means—

"(A) employment as a participant;

"(B) subject to section 8419(a) of this title, military service as provided in section 8332(c) of this title; and

"(C) service that is creditable under subchapter III of chapter 83 of this title, but only to the extent provided in section 8472(a) of this title;

"(29) the term 'supplemental liability' means the estimated excess of—

"(A) the actuarial present value of all future benefits payable from the Fund under this chapter, over

"(B) the sum of—

"(i) the actuarial present value of the future contributions to be made on behalf of participants pursuant to section 8418(a) of this title; and

"(ii) the balance in the Fund attributable to the System on the date the supplemental liability is determined; and

"(30) the term 'System' means the Civil Service Pension System described in section 8402(a) of this title.

"§ 8402. Civil Service Pension System; participation

"(a) The provisions of this chapter comprise the Civil Service Pension System.

"(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, each employee and Member shall be a participant in the System.

"(2)(A) The Office may exclude from the operation of this chapter an employee or group of employees in or under an Executive agency whose employment is temporary or intermittent, except an employee whose employment is part-time career employment (as defined in section 3401(2) of this title).

"(B) The Architect of the Capitol may exclude from the operation of this chapter an employee under the Office of the Architect of the Capitol whose employment is temporary or of uncertain duration.

"(C) The Librarian of Congress may exclude from the operation of this chapter an employee under the Library of Congress whose employment is temporary or of uncertain duration.

"§ 8403. Relationship to the Social Security Act

"Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, the benefits payable under the System are in addition to the benefits payable under the Social Security Act.

"SUBCHAPTER II—BASIC PLAN

"§ 8411. Entitlement to immediate retirement

"(a) An employee or a Member who is separated from Government employment after becoming 55 years of age and completing 10 years of service is entitled to an immediate annuity.

"(b) An employee or a Member who is separated from Government employment after becoming 62 years of age and completing 5 years of service is entitled to an immediate annuity.

"(c) An employee who is separated from Government employment after completing 25 years of service as a law enforcement officer or firefighter, or any combination of such service totaling at least 25 years, is entitled to an immediate annuity.

"(d) An employee who is separated from Government employment after completing 25 years as an air traffic controller is entitled to an immediate annuity.

"(e)(1) Except as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection, any employee who has completed 25 years of service, or is not less than 50 years of age and has completed 20 years of service, and who—

"(A) is separated from Government employment involuntarily, except by removal for cause on charges of misconduct or delinquency, or

"(B) while serving in a geographic area designated by the Director, is voluntarily separated from Government employment during a period that (as determined by the Director)—

"(i) the agency in which the employee is serving is undergoing a major reorganization, a major reduction in force, or a major transfer of function, and

"(ii) a significant percentage of the total number of employees serving in such agency will be separated or subject to an immediate reduction in the rate of basic pay (without regard to subchapter VI of chapter 53 of this title or comparable provisions), is entitled to an immediate annuity.

"(2) An employee described in paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection is not entitled to an annuity under this subsection if the employee has declined a reasonable offer of another position in the employee's agency for which the employee is qualified and the offered position is not lower than 2 grades or pay levels below the employee's grade or pay level and is within the employee's commuting area.

"(3) Paragraph (1) of this subsection shall not apply to a firefighter, law enforcement officer, or air traffic controller who has completed 25 years of service.

"(f) An annuity authorized by this section is computed under sections 8413 through 8415 of this title.

"§ 8412. Entitlement to deferred retirement

"(a) A participant who is under 55 years of age and separates from Government employment after completing 10 years of service is entitled to an annuity to commence on or after the date the participant becomes 55 years of age but not later than the date the participant becomes 62 years of age, as elected by the participant under rules prescribed by the Office.

"(b) A participant who is under 62 years of age and separates from Government employment after completing 5 years of service and before completing 10 years of service is entitled to an annuity to commence on the date the participant becomes 62 years of age.

"(c) An annuity authorized by this section is computed under sections 8413 through 8415 of this title.

"§ 8413. Computation of annuity

"(a)(1) Except as provided in section 8414 or 8415 of this title, the amount of the annuity an annuitant is entitled to receive under this subchapter shall be equal to the product of 1 percent of the former participant's average pay (while serving as an employee or Member) multiplied by the participant's total service.

"(2) For the purposes of computing the amount of an annuity under paragraph (1) of this subsection, the total service of a participant who separates from Government employment entitled to an immediate annuity or who dies leaving a survivor or survivors entitled to a survivor annuity under this chapter includes days of unused sick leave credited to the participant under a formal leave system to the same extent that unused sick leave is credited in computing an annuity of a person who is subject to subchapter III of chapter 83 of this title, as provided in section 8339(m) of this title.

"(b)(1) A former participant who is entitled to receive an annuity under subsection (c) or (d) of section 8411 of this title and is at least 55 years of age and not more than 62 years of age shall be entitled to receive an annuity supplement, in addition to the amount of the annuity computed under subsection (a) of this section, while the former participant is under 62 years of age.

"(2) The amount of the annuity supplement payable to a former participant under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be equal to the estimated amount of the benefits that—

"(A) the former participant would be entitled to receive under title II of the Social Security Act if the participant were 62 years of age on the date the annuity referred to in such paragraph commences; and

"(B) is attributable to service referred to in section 8411(c) or 8411(d) of this title, as the case may be, computed on the date such annuity commences and increased as provided in paragraph (3) of this subsection.

"(3) Effective on January 1 of each year, the amount of the annuity supplement payable to a former participant under this subsection shall be increased by the percentage increase, if any, in the SSA average wage index (as defined in section 215(i)(1)(G) of the Social Security Act) published for November of the preceding year over such index published for November of the next preceding year.

"(c) In computing under this section the annuity of an individual who has performed service on less than a full-time basis, such service shall be credited on a proportional basis equal to the fraction that such service is of full-time service, and the annual rate of basic pay that would be payable for full-time service in the position shall be deemed to be the rate of basic pay.

"§ 8414. Reduction for early retirement

"The annuity computed under section 8413(a) of this title (without regard to this section or section 8415 of this title)—

"(1) for an annuitant, other than an annuitant referred to in paragraph (2) or (3) of this section, who is under 62 years of age on the date on which the annuitant's annuity commences shall be reduced by one-sixth of 1 percent for each month that the annuitant is under such age on such date;

"(2) for an annuitant, other than an annuitant entitled to an immediate annuity under section 8411(e) of this title and an annuitant referred to in paragraph (3) of this subsection, who is at least 55 years of age and is under 62 years of age on the date on which the annuitant's annuity commences and has not completed 30 years of service shall be reduced by five-twelfths of 1 percent for each month that the annuitant is under 62 years of age on such date; and

"(3) for an annuitant who is entitled to an immediate annuity under subsection (c) or (d) of section 8411 of this title or who separated from Government employment as a military reserve technician shall be reduced by five-twelfths of 1 percent for each month that the annuitant is under 55 years of age on the date on which the annuitant's annuity commences.

"§ 8415. Reduction for survivor annuities

"(a) The annuity of an annuitant computed under section 8413 of this title and, if appropriate, under section 8414 of this title shall be reduced by an estimated amount such that the actuarial present value of the retirement benefits expected to be payable to the annuitant under this subchapter and all survivor benefits expected to be payable out of the Fund with respect to the annuitant is equal to the actuarial present value of the retirement benefits that would be expected to be payable under this subchapter to the annuitant pursuant to the method referred to in section 8416(a)(2)(A) of this title, as determined under regulations prescribed by the Office.

"(b) A reduction in the annuity of an annuitant pursuant to subsection (a) of this section shall be adjusted, as appropriate to carry out such subsection, to reflect any change in circumstances relating to entitlement to a survivor annuity, including any election made pursuant to section 8434(a), 8436(b), or 8436(c) of this title.

"§ 8416. Methods of Payment

"(a)(1) The Office shall prescribe methods of payment of annuities under this subchapter.

"(2) The methods of payment prescribed under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall include, but not be limited to—

"(A) a method which provides for the payment of a monthly annuity only to an annuitant during the life of the annuitant;

"(B) a method which provides for the payment of a monthly annuity to an annuitant and a monthly survivor annuity equal to 50 percent of the annuitant's annuity on the date of the annuitant's death (computed without regard to an election under section 8417(a) of this title) to the annuitant's surviving spouse, if any; and

"(C) a method which provides for the payment of a monthly annuity to an annuitant and a monthly survivor annuity equal to 50 percent of the annuitant's annuity on the date of the annuitant's death (computed without regard to an election under section 8417(a) of this title) to an individual who is designated by the annuitant and who has an insurable interest in the annuitant.

"(b)(1) Subject to paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection—

"(A) under such regulations as the Office shall prescribe, a participant or former participant who is applying for an annuity under this subchapter to commence shall elect one of the methods of payment prescribed by the Office under subsection (a) of this section; and

"(B) the annuity of an annuitant under this subchapter shall be paid in accordance with the method of payment elected by the annuitant pursuant to subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.

"(2)(A) A participant or former participant who is married on the date on which the participant or former participant applies for an annuity under this subchapter to commence may elect a method of payment other than the method described in subsection (a)(2)(B) of this section only if the participant or former participant and the spouse of the participant or former participant jointly waive a survivor annuity under the method described in such subsection (a)(2)(B).

"(B) A waiver shall not be effective for the purpose of subparagraph (A) of this paragraph unless the waiver is made in writing, is notarized, and is filed with the Office on or before the date the annuity to which the waiver relates commences.

"(C) A waiver made in accordance with this paragraph shall be irrevocable.

"(3) In the case of an annuitant who is subject to paragraph (2)(A) of this subsection and fails to make an election under paragraph (1) of this subsection, an annuity and survivor annuity shall be paid under the method of payment described in subsection (a)(2)(B) of this section.

"(4) A participant or former participant may elect the method prescribed under subsection (a)(2)(C) of this section only if the participant or former participant is in good health on the date the election is made, as determined by the Office.

"§ 8417. Level benefits option

"(a) Under regulations prescribed by the Office, an annuity payable under this subchapter to a participant who is separating from Government employment entitled to an immediate annuity under subsection (a) of section 8411 of this title and is less than 62 years of age may be adjusted as provided in subsection (b) of this section, if elected by the participant on or before the date of separation.

"(b)(1) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, an annuity payable under this subchapter to an annuitant who has made an election authorized by subsection (a) of this section may be increased during the period the annuitant is not less than 55 years of age and is less than 62 years of age and may be reduced on and after the date the annuitant is not less than 62 years of age as appropriate to provide the annuitant an annuity under this subchapter, during each month of such period, in an amount which approximately equals the total amount of the monthly benefits payable to the annuitant under this subchapter and section 202(a) of the Social Security Act after such date.

"(2) The actuarial present value of the benefits expected to be paid under this subchapter to the annuitant as provided in paragraph (1) of this subsection on and after the date the annuitant becomes 55 years of age may not exceed the actuarial present value of the benefits that would be expected to be paid under this subchapter to such participant on and after such date if the adjustments authorized by such paragraph were not made, as determined under regulations prescribed by the Office.

"§ 8418. Funding

"(a)(1) Each agency of the Government employing a participant shall contribute to the Fund an amount equal to the sum of—

"(A) the normal cost, as determined by the Office, of (i) each participant who is employed by the agency, and (ii) each disabled participant who is entitled to benefits under section 8442(a) of this title and was employed by the agency on the date the participant became disabled (computed using average pay as increased in accordance with section 8442(b)(2)(C) of this title); and

"(B) the normal cost, as determined by the Office, of the annuity supplement under section 8413(b) of this title for each law enforcement officer, firefighter, and air traffic controller who is employed by the agency.

"(2) The contribution required by paragraph (1) of this subsection to be made by an agency shall be made from the appropriation or fund used to pay the agency's participants, or, in the case of an elected participant, from an appropriation or fund available for payment of other salaries of the office or establishment of the participant. In the case of a participant in the legislative branch who is paid by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, contributions for the benefit of such participant shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

"(b)(1) The Office shall compute—

"(A) the amount of the supplemental liability of the Fund relating to participants and annuitants other than participants and annuitants referred to in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, and

"(B) the amount of the supplemental liability of the Fund relating to participants and annuitants who are active or retired officers or employees of the United States Postal Service, as of the close of each fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1987.

"(2) The amounts of any supplemental liability—

"(A) computed pursuant to paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection with respect to participants and annuitants referred to in such paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection, and

"(B) computed pursuant to paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection with respect to participants and annuitants referred to in such paragraph (1)(B), shall each be amortized in thirty annual installments.

"(3) At the end of each fiscal year, the Office shall notify—

"(A) the Secretary of the Treasury of the amount of the annual installment computed under paragraph (2)(A) of this subsection for such fiscal year, and

"(B) the Postmaster General of the United States of the amount of the annual installment computed pursuant to paragraph (2)(B) of this subsection for such fiscal year.

"(4)(A) Before closing the accounts for a fiscal year, the Secretary of the Treasury shall credit the amount of the annual installment computed for such fiscal year pursuant to paragraph (2)(A) to the Fund, as a Government contribution, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

"(B) Upon receiving a notice required by paragraph (3)(B) of this subsection, the United States Postal Service shall pay to the Fund the amount of the annual installment specified in the notice.

"(5) For the purpose of carrying out paragraph (1) of this subsection with respect to any fiscal year, the Office may—

"(A) require the Board of Actuaries of the Civil Service Retirement System to make actuarial determinations and valuations, make recommendations, and maintain records in the same manner as provided in section 8347(f) of this title; and

"(B) may use the latest actuarial determinations and valuations made by such Board of Actuaries.

"§ 8419. Funding of annuity attributable to military service

"(a) Except in the case of an individual making an election under section 8471(a)(1)(A) of this title, a participant's or former participant's service shall include credit for military service as provided in section 8332(c) of this title without regard to whether the participant or former participant has made a deposit covering such military service as provided in section 8334(j) of this title.

"(b) Before closing the accounts for a fiscal year, the Secretary of the Treasury shall reimburse the Fund from sums in the Department of Defense Military Retirement Fund (established by section 1461(a) of title 10), which are hereby made available to pay the reimbursement, for the normal cost relating to the creditable military service of employees and Members who became participants during such fiscal year, actuarially adjusted to the date of payment, as determined by the Office.

"(c) At the end of each fiscal year the Office shall compute the amount of the reimbursement required by subsection (b) of this section for the fiscal year and shall notify the Secretary of the Treasury of that amount.

"SUBCHAPTER III—THRIFT SAVINGS PLAN

"§ 8421. Contributions

"(a)(1) Each participant may contribute to the Thrift Savings Fund in any year an amount not exceeding 10 percent of the participant's annual rate of basic pay.

"(2) Each participant receiving disability benefits under subchapter V of this chapter may, until becoming 62 years of age (in the case of a person who is disabled within the meaning of section 8441(4)(A) of this title) or until becoming 55 years of age (in the case of a person who is disabled within the meaning of section 8441(4)(B) of this title), contribute to the Thrift Savings Fund in any year an amount not exceeding 10 percent of the amount of the former participant's disability benefits payable under such subchapter during such year.

"(3) Any contribution under this subsection shall be made only pursuant to a program of regular contributions under regulations prescribed by the Board.

"(4) At least once each year, a participant may modify the amount contributed pursuant to paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection, as the case may be, under regulations prescribed by the Board.

"(b) The employing agency of a participant who contributes to the Thrift Savings Fund under subsection (a) of this section for any pay period, or, in the case of a disabled participant who contributes to such fund under such subsection for any disability benefits payment period, the employing agency of the participant on the date the participant became disabled (as defined in section 8441(4) of this title), shall contribute to the Thrift Savings Fund for the benefit of such participant or disabled participant at the end of such period an amount equal to such portion of the amount of the participant's contribution as does not exceed 5 percent of the amount of the gross pay or gross disability benefits, as the case may be, payable for such period.

"(c) The sums required to be contributed to the Thrift Savings Fund by an employing agency under subsection (b) of this section for the benefit of a participant shall be paid from the appropriations or funds available to such agency to pay the basic pay of participants or, in the case of an elected participant, from an appropriation or fund available for payment of other salaries of the participant's office or establishment. In the case of a participant in the legislative branch who is paid by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, contributions for the benefit of such participant shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

"(d) For purposes of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954—

"(1) any amount of the participant's pay which is contributed to the Thrift Savings Fund, and the amount of the employing agency's matching contributions, shall not be included in the gross income of the participant; and

"(2) the Thrift Savings Fund shall be treated, for purposes of determining when amounts in such Fund are included in the income of any participant, as described in section 401(a) of such Code.

"(e) Subsection (d)(1) of this section shall not be construed to provide that any amount of the participant's pay which is contributed to the Thrift Savings Fund shall not be included in the term 'wages' for purposes of section 209 of the Social Security Act or section 3121(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"§ 8422. Vesting

"(a)(1) A participant who separates from Government employment shall be entitled to an amount equal to—

"(A) the total amount of the contributions made under section 8421(a) of this title plus the total amount of the net earnings in the Thrift Savings Fund, or minus the total amount of the net losses, attributable to such contributions; and

"(B) the applicable percentage of the amount equal to the total amount contributed to the Thrift Savings Fund for the benefit of the participant under section 8421(b) of this title plus the total amount of the net earnings in the Thrift Savings Fund, or minus the total amount of the net losses, attributable to such contributions, as provided in subsection (b) of this section.

"(2) The amount to which a participant is entitled under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be payable in accordance with the election made by the participant pursuant to section 8423 of this title.

"(b)(1) For the purpose of subsection (a)(1)(B) of this section, except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, the applicable percentage for a participant separating from Government employment after having been a participant in the System for a period set forth under column I of the table below is the percentage set forth under column II of the table below opposite the description of such period:

"Column I	Column II
Period for which the participant has been a participant in the System:	Applicable percentage
Less than 1 year
Not less than 1 year, but less than 2 years	20
Not less than 2 years, but less than 3 years	40
Not less than 3 years, but less than 4 years	60
Not less than 4 years, but less than 5 years	80
Not less than 5 years	100.

"(2) For the purposes of subsection (a)(1)(B) of this section—

"(A) the percentage applicable in the case of any participant who dies while employed by the Government shall be 100 percent; and

"(B) in the case of a participant making contributions under section 8421(a)(2) of this title, the period for which the person has been a participant in the System shall include periods for which such contributions were made.

"(c) When an election is made by a participant under section 8423(c) of this title, the amount equal to the excess of—

"(1) the sum of—

"(A) the amounts contributed to the Thrift Savings Fund with respect to the participant under section 8421 of this title; and

"(B) the net earnings in the Thrift Savings Fund attributable to such contributions, over

"(2) the amount in the Thrift Savings Fund paid or reserved for payment to or with respect to the participant pursuant to section 8423(c) of this title, shall be transferred to the Treasury of the United States for credit to Miscellaneous Receipts.

"§ 8423. Entitlement and elections relating to entitlement

"(a) Any participant who separates from Government employment entitled to an immediate annuity under section 8411 of this title is entitled and may elect—

"(1) to receive an immediate annuity from the Thrift Savings Fund;

"(2) to defer the commencement of the payment of an annuity from the Thrift Savings Fund until such date as the participant specifies;

"(3) to withdraw, in one or more payments, the amount of the balance credited to the participant's account in the Thrift Savings Fund; or

"(4) to transfer the amount of the balance in the account to an individual retirement account or other qualified plan (within the meaning of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) of the participant.

"(b) Any participant who separates from Government employment entitled to a deferred annuity under section 8412 of this title is entitled and may elect—

"(1) to receive an annuity from the Thrift Savings Fund to commence on the first date the participant is entitled to receive the deferred annuity;

"(2) to defer the commencement of the payment of an annuity from the Thrift Savings Fund until a date after the first date the participant is entitled to receive the deferred annuity, as specified by the participant;

"(3) to withdraw in one or more payments, on or after the first date the participant is entitled to receive the deferred annuity, the amount of the balance credited to the participant's account in the Thrift Savings Fund; or

"(4) to transfer the amount of the balance in the account to an individual retirement account or other qualified plan (within the meaning of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) of the participant.

"(c) Any participant who separates from Government employment before becoming entitled to an annuity under section 8411 or 8412 of this title is entitled and may elect—

"(1) to receive an annuity from the Thrift Savings Fund to commence when the participant becomes 62 years of age;

"(2) to withdraw, in one or more payments, the amount computed under section 8422(a)(1) of this title, payable when the participant becomes 62 years of age; or

"(3) to transfer such amount to an individual retirement account or other qualified plan (within the meaning of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) of the participant.

"(d)(1) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, any participant making an election pursuant to subsection (a)(2) or (b)(2) of this section may modify the date specified in the election or in a previous modification under this subsection.

"(2) Any modification of an election under paragraph (1) of this subsection may not be made on or after the date specified in the election or the latest modification made under such paragraph and may not specify a date for the commencement of annuity payments earlier than one month after the date the modification is filed with the Executive Director.

"§ 8424. Annuities: methods of payment; election; and computation

"(a)(1) The Board shall prescribe methods of payment of annuities under this subchapter.

"(2) The methods of payment prescribed under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall include, but not be limited to—

"(A) a method which provides for the payment of a monthly annuity only to an annuitant during the life of the annuitant;

"(B) a method which provides for the payment of a monthly annuity to an annuitant for the joint lives of the annuitant and the spouse of the annuitant and an appropriate monthly annuity to the one of them who survives the other of them for the life of the survivor;

"(C) a method described in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph which provides annual increases in the amount of the annuity payable;

"(D) a method described in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph which provides annual increases in the amount of the annuity payable; and

"(E) a method providing for the payment of a monthly annuity—

"(i) to the annuitant for the joint lives of the annuitant and an individual, designated by the annuitant under regulations prescribed by the Board, who has an insurable interest in the annuitant; and

"(ii) to the one of them who survives the other of them for the life of the survivor.

"(b) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, under such regulations as the Board shall prescribe, an annuitant electing under section 8423 of this title to receive an annuity from the Thrift Savings Fund shall elect, on or before the date on which the annuitant's annuity under this subchapter commences, one of the methods of payment prescribed by the Board under subsection (a) of this section.

"(c) The amount of an annuity payable under this subchapter pursuant to the method elected under subsection (b) of this section shall be determined on an actuarial basis under regulations prescribed by the Board.

"§ 8425. Administrative provisions relating to payments and elections

"(a) The Executive Director shall make or provide for payments and transfers in accordance with an election of a participant under section 8423 or 8424(b) of this title.

"(b) Any election under section 8423 or 8424(b) of this title shall be in writing and shall be filed with the Executive Director in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Board.

"(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, an election or modification of an election under any provision of this subchapter shall not be effective if the election or modification would result in a violation of the terms of an applicable court decree of divorce, annulment, or legal separation, or the terms of any court order or court-approved property settlement agreement incident to a court decree of divorce, annulment, or legal separation, as determined by the Executive Director.

"§ 8426. Thrift Savings Fund

"(a) There is established in the Treasury of the United States a Thrift Savings Fund.

"(b) The Thrift Savings Fund consists of the sum of all amounts contributed under section 8421 of this title increased by the total net earnings from investments of sums in the Thrift Savings Fund or reduced by the total net losses from investments of the Thrift Savings Fund.

"(c) The sums in the Thrift Savings Fund are appropriated and shall remain available without fiscal year limitation—

"(1) to invest under section 8427 of this title;

"(2) to pay benefits under this subchapter;

"(3) to pay the administrative expenses of the Civil Service Thrift Investment Management System prescribed in subchapter VIII of this chapter; and

"(4) to make loans to participants as authorized under subsection (e) of this section.

"(d)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, sums in the Thrift Savings Fund are not subject to execution, levy, attachment, garnishment, or other legal process.

"(2) Moneys due or payable from the Thrift Savings Fund to any individual and, in the case of an individual who is a participant, moneys which the individual would be entitled to receive under section 8422 of this title upon separation from Government employment shall be subject to legal process for the enforcement of the individual's legal obligations to provide child support or make alimony payments as provided in section 459 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 659) or to pay any indebtedness of the individual to the United States.

"(e) The Board shall establish a program to make loans from the Thrift Savings Fund to a participant in case of financial hardship and shall prescribe regulations to carry out such program. Any such loan shall be made only out of sums contributed to the Thrift Savings Fund by the participant and net earnings attributable to such sums.

"(f) The sums in the Thrift Savings Fund shall not be appropriated and may not be used for any purpose other than the purposes specified in this section.

"§ 8427. Investment of Thrift Savings Fund

"(a) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'Common Stock Index Investment Fund' means the Common Stock Investment Fund established under subsection (b)(1)(C) of this section;

"(2) the term 'equity capital' means common and preferred stock, surplus, undivided profits, contingency reserves, and other capital reserves;

"(3) the term 'Fixed Income Investment Fund' means the Fixed Income Investment Fund established under subsection (b)(1)(B) of this section;

"(4) the term 'Government Securities Investment Fund' means the Government Securities Investment Fund established under subsection (b)(1)(A) of this section;

"(5) the term 'net worth' means capital, paid-in and contributed surplus, unassigned surplus, contingency reserves, group contingency reserves, and special reserves;

"(6) the term 'plan' means an employee benefit plan, as defined in section 3(3) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1002(3));

"(7) the term 'qualified professional asset manager' means—

"(A) a bank, as defined in section 202(a)(2) of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80b-2(a)(2)) which—

"(i) has the power to manage, acquire, or dispose of assets of a plan; and

"(ii) has, as of the last day of its latest fiscal year ending before the date of a determination for the purpose of this clause, equity capital in excess of $1,000,000;

"(B) a savings and loan association, the accounts of which are insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, which—

"(i) has applied for and been granted trust powers to manage, acquire, or dispose of assets of a plan by a State or Government authority having supervision over savings and loan associations; and

"(ii) has, as of the last day of its latest fiscal year ending before the date of a determination for the purpose of this clause, equity capital or net worth in excess of $1,000,000;

"(C) an insurance company which—

"(i) is qualified under the laws of more than one State to manage, acquire, or dispose of any assets of a plan;

"(ii) has, as of the last day of its latest fiscal year ending before the date of a determination for the purpose of this clause, net worth in excess of $1,000,000; and

"(iii) is subject to supervision and examination by a State authority having supervision over insurance companies; or

"(D) an investment adviser registered under section 203 of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80b-3) if the investment adviser has, on the last day of its latest fiscal year ending before the date of a determination for the purpose of this subparagraph, total client assets under its management and control in excess of $50,000,000, and—

"(i) the investment adviser has, on such day, shareholder's or partner's equity in excess of $750,000; or

"(ii) payment of all of the investment adviser's liabilities, including any liabilities which may arise by reason of a breach or violation of a duty described in section 8497 of this title, is unconditionally guaranteed by—

"(I) a person who directly or indirectly, through one or more intermediaries, controls, is controlled by, or is under common control with the investment adviser and who has, on the last day of the person's latest fiscal year ending before the date of a determination for the purpose of this clause, shareholder's or partner's equity in an amount which, when added to the amount of the shareholder's or partner's equity of the investment adviser on such day, exceeds $750,000;

"(II) a qualified professional asset manager described in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of this paragraph; or

"(III) a broker or dealer registered under section 15 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78o) that has, on the last day of the broker's or dealer's latest fiscal year ending before the date of a determination for the purpose of this clause, net worth in excess of $750,000; and

"(8) the term 'shareholder's or partner's equity', when used in paragraph (7)(D) of this subsection with respect to an investment adviser or a person who is affiliated with the investment adviser in a manner described in clause (ii)(I) of such paragraph (7)(D), means the equity shown in the most recent balance sheet prepared for such investment adviser or affiliated person, in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles, within 2 years before the date on which the investment adviser's status as a qualified professional asset manager is determined for the purposes of this section.

"(b)(1) The Board shall establish—

"(A) a Government Securities Investment Fund under which sums in the Thrift Savings Fund are invested in securities of the United States Government issued as provided in subsection (g) of this section;

"(B) a Fixed Income Investment Fund under which sums in the Thrift Savings Fund are invested in insurance contracts, certificates of deposits, or other instruments or obligations which (i) are issued or selected by qualified professional asset managers, and (ii) return the amount invested and pay interest, at a specified rate or rates, on that amount during a specified period of time;

"(C) a Common Stock Index Investment Fund as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection; and

"(D) such other investment funds as the Board determines to be appropriate for the purposes of this subchapter.

"(2)(A) The Board shall define an index which—

"(i) consists of all of the common stocks that are publicly listed and traded on one or more national securities exchanges, or

"(ii) is a commonly recognized index comprised of common stock the aggregate market value of which is at least 50 percent of the aggregate market value of all common stocks that are publicly listed and traded on one or more national securities exchanges.

"(B) The Common Stock Investment Fund shall be invested in each stock that is included in the index defined under sub-paragraph (A) of this paragraph such that, to the extent practicable, the percentage of the Common Stock Investment Fund that is invested in that stock is the same as the percentage determined by dividing the aggregate market value of all shares of that stock by the aggregate market value of all shares of all stock included in such index.

"(c)(1) The Executive Director shall invest in the Government Securities Investment Fund the sums which are in the Thrift Savings Fund, are available for investment, and are not to be invested in an investment fund referred to in subsection (b)(1)(B), (b)(1)(C), or (b)(1)(D) of this section pursuant to an election made under subsection (d) of this section.

"(2) Except as provided in subsection (e) of this section, the Executive Director shall invest sums available in the Thrift Savings Fund for investment as provided in elections made under subsection (d) of this section.

"(d)(1) Except as provided in subsection (e) of this section, at least once each year, a participant or former participant may elect the investment funds referred to in subsection (b) of this section into which the sums in the Thrift Savings Fund credited to the account of such participant or former participant are to be invested or reinvested.

"(2) The election may be made by a participant or former participant under paragraph (1) of this subsection only in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Board and within such period after the date the participant's or former participant's annual statement is transmitted to the participant or former participant pursuant to section 8428(b) of this title as the Board shall prescribe in such regulations.

"(e)(1)(A) The Executive Director shall invest a percentage of the total amount that—

"(i) is contributed to the Thrift Savings Fund by a participant under section 8421(a) of this title during a year described under column I of the first table of minimum Government securities investments set out in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, and

"(ii) is available for investment, in the Government Securities Investment Fund as provided under column II of the table opposite the description of such year.

"(B) For the purposes of subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, the first table of minimum Government securities investments is as follows:

"Column I Year:	Column II Minimum percentage of the amounts contributed by a participant for each month of such year to be invested in the Government Securities Investment Fund:
1987	100
1988	80
1989	60
1990	40
1991	20.

"(2)(A) The Executive Director shall invest a percentage of the total amount that—

"(i) is contributed to the Thrift Savings Fund by the Government for the benefit of a participant pursuant to section 8421(b) of this title during a year described under column I of the second table of minimum Government securities investments set out in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, and

"(ii) is available for investment,

in the Government Securities Investment Fund as provided under column II of the table opposite the description of such year.

"(B) For the purposes of subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, the second table of minimum Government securities investments is as follows:

"Column I Year:	Column II Minimum percentage of the amounts contributed for the benefit of a participant for each month of such year to be invested in the Government Securities Investment Fund:
1987-1992	100
1993	80
1994	60
1995	40
1996	20

"(3) All sums credited to the Thrift Savings Fund pursuant to section 8473(b) of this title shall be invested in the Government Securities Investment Fund.

"(4) The sums which are invested in the Government Securities Investment Fund as required by this subsection and are returned to the Thrift Savings Fund after maturity of the securities purchased with such sums, and the amounts earned on the investment of such sums, shall be reinvested in the Government Securities Investment Fund.

"(f) The Secretary of the Treasury shall issue notes under section 3103 of title 31 as appropriate to meet the investment needs of the Thrift Savings Fund under this section. The notes shall have a 2-year maturity, shall be redeemable at par, and shall bear interest at a rate equal to the average market yield, computed as of the end of the calendar month next preceding the date of the issue, of all 2-year notes then forming a part of the public debt of the United States. If the average market yield is not a multiple of 1/8 of 1 percent, the rate of interest on the obligations shall be the multiple of 1/8 of 1 percent nearest the average market yield.

"§ 8428. Accounting

"(a)(1) The Executive Director shall establish and maintain an account for each participant making contributions under section 8421(a) of this title.

"(2) The balance in the account of a participant or former participant at any time is the excess of—

"(A) the sum of—

"(i) all contributions made to the Thrift Savings Fund by the participant or former participant under section 8421(a) of this title;

"(ii) all contributions made to such fund for the benefit of the participant or former participant under section 8421(b) of this title;

"(iii) the amounts transferred to such fund with respect to the participant or former participant under section 8473(b) of this title; and

"(iv) the total amount of the allocations made to and reductions made in the account pursuant to paragraph (3) of this section, over

"(B) the amounts paid out of the Thrift Savings Fund with respect to such participant or former participant under this subchapter and subchapter IV of this title.

"(3) Pursuant to regulations prescribed by the Board, the Executive Director shall allocate to the account of each participant or former participant an amount equal to a pro rata share of the net earnings and net losses from each investment of sums in the Thrift Savings Fund attributable to sums credited to the account of such participant, reduced by an appropriate share of the administrative expenses of the Civil Service Thrift Investment Management System prescribed in subchapter VIII of this chapter, as determined by the Executive Director.

"(b) The Executive Director shall provide each participant and former participant an annual statement of the balance in the participant's or former participant's account.

"(c)(1) For the purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified public accountant' shall have the same meaning as provided in section 103(a)(3)(D) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1024(a)(3)(D)).

"(2) The Executive Director shall annually engage, on behalf of all participants, an independent qualified public accountant, who shall conduct an examination of any accounts established under subsection (a) of this section and of other books and records maintained in the administration of this subchapter as the accountant considers necessary to enable the accountant to make the determination required by paragraph (3) of this subsection. The examination shall be conducted in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards and shall involve such tests of the accounts, books, and records as the independent qualified public accountant considers necessary.

"(3) The independent qualified public accountant conducting an examination under paragraph (2) of this subsection shall determine whether the accounts, books, and records referred to in such paragraph have been maintained in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles applied on a basis consistent with the application of such principles during the examination conducted under such paragraph during the preceding year. The accountant shall transmit to the Board a report on his examination, including his determination under this paragraph.

"(4) In making a determination under paragraph (3) of this subsection, the accountant may rely on the correctness of any actuarial matter certified by an enrolled actuary, if the accountant states his reliance in the report transmitted to the Board under such paragraph.

"SUBCHAPTER IV—SURVIVOR BENEFITS

"§ 8431. Basic plan spousal benefits relating to the death of a participant or former participant other than an annuitant

"(a)(1) If a participant dies after performing 5 or more years of service and before separating from Government employment and the participant has satisfied the age and service requirements for retirement entitled to an immediate annuity under section 8411 of this title before the date of death, the surviving spouse of a deceased participant shall be entitled to a survivor annuity payable out of the Fund.

"(2) If a participant dies after performing 5 or more years of service and before separating from Government employment and the participant has not satisfied the age and service requirements for retirement entitled to an immediate annuity under section 8411 of this title before the date of death, the surviving spouse of a deceased participant shall be entitled to a survivor annuity payable out of the Fund. The survivor annuity shall commence on the first date the participant could have retired entitled to an immediate annuity under section 8411 of this title if the participant had continued to live and had continued to be a participant until such date.

"(3) The amount of the survivor annuity payable under paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection to the surviving spouse of a deceased participant shall be equal to 50 percent of the annuity computed with respect to the deceased participant pursuant to sections 8413, 8414, and 8415 of this title as if the participant had retired from Government employment on the day before the date of death and had elected the method of payment described in section 8416(a)(2)(B) of this title.

"(b)(1) If a former participant dies entitled to a deferred annuity under section 8412 of this title before payment of an annuity under subchapter II of this chapter to the former participant commences, the surviving spouse of the deceased former participant is entitled to a survivor annuity payable out of the Fund.

"(2) The amount of the survivor annuity payable under paragraph (1) of this subsection to the surviving spouse of a deceased former participant shall be equal to 50 percent of the annuity which the deceased former participant would have been entitled to receive under such section if the deceased former participant—

"(A) had been 55 years of age on the day before the date of death, or

"(B) in the case of a former participant who was 55 years of age or older on such day and was not receiving such annuity, had commenced to receive such deferred annuity on such day, computed under sections 8413, 8414, and 8415 of this title.

"§ 8432. Basic plan spousal and insurable interest benefits relating to the death of an annuitant

"A survivor annuity shall be paid out of the Fund with respect to a deceased annuitant—

"(1) in accordance with the method of payment elected by the annuitant under section 8416 of this title;

"(2) as provided in subsection (b)(3) of such section; or

"(3) in accordance with an election made by the annuitant under section 8434(a) or 8436(c) of this title.

"§ 8433. Survivor benefits under the thrift savings plan

"(a) A survivor annuity shall be paid out of the Thrift Savings Fund with respect to a deceased annuitant as provided under a method of payment of annuities elected by the annuitant under section 8424(b) of this title or in accordance with an election made by the annuitant under section 8434(a) or 8436(c) of this title. The amount of the survivor annuity shall be determined on an actuarial basis under regulations prescribed by the Board.

"(b)(1) Except as provided in subsection (d) of this section, the amount in the account established and maintained for a deceased participant or deceased former participant (other than a deceased annuitant) pursuant to section 8428(a) of this title, determined on the date of an election under subsection (c) of this section, shall, subject to the limits of the entitlement set out in section 8422(a)(1) of this title (without regard to section 8422(a)(2) of this title), be paid as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection.

"(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, payment under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be made to the surviving spouse of the deceased participant or former participant pursuant to the method elected under subsection (c) of this section.

"(B) If a deceased participant or former participant referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection is not survived by a spouse, payment under such paragraph shall be made to—

"(i) any individual who has an insurable interest in the participant or former participant and has been designated by the participant for the purpose of such paragraph under regulations prescribed by the Board; or

"(ii) if the deceased participant or former participant did not make a designation as provided in clause (i) of this subparagraph, to the estate of the deceased participant or former participant.

"(c) A surviving spouse entitled to payment of benefits under subsection (b) of this section may elect—

"(1) to receive an annuity from the Fund payable monthly for life;

"(2) to transfer the amount referred to in such subsection to an individual retirement account (within the meaning of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) of the surviving spouse; or

"(3) to withdraw such amount in one or more payments.

"(d) Any amount required for the payment of a survivor annuity with respect to a deceased participant or deceased former participant out of the Thrift Savings Fund pursuant to section 8435 of this title shall be deducted and withheld from a distribution made with respect to the deceased participant or deceased former participant pursuant to subsection (b) of this section. The amount deducted and withheld shall be maintained in the Thrift Savings Fund until expended in payment of the survivor annuity or until the survivor annuity terminates. Any sums remaining from the amount deducted and withheld after the termination of the survivor annuity, plus net earnings realized from investment of such amount, shall be distributed as provided in subsection (b) of this section.

"§ 8434. Basic and thrift savings plan survivor benefits relating to marriage after commencement of an annuity

"(a) If an annuitant—

"(1) is married on the date that the annuitant applies for payment of an annuity under subchapter II of this chapter to commence, the marriage terminates, and the annuitant remarries, or

"(2) is not married on such date and marries after such date, the annuitant may irrevocably elect during the later marriage to provide an annuity for such annuitant's spouse under the method of payment described in section 8416(a)(2)(B) or subparagraph (B) or (D) of section 8424(a)(2) of this title. An election under this subparagraph shall be made in a signed writing received by the Office within 2 years after the date of the remarriage or marriage, as the case may be.

"(b) An election under subsection (a) of this section shall be effective the first day of the second month beginning after the election is received by the Office (in the case of a survivor annuity payable out of the Fund) or the Executive Director (in the case of a survivor annuity payable out of the Thrift Savings Fund), but not earlier than 9 months after the date of the remarriage referred to in paragraph (1) of such subsection or the date of the marriage referred to in paragraph (2) of such subsection.

"(c) An annuitant making an election under subsection (a) of this section to provide a survivor annuity payable out of the Fund shall, within 2 years after the date of the remarriage referred to in paragraph (1) of such subsection or the date of the marriage referred to in paragraph (2) of such subsection, deposit in the Fund an amount determined by the Office, as nearly as may be administratively feasible, to reflect the amount by which the annuity of such annuitant would have been reduced if the election had been in effect since—

"(1) the date that payment of an annuity to the annuitant under subchapter II of this chapter commenced, or

"(2) if the annuity had previously been reduced to provide for a survivor annuity under section 8432 of this title, the date the previous reduction in such annuitant's annuity was terminated under section 8415(b) of this title, plus interest computed as provided in section 8438(a) of this title.

"(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, an election under this section may not be made for the purpose of providing a survivor annuity payable from the Fund to a spouse of an annuitant by remarriage if—

"(A) such spouse was married to the annuitant on the date that payment of an annuity to the annuitant under subchapter II of this chapter commenced; and

"(B) rights to survivor benefits for such spouse based on marriage to such annuitant were then waived under section 8416(b)(2) of this title.

"§ 8435. Survivor benefits for eligible former spouses: entitlement; amount

"(a) Subject to subsections (b) through (g) of this section, an eligible former spouse of a deceased participant or deceased former participant who dies entitled to an immediate or deferred annuity under section 8411 or 8412 of this title is entitled to a survivor annuity under this section if and to the extent that—

"(1) an election under section 8436 of this title,

"(2) any court decree dissolving or annulling the marriage of the participant or former participant and the eligible former spouse, or

"(3) any court order or court-approved property settlement agreement incident to such decree, expressly provides for such survivor annuity.

"(b)(1) The amount of the survivor annuity payable from the Fund to an eligible former spouse of a deceased participant or deceased former participant under this section may not exceed the excess, if any, of—

"(A) the amount applicable in the case of such eligible former spouse, as determined under paragraph (2) of this subsection, over

"(B) the amount of all other survivor annuities payable from the Fund under this section to other eligible former spouses of the participant or former participant based on the order of precedence provided in subsection (d) of this section.

"(2) For the purposes of paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection, the amount applicable in the case of an eligible former spouse of a deceased participant or deceased former participant is the amount—

"(A) which is equal to 50 percent of the amount of the deceased former participant's annuity payable to the former participant on the day before the date of the former participant's death, if the deceased former participant was an annuitant on such day;

"(B) which would be applicable under paragraph (3) of section 8431(a) of this title in the case of a surviving spouse of the deceased, if the deceased was a participant described in paragraph (1) or (2) of such section 8431(a); or

"(C) which would be applicable under paragraph (2) of section 8431(b) of this title in the case of a surviving spouse of the deceased, if the deceased was a former participant described in paragraph (1) of such section 8431(b).

"(c) The total amount of all survivor annuities payable from the Thrift Savings Fund to eligible former spouses of a deceased participant or deceased former participant pursuant to this section may not exceed the amount of the survivor annuities that would be payable to the former spouses out of 100 percent of the balance in the account of the deceased participant or deceased former participant, plus anticipated net earnings from investments allocable to such account, determined on an actuarial basis in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Board.

"(d) If more than one eligible former spouse is entitled to a survivor annuity pursuant to this section, the amount of each such survivor annuity shall be limited appropriately to carry out subsection (b) or (c) of this section on a first-come, first-served basis determined by reference to the date an election is properly made pursuant to section 8436 of this title or the date the Director or Executive Director, as the case may be, properly receives a copy of the court decree, order, or court-approved agreement applicable to the entitlement.

"(e) The commencement and termination dates of a survivor annuity payable under this section to an eligible former spouse of a deceased participant or deceased former participant shall be the commencement and termination dates determined under the provisions of the applicable court order, decree, or agreement or an election, as the case may be (if provided in such order, decree, agreement, or election), except that any such survivor annuity—

"(1) shall not commence before—

"(A) the day after the participant or former participant dies, or

"(B) the first day of the second month beginning after the date on which the Office receives written notice of the court order, decree, or agreement or the election, as the case may be, together with such additional information or documentation as the Office may prescribe, whichever is later, and

"(2) shall terminate not later than the date provided in section 8464(b)(2) of this title.

"(f) For the purposes of this section, a court decree, order, or agreement or an election referred to in subsection (a) of this section shall not be effective, in the case of a survivor annuity payable out of the Fund to a former spouse, to the extent that the election is inconsistent with any joint waiver previously executed with respect to such former spouse under section 8416(b)(2) of this title.

"(g) Any payment under this section to a person bars recovery by any other person.

"§ 8436. Survivor benefits for former spouses: elections, deposits and collections, and administrative provisions

"(a)(1) If an annuitant has an eligible former spouse on the date that the annuitant applies for payment of an annuity to the annuitant under subchapter II of this chapter to commence, the annuitant may elect, under procedures prescribed by the Office, to provide a survivor annuity for such former spouse under section 8435 of this title. An election under this paragraph shall be made on such date or, if later, within 2 years after the date on which the marriage of the former spouse to the annuitant was dissolved or annulled. The election shall specify the amount of the survivor annuity to be provided under this paragraph.

"(2) If an annuitant makes an election under paragraph (1) of this subsection to provide a survivor annuity payable out of the Fund and the annuitant makes the election during the 2-year period referred to in such paragraph, the annuitant shall deposit in the Fund, within such period, an amount determined by the Office, as nearly as may be administratively feasible, to reflect the amount by which the annuity of such an annuitant would have been reduced if the election had been continuously in effect since the date the annuity commenced, plus interest computed as provided in section 8438(a) of this title.

"(3) An election under paragraph (1) of this subsection—

"(A) shall not be effective to the extent that it conflicts with—

"(i) any court decree or order referred to in subsection (a) of section 8435 of this title, or

"(ii) any agreement referred to in such subsection, which is received by the Office before the date on which such election is made;

"(B) shall not be effective to the extent that the amount of the annuity specified in the election exceeds—

"(i) in the case of a survivor annuity payable from the Fund, the amount determined pursuant to subsections (b)(2) and (d) of section 8435 of this title; or

"(ii) in the case of a survivor annuity payable from the Thrift Savings Fund, the amount determined pursuant to subsections (c) and (d) of section 8435 of this title; and

"(C) shall not be effective, in the case of an annuitant who is married on the date of the election, unless the election is made with the written consent of the annuitant's spouse.

"(b) An annuitant who has elected to provide a survivor annuity for an eligible former spouse pursuant to subsection (a) of this section may make an election to provide or increase a survivor annuity for any other eligible former spouse of the annuitant within the same period that, and subject to the same conditions under which, an election could be made under subsection (c) of this section for a spouse of the annuitant (subject to the provisions of subsection (a)(3)(C) of this section relating to the consent of a spouse, if the annuitant is then married). The opportunity to make an election under the preceding sentence is in addition to any opportunity otherwise provided under this subsection.

"(c) If the entitlement of an eligible former spouse of an annuitant to a survivor annuity under this subchapter is terminated or reduced by reason of the remarriage or death of the former spouse, the annuitant may elect, in a signed writing received by the Office (in the case of a survivor annuity to be paid out of the Fund) or the Executive Director (in the case of a survivor annuity to be paid out of the Thrift Savings Fund) within 2 years after the former spouse's date of death or remarriage, as the case may be, to provide a survivor annuity under the method described in section 8416(a)(2)(B) of this title (in the case of a terminated or reduced entitlement payable out of the Fund) or in subparagraph (B) or (D) of section 8424(a)(2) of this title (in the case of a terminated or reduced entitlement payable from the Thrift Savings Fund).

"(d) The requirement that the spouse of an annuitant waive a right to a survivor annuity under this subchapter as a condition for an election authorized by subsection (a)(3)(C) of this section shall not apply if the participant or annuitant establishes to the satisfaction of the Office that—

"(1) the spouse's whereabouts cannot reasonably be determined; or

"(2) due to exceptional circumstances, it would be inappropriate to require the participant or annuitant to obtain the spouse's consent.

"§ 8437. Termination of entitlement

"(a) An election of an annuitant to provide a survivor annuity to the annuitant's spouse under this subchapter terminates on the first day of the first month beginning after—

"(1) the date of the death of the spouse; or

"(2) the date of the dissolution of the spouse's marriage to the annuitant.

"(b) The entitlement of an eligible former spouse of a former participant to a survivor annuity under section 8435(a) of this title terminates on the first day of the first month beginning after—

"(1) the date of the death of the former spouse; or

"(2) the date the former spouse remarries before becoming 55 years of age.

"§ 8438. Deposits to the Fund

"(a) For the purposes of section 8434(c) or 8436(a)(2) of this title, the annual rate of interest for each year during which an annuity would have been reduced if the election referred to in such section had been in effect on and after the applicable date referred to in such section shall be the percent determined for such year under section 8334(e) of this title.

"(b) If an annuitant does not make a deposit required by section 8434(c) or 8436(a)(2) of this title, the Office shall collect such amount by offset against the annuitant's annuity payable from the Fund, up to a maximum of 25 percent of the net annuity otherwise payable to the annuitant. The annuitant is deemed to consent to such offset.

"(c) The Office may extend the time limit for making a deposit required by section 8434(c) or 8436(a)(2) of this title in any case for good cause shown.

"SUBCHAPTER V—DISABILITY BENEFITS

"§ 8441. Definitions

"For the purposes of this subchapter—

"(1) the term 'administrator of benefits' means an insurance company or other entity which—

"(A) offers claims payment services and related administrative services under benefit plans provided by employers in the private sector; and

"(B) has entered into a contract with the Office pursuant to section 8450 of this title;

"(2) the term 'disability benefits under the Social Security Act' means disability insurance benefits payable under section 223 of the Social Security Act or benefits payable under section 202 of such Act by reason of being under a disability;

"(3) the term 'disability date', when used with respect to an eligible participant, means the date the eligible participant became disabled;

"(4) the term 'disabled', when used with respect to an eligible participant, means that the eligible participant—

"(A) is under a disability within the meaning of section 223 of the Social Security Act; or

"(B) is unable, because of disease or injury, to render useful and efficient service in the participant's position and is not qualified for reassignment, under procedures prescribed by the Office, to a vacant position—

"(i) which is in the participant's employing agency and is in the participant's commuting area;

"(ii) which is at the same grade or pay level as the participant's position; and

"(iii) in which the participant would be able to render useful and efficient service;

"(5) the term 'eligible participant' means an employee or Member whose service exceeds 18 months and—

"(A) who—

"(i) has applied for disability benefits under the Social Security Act and has been determined to be under a disability for the purposes of title II of the Social Security Act; or

"(ii) in the case of an employee or Member who is not entitled to disability benefits under the Social Security Act by reason of insufficient quarters of coverage, has been determined by an administrator of benefits to be disabled within the meaning of paragraph (4)(A) of this section on the basis of a report of examination required by section 8445 of this title; or

"(B) who has been determined by an administrator of benefits to be disabled within the meaning of paragraph (4)(B) of this section on the basis of a report of examination required by section 8445 of this title;

"(6) the term 'onset average pay', when used with respect to a disabled eligible participant, means the participant's average pay on the participant's disability date increased on January 1 of each year after such date by the same percent by which annuities referred to in paragraph (1) of section 8462(b) of this title are increased under such section 8462(b) in December of the preceding year, and compounded; and

"(7) the term 'projected service', when used with respect to a disabled eligible participant, means the sum of the number of years of service performed by the participant before the participant's disability date and the number of years, if any, after such date and before the date the participant becomes—

"(A) in the case of an eligible participant referred to in subparagraph (5)(A) of this section, 62 years of age; or

"(B) in the case of an eligible participant referred to in subparagraph (5)(B) of this section, 55 years of age.

"§ 8442. Entitlement

"(a)(1) A person who is an eligible participant, is disabled, and has used all sick leave accrued and accumulated under subchapter I of chapter 63 of this title or any other similar applicable provision of law relating to Government employment is entitled to receive disability benefits under this subchapter while—

"(A) in the case of a person who is disabled within the meaning of section 8441(4)(A) of this title, such person is under 62 years of age; and

"(B) in the case of a person who is disabled within the meaning of section 8441(4)(B) of this title, such person is under 55 years of age.

"(2) When a person referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection exceeds the maximum age at which the person is qualified for benefits under such paragraph, the person shall be treated as an eligible participant for the purposes of entitlement to benefits under subsection (b) of this section.

"(b)(1) An eligible participant who—

"(A) is disabled within the meaning of section 8441(4)(A) of this title and is not less than 62 years of age, or

"(B) is disabled within the meaning of section 8441(4)(B) of this title and is not less than 55 years of age, and who has 5 or more years of service and projected service shall be entitled to an annuity as provided in subchapter II of this title.

"(2) For the purposes of applying the provisions of subchapter II of this title in the case of an eligible participant pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection—

"(A) the eligible participant shall be deemed to have separated from Government employment on the day before the date the participant becomes entitled to an annuity pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection;

"(B) the service of the participant shall include the participant's projected service; and

"(C) the participant's average pay shall be equal to the participant's onset average pay.

"§ 8443. Computation of benefits

"(a) The annual rate of the disability benefits payable under section 8442(a) of this title to an eligible participant referred to in section 8441(5)(A) of this title shall be equal to the excess of 60 percent of the participant's onset average pay over the amount, if any, payable to the participant as disability benefits under the Social Security Act.

"(b) The annual rate of the disability benefits payable under section 8442(a) of this title to an eligible participant referred to in section 8441(5)(B) of this title—

"(1) during the period ending 1 year after the eligible participant's disability date, shall be equal to the excess of 60 percent of the participant's onset average pay over the amount, if any, payable to the participant as disability benefits under the Social Security Act; and

"(2) after such period, while the participant is under 55 years of age, shall be equal to the excess of 40 percent of the participant's onset average pay over the amount, if any, payable to the participant as disability benefits under the Social Security Act.

"§ 8444. Application

"(a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, a claim of a participant for disability benefits under this subchapter may be allowed only if the participant files with the appropriate administrator of benefits an application for the disability benefits before the date the participant separates from Government employment or within 1 year after such date.

"(b) An appropriate administrator of benefits may waive the time limitation set out in subsection (a) of this section in the case of a participant if—

"(1) the administrator of benefits determines that the participant was mentally incompetent on the date the participant separated from Government employment or within 1 year after such date; and

"(2) the application for disability benefits is filed within 1 year after the date the participant is restored to mental competency or the date a fiduciary is appointed to manage the financial affairs of the participant, whichever date is earlier.

"§ 8445. Medical examinations

"(a) A participant applying for or receiving disability benefits under section 8442(a) of this title shall be examined by a physician under the direction of the appropriate administrator of benefits at such times as such administrator may require.

"(b) A physician examining a participant under subsection (a) of this section shall report to the appropriate administrator of benefits the diagnosis and prognosis with respect to such participant.

"(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of this subchapter, any participant who fails to submit to the examination required under subsection (a) of this section shall not be entitled to disability benefits.

"§ 8446. Offers of alternative employment

"(a)(1) Any participant who is applying for disability benefits under this subchapter, is examined pursuant to section 8445 of this title, and is determined on the basis of the examination to be able to perform the work required in any position described in paragraph (2) of this subsection shall be considered for appointment to such position.

"(2) A position referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection is a position which is in the agency of the Government employing the participant referred to in such paragraph, is a position for which the participant is qualified, is not lower than the grade or pay level of the participant's position, and is within the participant's commuting area.

"(b) Any participant who is appointed to or offered a position under subsection (a) of this section is entitled to appeal to the Merit Systems Protection Board under section 7701 of this title any determination that the participant is able to perform the work required of such position.

"§ 8447. Recovery or restoration of earning capacity

"(a)(1) If an administrator of benefits determines that an individual who is receiving disability benefits under this subchapter has recovered from the disability before becoming 62 years of age (in the case of an individual who is disabled within the meaning of section 8441(4)(A) of this title) or 55 years of age (in the case of an individual who is disabled within the meaning of section 8441(4)(B) of this title), payment of the benefits shall terminate on the date the individual is reemployed by the Government or 1 year after the date of the medical examination on which such administrator's determination is based, whichever date is earlier.

"(2)(A) Payment of disability benefits to any individual under this chapter that has been terminated pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be resumed if there is a recurrence of the individual's disability, as determined by an administrator of benefits after a medical examination of the individual, and the individual is under 62 years of age (in the case of an individual who is disabled within the meaning of section 8441(4)(A) of this title) or under 55 years of age (in the case of an individual who is disabled within the meaning of section 8441(4)(B) of this title).

"(B) A resumption of payment of disability benefits under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph shall be effective on the date the medical examination referred to in such paragraph was completed.

"(C) The annual rate of the disability benefits payable to an individual upon resumption of payment under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph shall be the annual rate that would have been payable to the individual if payment of disability benefits had not been terminated pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(b)(1) If the administrator of benefits determines that an individual who is receiving disability benefits under this subchapter has received, during the latest calendar year, income from wages or self-employment or both totalling the amount equal to 60 percent of the rate of pay payable for the individual's position of Government employment on the individual's disability date determined for the purposes of this subchapter (increased as if such rate of pay had been increased, by the same percent as the overall percent increase in the rates of pay under the General Schedule, each time such rates had been increased pursuant to section 5305 of this title since such date), payment of the benefits shall terminate on the date 60 days after the end of such calendar year.

"(2)(A) If payment of disability benefits under this subchapter has been terminated pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection in the case of an individual who is not reemployed in a position subject to this chapter, who continues to be disabled, who is under 62 years of age (in the case of an individual who is disabled within the meaning of section 8441(4)(A) of this title) or under 55 years of age (in the case of an individual who is disabled within the meaning of section 8441(4)(B) of this title), and who receives in the calendar year in which the disability benefits were terminated, or any calendar year after such year, income from wages or self-employment or both totalling less than the amount computed in such case as provided in such paragraph, payment of disability benefits to the individual under this subchapter shall be resumed.

"(B) A resumption of payment of disability benefits to an individual under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph shall be effective the first day of the first year beginning after the year in which the individual received the income referred to in such subparagraph.

"(C) The annual rate of the disability benefits payable to an individual upon resumption of payment of disability benefits under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph shall be the annual rate that would have been payable to the individual if payment had not been terminated pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(c) Any determination under this section may be appealed to the Office. A determination of the Office in such an appeal may be appealed to the Merit Systems Protection Board under section 7701 of this title. The Merit Systems Protection Board may hear and adjudicate any such appeal.

"§ 8448. Relationship to workers' compensation

"(a)(1) An individual is not entitled to receive disability benefits under this subchapter and compensation for injury to or disability of the individual under subchapter I of chapter 81 of this title covering the same period of time.

"(2) Paragraph (1) of this subsection does not bar the right of a claimant to the greater benefit conferred by either subchapter referred to in such paragraph for any part of the period referred to in such paragraph.

"(3) Paragraph (1) of this subsection and the provisions of subchapter I of chapter 81 of this title do not deny an individual an annuity which the individual is entitled to receive under this chapter on account of service performed by the individual and do not deny any concurrent benefit to the individual under subchapter I of chapter 81 of this title on account of the death of another individual.

"(b)(1) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, an individual's receipt of a lump-sum payment for compensation under section 8135 of this title shall not affect the individual's entitlement to disability benefits under this subchapter.

"(2) If disability benefits are payable under this subchapter by reason of the same disability for which a lump-sum payment of compensation referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection has been made, so much of the compensation as has been paid for a period extended beyond the date payment of the disability benefits commences, as determined by the Department of Labor, shall be refunded to that Department for credit to the Employees' Compensation Fund. Before the individual may receive the disability benefits, the individual shall—

"(A) refund to the Department of Labor the amount representing the commuted compensation payments for the extended period; or

"(B) authorize the deduction of the amount from the disability benefits.

Deductions from the disability benefits may be made from accrued or accruing payments. The amounts deducted and withheld from disability benefits shall be transmitted to the Department of Labor for reimbursement to the Employees' Compensation Fund. When the Department of Labor finds that the financial circumstances of an individual entitled to disability benefits under this subchapter warrant deferred refunding under this paragraph, deductions from the disability benefits may be prorated against and paid from accruing payments in such manner as the Department determines appropriate.

"§ 8449. Military reserve technicians

"(a)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, a participant shall be entitled to disability benefits under this subchapter in the same manner as an eligible participant described in section 8441(5)(B) of this title if the participant—

"(A) is separated from employment as a military reserve technician by reason of a disability that disqualifies the individual from membership in a reserve component of the Armed Forces specified in section 261(a) of title 10 or from holding the military grade required for such employment:

"(B) is not considered disabled;

"(C) is not appointed to another position in the Government (under subsection (b) of this section or otherwise); and

"(D) has not declined an offer of appointment to a position in the Government under subsection (b) of this section.

"(2) Payment of disability benefits to an individual under this section terminates—

"(A) on the date the individual is appointed to a position in the Government (under subsection (b) of this section or otherwise);

"(B) on the date the individual declines an offer of appointment to a position in the Government pursuant to subsection (b) of this section; or

"(C) as provided in section 8447(a) or 8447(b) of this title.

"(b) Any individual applying for or receiving disability benefits pursuant to this section shall, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Office, be considered by any agency of the Government before any vacant position in the agency is filled if—

"(1) the position is located within the commuting area of the individual's former position;

"(2) the individual is qualified to serve in the vacant position; and

"(3) the position is at the same grade or equivalent level as the position from which the individual was separated.

"§ 8450. Administrative provisions

"(a) For the purpose of this section, the term 'State' means a State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and a territory or possession of the United States.

"(b) The Office shall enter into a contract with one or more insurance companies or other entities described in section 8441(1)(A) of this title to provide long-term group disability insurance benefits under this subchapter and to administer the provisions of this subchapter which the Office is not specifically required by this chapter to administer. Each such company or other entity shall meet the following requirements:

"(1) It must be licensed to transact insurance under the laws of a State.

"(2) It must have in effect, on the most recent December 31 for which information is available to the Office, an amount of employee group disability insurance equal to at least 1 percent of the total amount of employee group disability insurance in the United States in all insurance companies.

"(c) A contractor under a contract awarded under subsection (b) of this section shall establish an administrative office under a name approved by the Office.

"(d) Each contract awarded by the Office under subsection (b) of this section may remain in effect for a period not exceeding 5 years and may include a provision authorizing extension of the contract, with the consent of the contractor, for successive periods of 1 year each.

"(e) The Director may include in contracts awarded under subsection (b) of this section such terms and conditions as he considers appropriate to protect the interests of participants and the United States.

"(f) All records established or maintained by an administrator of benefits in the administration of this subchapter shall be the property of the United States. The administrator of benefits shall deliver such records to the Office whenever requested by the Office.

"(g) The provisions of any contract under this subchapter which relate to the nature or extent of coverage or benefits (including payments with respect to benefits) shall supersede and preempt any law of any State or political subdivision thereof, or any regulation issued thereunder, which relates to group disability insurance to the extent that the law or regulation is inconsistent with the contractual provisions.

"(h) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall furnish to the Office and an administrator of benefits such information, including information on individuals claiming entitlement to benefits under this subchapter, as the Office determines to be necessary to carry out this subchapter.

"§ 8451. Annual accounting; special contingency reserve

"A contract awarded under section 8450 of this title shall include a provision requiring the administrator of benefits under the contract to transmit an accounting to the Office not later than 90 days after the end of each policy year. The accounting shall set forth, in a form approved by the Office—

"(1) the total of all claim charges incurred for the contract year; and

"(2) the amounts of the expenses of the administrator of benefits charged for the contract year.

"§ 8452. Federal Employees' Disability Insurance Fund

"(a) There is established in the Treasury of the United States a fund to be known as the 'Federal Employees' Disability Insurance Fund'.

"(b)(1) Each agency of the Government employing participants shall make periodic payments to the Federal Employees' Disability Insurance Fund in the amount of the portion of the premium payable for the applicable period (as determined by the Office) which is attributable to such participants, as determined by the Office and the appropriate administrator of benefits.

"(2) An employing agency shall pay the amounts required by paragraph (1) of this subsection from the appropriation or fund available for payment of the basic pay or salaries of employees of the agency. In the case of a participant in the legislative branch who is paid by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, the amount shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

"(c) Sums in the Federal Employees' Disability Insurance Fund shall be available without fiscal year limitation for the payment of premiums for long-term group disability insurance under this subchapter.

"(d) The Secretary of the Treasury may invest and reinvest any of the money in the Federal Employees' Disability Insurance Fund in interest-bearing obligations of the United States and may sell such obligations for the purposes of such fund. The interest on and the proceeds from the sale of these obligations, and the income derived from premium rate adjustments, become a part of such fund.

"(e)(1) No tax, fee, or other monetary payment may be imposed or collected by any State or by any political subdivision or other governmental authority thereof on or with respect to any premium paid for long-term group disability insurance under this subchapter.

"(2) Paragraph (1) of this subsection shall not be construed to exempt any administrator of benefits from the imposition, payment, or collection of a tax, fee, or other monetary payment on the net income or profit accruing to or realized by the administrator from business conducted under this subchapter, if that tax, fee, or payment is applicable to a broad range of business activity.

"SUBCHAPTER VI—GENERAL AND ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

"§ 8461. Authority of the Office of Personnel Management

"(a) The Office shall pay all benefits that are payable under subchapter II of this chapter from the Fund.

"(b) The Office shall administer all provisions of this chapter not specifically required to be administered by the Board, the Executive Director, or any other agency.

"(c) The Office may make regulations to carry out the provisions of this chapter administered by the Office.

"(d) The Office may contract for the performance of any administrative services necessary to carry out its responsibilities under this chapter.

"§ 8462. Cost-of-living adjustment in basic plan annuities and survivor annuities

"(a) For the purpose of this section—

"(1) the term 'base quarter', when used with respect to a year, means the calendar quarter ending on September 30, of such year; and

"(2) the price index for a base quarter is the arithmetic mean of such index for the 3 months comprising such quarter.

"(b)(1) Except as provided in subsection (c) of this section, effective December 1 of each year in which the price index for the base quarter of such year exceeds the price index for the base quarter of the preceding year, each annuity which is payable from the Fund under subchapter II or IV of this chapter and commences not later than such December 1 shall be increased by the percentage computed under paragraph (2) of this subsection.

"(2) The percentage by which an annuity is increased under paragraph (1) of this subsection in any year shall be the excess, if any, of—

"(A) the percentage of the increase in the price index for the base quarter of such year over the price index of the preceding year, over

"(B) 2 percent.

"(c)(1) The first increase (if any) made under subsection (b) of this section to an annuity payable to a participant who retires, to the surviving spouse or surviving former spouse of a deceased participant, or to the surviving spouse or surviving former spouse of a deceased annuitant whose annuity has never been increased under this subsection or subsection (b) of this section shall be equal to the product (adjusted to the nearest one-tenth of 1 percent) of—

"(A) one-twelfth of the applicable percentage of the adjustment computed under subsection (b) of this section, multiplied by

"(B)(i) the number of months (counting any portion of a month as a month) for which the annuity was payable before the effective date of the increase, or

"(ii) in the case of a survivor annuity payable to a surviving spouse or surviving former spouse of a deceased annuitant whose annuity has never been so increased, the number of months (counting any portion of a month as a month) since the annuity was first payable to the deceased annuitant.

"(2) Effective on its commencing date, an annuity referred to in subsection (b) of this section and payable to an annuitant's surviving spouse or surviving former spouse shall be increased by the total percentage by which the deceased annuitant's annuity had been increased under this section during the period beginning on the date the deceased annuitant's annuity commenced and ending on the date of the deceased annuitant's death.

"(d) The monthly installment of an annuity payable after adjustment under this section shall be rounded to the next lowest dollar, but the increase in the monthly installment under this section shall be at least $1.

"§ 8463. Rate of benefits

"Each annuity and disability benefit is stated as an annual amount, one-twelfth of which, fixed at the next lowest dollar, constitutes the monthly rate payable on the first business day of the first month beginning after the last day of the month for which the annuity or disability benefit has accrued.

"§ 8464. Commencement and termination of annuities

"(a)(1) Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, the annuity of a participant under subchapter II of this chapter shall commence on the first day of the first month beginning after—

"(A) the date the participant separates from Government employment entitled to an immediate annuity under section 8411 of this title, or

"(B) in the case of a participant who is entitled to a deferred annuity under section 8412 of this title and is not entitled to an immediate annuity under section 8411 of this title, the date elected by the participant under section 8412(a) of this title or the date the participant becomes 62 years of age, whichever is earlier, as the case may be.

"(2) The annuity of an annuitant under this chapter terminates on the date of death or other terminating event provided by law.

"(b)(1) Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, a survivor annuity payable to an individual under this chapter shall commence on the first day of the first month beginning after the date of the death of the deceased participant or former participant on whose death such annuity is based.

"(2) A survivor annuity payable to a surviving spouse or an eligible former spouse of a deceased participant or deceased former participant under this chapter terminates on the last day of the last month ending before the surviving spouse or former spouse dies or, if the surviving spouse or former spouse is less than 55 years of age, remarries.

"§ 8465. Waiver, allotment, and assignment of benefits

"(a) An individual entitled to receive payment of benefits under subchapter II of this chapter may decline to accept all or any part of the amount of the benefits by a waiver signed and filed with the Office. The waiver may be revoked in writing at any time. Payment of the benefits waived may not be made for the period during which the waiver is in effect.

"(b) An individual entitled to receive payment of benefits under subchapter II of this chapter may make allotments or assignments of amounts from the benefits for such purposes as the Office considers appropriate.

"§ 8466. Application for benefits

"(a) No payment of benefits based on the service of a former participant shall be made under this chapter unless an application for payment of the benefits is received by the Office before the one hundred and fifteenth anniversary of the former participant's birth.

"(b) Notwithstanding subsection (a) of this section, after the death of a participant or former participant, a benefit based on the participant's or former participant's service shall not be paid under subchapter IV of this chapter unless an application therefor is received by the Office within 30 years after the death or other event which establishes the entitlement to the benefit.

"§ 8467. Court orders

"(a) Payments under this chapter which would otherwise be made to a participant or former participant based upon the service of the participant or former participant shall be paid (in whole or in part) by the Office or the Executive Director, as the case may be, to another person if and to the extent that the terms of any court decree of divorce, annulment, or legal separation, or the terms of any court order or court-approved property settlement agreement incident to any court decree of divorce, annulment, or legal separation expressly provide. Any payment under this paragraph to a person bars recovery by any other person.

"(b) Subsection (a) of this section shall apply only to payments made by the Office or the Executive Director under this chapter after the date on which the Office or the Executive Director, as the case may be, receives written notice of such decree, order, or agreement, and such additional information and documentation as the Office or the Executive Director may require.

"§ 8468. Annuities and pay on reemployment

"(a) If an annuitant becomes employed in an appointive or elective position in the Government, payment of any annuity under subchapter II of this chapter to the annuitant terminates effective on the date of the employment, and the annuitant's service on and after the date the annuitant becomes so employed is covered by this chapter. Upon termination of the employment, the rights of the annuitant under subchapter II of this chapter shall be redetermined. If the annuitant dies while still so employed, a survivor annuity payable with respect to the deceased annuitant shall be redetermined as if the employment had otherwise terminated on the date of death.

"(b) The amount of an annuity resulting from a redetermination of rights under this chapter pursuant to subsection (a) of this section shall not be less than the amount of the terminated annuity plus any increases under section 8462 of this title occurring after the termination of the annuity and before the commencement of the redetermined annuity.

"SUBCHAPTER VII—TRANSITION PROVISIONS

"§ 8471. Treatment of certain individuals subject to the Civil Service Retirement and Disability System

"(a)(1)(A) Any individual who is subject to subchapter III of chapter 83 of this title as an employee (as defined in section 8331(1) of this title, other than an individual employed by the government of the District of Columbia) or a Member (as defined in section 8331(2) of this title), whose service is not employment for the purposes of title II of the Social Security Act and chapter 21 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, and who is not required by section 8402 of this title to be a participant may elect to commence participation in the System.

"(B) An election made under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph shall be made in writing, in accordance with such regulations as the Office may prescribe, and not later than December 31, 1987, or, in the case of an individual who becomes an employee or Member after a break in service for a period that includes January 1, 1987, not later than 1 year after the date on which the individual resumes service.

"(2) Except as provided in section 8472(d) of this title, any individual who makes the election authorized by paragraph (1) of this subsection shall retain accrued credit for entitlement to benefits under subchapter III of chapter 83 of title 5, United States Code, for service performed while subject to such subchapter.

"(3) An individual referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection who becomes an employee or Member after a break in service for a period that includes January 1, 1987, may make deposits under section 8334 of this title for service performed before such date while subject to subchapter III of chapter 83 of this title.

"(b) Except as provided in section 8472(d) of this title, any individual who—

"(1) has an unrefunded lump-sum credit in the Fund under subchapter III of chapter 83 of this title,

"(2) is required by section 8402 of this title to be a participant, and

"(3) is not a participant referred to in section 8473(a) of this title, shall retain accrued credit for entitlement to benefits under such subchapter for service performed while subject to such subchapter.

"(c) Except as provided in section 8472(d) of this title, any individual who—

"(1) has received a refund of a lump-sum credit in the Fund under subchapter III of chapter 83 of this title,

"(2) is required by section 8402 of this title to be a participant, and

"(3) is not a participant referred to in section 8473(a) of this title, may make deposits under section 8334 of this title for service performed before January 1, 1987, while subject to subchapter III of chapter 83 of this title and shall, upon making such deposits, be entitled to credit under such subchapter for service covered by the deposits.

"(d) Survivor benefits shall be payable as provided in subchapter III of chapter 83 of this title and this chapter to the extent of the service creditable under such subchapter (pursuant to this section) and this chapter in the case of a participant referred to in subsection (a), (b), or (c) of this section.

"§ 8472. Special rules for participants retaining entitlement in the Civil Service Retirement and Disability System

"(a) Service that is creditable under subchapter III of chapter 83 of this title in the case of an individual who retains entitlement in the Civil Service Retirement and Disability System under section 8471 of this title shall be credited as service under this chapter only—

"(1) for the purposes of determining eligibility to retire entitled to an annuity under section 8411 or 8412 of this title and entitlement for disability benefits under subchapter V of this chapter; and

"(2) for the purpose of considering such service as years of participation in the System for the purposes of section 8422 of this title (relating to vesting under the thrift savings plan).

"(b) Service performed as a participant in the System by an individual referred to in subsection (a) of this section shall be credited under subchapter III of chapter 83 of this title only for the purpose of determining eligibility to retire entitled to an annuity under section 8335, 8336, or 8338 of this title.

"(c)(1) The rates of basic pay in effect for an individual referred to in subsection (a) of this section on and after the date the individual begins to participate in the System shall be taken into account in computing the individual's average pay (as defined in section 8331(4) of this title) for the purposes of subchapter III of chapter 83 of this title.

"(2) The rates of basic pay in effect for an individual referred to in subsection (a) of this section before the date the individual begins to participate in the System shall be taken into account in computing the individual's average pay for the purposes of this chapter.

"(d) Section 8337 of this title (relating to disability retirement) shall not apply in the case of a participant referred to in subsection (a).

"§ 8473. Participants subject to the Federal Employees' Retirement Contribution Temporary Adjustment Act of 1983

"(a)(1) The service of a participant with respect to which a reduced contribution is made under section 204(a) of the Federal Employees' Retirement Contribution Temporary Adjustment Act of 1983 (97 Stat. 1107; 5 U.S.C. 8331 note) shall be credited as service for the purposes of this chapter and shall be considered years of participation in the System for the purposes of section 8422(b)(1) of this title.

"(2) Paragraph (1) of this subsection shall not apply to an individual who serves continuously as a Member of Congress during the period beginning December 31, 1983, and ending January 1, 1987.

"(b)(1) On January 1, 1987, the amount computed under paragraph (2) of this subsection shall be transferred from the Fund to the Thrift Savings Fund in the case of a participant to whom subsection (a)(1) of this section applies. The amount transferred shall be credited to an account established for the individual pursuant to section 8428(a) of this title.

"(2)(A) The amount transferred from the Fund in the case of a participant pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be equal to the sum of—

"(i) two times the total amount deducted and withheld from the basic pay of the participant pursuant to section 204(a) of the Federal Employees' Retirement Contribution Temporary Adjustment Act of 1983 (97 Stat. 1107; 5 U.S.C. 8331 note); and

"(ii) interest on the amount referred to in clause (i) of this subparagraph computed at the annual rate determined under the second sentence of this subparagraph and compounded annually, as if a fraction of such amount (determined as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph) had been deposited to the credit of the Fund at the end of each month for which amounts were deducted and withheld from the basic pay of the participant as described in clause (i) of this subparagraph.

The annual rate referred to in clause (ii) for an amount transferred from the Fund in any calendar year shall be equal to the interest rate determined for such calendar year under section 8334(e) of this title.

"(B) In the case of any participant to whom paragraph (1) of this subsection applies—

"(i) the numerator of the fraction referred to in subparagraph (A)(ii) of this paragraph is one; and

"(ii) the denominator of the fraction is the number of months for which amounts were deducted and withheld from the basic pay of the participant as described in subparagraph (A)(i) of this paragraph.

"(3) For the purposes of section 8422 of this title—

"(A) one-half of the amount computed in the case of a participant referred to in subsection (a) of this section pursuant to paragraph (2) of this subsection shall be treated as a contribution made under section 8421(a) of this title; and

"(B) one-half of such amount shall be treated as a contribution made by the employing agency of the participant pursuant to section 8421(b) of this title.

"(4) All amounts transferred from the Fund pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be transferred in the form of interest-bearing securities of the United States.

"(c) The total amount of any deposit made to the Fund under section 8334(j) of this title (relating to deposits covering periods of military service) in the case of a participant referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be refunded to the participant. The refund shall be paid out of sums in the Fund.

"§ 8474. Reemployed annuitants under a Government retirement system.

"(a) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'annuitant'—

"(A) in the case of the Civil Service Retirement and Disability System, shall have the same meaning provided in section 8331(9) of this title;

"(B) in the case of the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability System, shall have the same meaning provided in section 804(1) of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 (22 U.S.C. 4044(1)), except that such term does not include a survivor; and

"(C) in the case of the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System, means—

"(i) any participant who is referred to in section 203 of the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement Act of 1964 for Certain Employees, and

"(ii) any individual who formerly was such a participant, entitled to an annuity from the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability Fund;

"(2) the term 'Government retirement system' means—

"(A) the Civil Service Retirement and Disability System under subchapter III of chapter 83 of this title;

"(B) the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability System under chapter 8 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 (22 U.S.C. 4041 et seq.); and

"(C) the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System under the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement Act of 1964 for Certain Employees (50 U.S.C. 403 note); and

"(3) the term 'reemployed annuitant' means an annuitant who becomes employed by the Government after the effective date of the Civil Service Pension Reform Act of 1985 and is required by section 8402 of this title to be a participant.

"(b) A reemployed annuitant shall retain entitlement in the Government retirement system under which the annuitant is receiving an annuity.

"(c)(1) Service that is creditable under the Government retirement system of a reemployed annuitant shall be credited under this chapter only for the purpose of determining eligibility to retire entitled to an annuity under section 8411 of this title.

"(2) Service performed as a reemployed annuitant shall not be creditable service for the purposes of the Government retirement system of the reemployed annuitant.

"(d)(1) The rates of basic pay in effect for a reemployed annuitant on and after the date the annuitant begins to participate in the System shall be taken into account in computing the annuitant's average pay for the purposes of the Government retirement system under which the annuitant was receiving an annuity when the reemployment commenced.

"(2) The rates of basic pay in effect for a reemployed annuitant before the date the annuitant begins to participate in the System shall be taken into account in computing the annuitant's average pay for the purposes of this chapter.

"(e) Deductions may not be withheld from the pay of a reemployed annuitant for the purposes of the reemployed annuitant's Government retirement system while the reemployed annuitant is a participant in the System.

"§ 8475. Exemption from certain offset provisions of the Social Security Act

"Sections 202(b)(4), 202(c)(2), 202(e)(7), 202(f)(2), 202(g)(4), and 215(a)(7) of the Social Security Act shall not apply in the case of a person who is a participant referred to in section 8471 of this title.

"§ 8476. Regulations

"The Office may prescribe regulations to carry out this subchapter.

"SUBCHAPTER VIII—CIVIL SERVICE THRIFT INVESTMENT MANAGEMENT SYSTEM

"§ 8491. Civil Service Thrift Investment Board

"(a) There is established in the executive branch of the Government a Civil Service Thrift Investment Board.

"(b)(1) The Board shall be composed of—

"(A) the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board;

"(B) the Secretary of the Treasury;

"(C) the Director; and

"(D) two representatives of Federal employee organizations appointed by the President, one of whom shall be a representative from a labor organization (as defined in section 7103(a)(4) of this title) and one of whom shall be a representative from an organization for employees who are managers.

"(2) If an office referred to in paragraph (1)(A), (1)(B), or (1)(C) of this subsection is vacant, the person acting as the officer in such office shall be a member of the Board while acting as such officer.

"(3) The Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board shall be the Chairman of the Board.

"(4) The members of the Board appointed under paragraph (1)(D) of this subsection shall serve until replaced by the President.

"(c) The Board shall—

"(1) establish policies and prescribe regulations for—

"(A) the investment and management of the Thrift Savings Fund; and

"(B) the administration of subchapter III of this chapter and the provisions of subchapter IV of this chapter which relate to survivor annuities payable out of the Thrift Savings Fund;

"(2) review the performance of investments made for the Thrift Savings Fund;

"(3) without regard to civil service and classification laws, fix the rate of pay of the Executive Director;

"(4) supervise the Executive Director; and

"(5) review and approve the budget of the Board.

"(d)(1) The Board may—

"(A) adopt, alter, and use a seal;

"(B) adopt, amend, and repeal regulations to carry out its functions;

"(C) disapprove any action of the Executive Director;

"(D) except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, direct the Executive Director to take such action as the Board considers appropriate to carry out the provisions of this subchapter and subchapter III of this chapter, the provisions of subchapter IV of this chapter which relate to survivor annuities payable out of the Thrift Savings Fund, and the policies of the Board;

"(E) upon the concurring votes of four members, remove the Executive Director from office for good cause shown; and

"(F) take such other action as may be necessary to carry out the functions of the Board.

"(2) Except in the case of investments required by section 8427 of this title to be invested in securities of the Government, the Board may not direct the Executive Director or any contractor under a contract awarded under section 8493(c)(2) this title to invest or to cause to be invested any sums in the Thrift Savings Fund in a specific asset or to dispose of or cause to be disposed any specific asset of such Fund.

"§ 8492. Civil Service Thrift Advisory Committee

"(a)(1) The Board shall establish a Civil Service Thrift Advisory Committee (hereafter in this subchapter referred to as the 'Advisory Committee').

"(2)(A) The Advisory Committee shall be composed of 6 members appointed as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph.

"(B) The members of the Advisory Committee shall be appointed by action agreed to by a majority of the members of the Board. Three of the members of the Advisory Committee shall be appointed from among investment asset managers not employed by the Government and three of the members of the Advisory Committee shall be appointed from among administrators of thrift savings plans established for employees of private sector enterprises.

"(3) The Board shall prescribe the terms and conditions of service of the members of the Advisory Committee.

"(b) The Advisory Committee shall—

"(1) advise the Board and the Executive Director on matters relating to—

"(A)(i) investment policy for the Thrift Savings Fund;

"(ii) selection of the types of investment funds which are appropriate for investment of sums in the Thrift Savings Fund; and

"(iii) selection of investment managers for the purpose of contracting for the administration of investment funds under section 8493(c)(2) of this title; and

"(B)(i) the performance of the duties of the Board and the Executive Director under the provisions of this subchapter and subchapter III of this chapter and the provisions of subchapter IV of this chapter which relate to survivor annuities payable out of the Thrift Savings Fund; and

"(ii) the administration of such provisions; and

"(2) review the performance of investments made for the Thrift Savings Fund.

"§ 8493. Executive Director

"(a)(1) The Board shall appoint an Executive Director by action agreed to by a majority of the members of the Board. The Executive Director shall have substantial experience, training, or expertise in the management of financial investments.

"(2) The Board shall prescribe the terms and conditions of service of the Executive Director.

"(b) The Executive Director shall—

"(1) carry out the policies established by the Board;

"(2) invest and manage the Thrift Savings Fund in accordance with the investment and other policies established by the Board;

"(3) provide for payment of annuities and other authorized distributions from the Thrift Savings Fund under this chapter; and

"(4) administer the provisions of this subchapter, subchapter III of this chapter, the provisions of subchapter IV of this chapter which relate to survivor annuities payable out of the Thrift Savings Fund, and the regulations prescribed by the Board.

"(c) The Executive Director, may—

"(1) without regard to civil service and classification laws, appoint, employ, and fix the compensation of such personnel as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this subchapter and subchapter III of this chapter and the provisions of subchapter IV of this chapter which relate to survivor annuities payable out of the Thrift Savings Fund;

"(2) enter into such contracts or other arrangements (including contracts for the performance of administrative services), and make such modifications thereof, as may be appropriate to carry out the provisions of this subchapter and section 8427 of this title and the policies of the Board;

"(3) except as provided in section 552a of this title, obtain from any Federal agency, including any independent establishment or instrumentality of the United States, advice, information, estimates, statistics, and such other assistance as the Executive Director considers necessary to carry out the provisions of this subchapter and subchapter III of this chapter, the provisions of subchapter IV of this chapter which relate to survivor annuities payable out of the Thrift Savings Fund, and the policies of the Board;

"(4) make such payments out of sums in the Thrift Savings Fund as the Executive Director determines are necessary to carry out the provisions of this subchapter, subchapter III of this chapter, the provisions of subchapter IV of this chapter which relate to survivor annuities payable out of the Thrift Savings Fund, and the policies of the Board;

"(5) pay the compensation, per diem, and travel expenses of personnel from the Thrift Savings Fund;

"(6) accept and utilize the services of individuals employed intermittently in the Government service and reimburse such individuals for travel expenses, as authorized by section 5703 of this title, including per diem as authorized by section 5702 of this title;

"(7) except as otherwise expressly prohibited by law or the policies of the Board, delegate any of the Executive Director's functions to such officers and employees under the Board as the Executive Director may designate and authorize such successive redelegations of such functions to such officers and employees under the Board as the Executive Director may consider to be necessary or appropriate; and

"(8) take such other actions as are appropriate to carry out the functions of the Executive Director.

"§ 8494. Investment policy

"The Board shall develop investment policies under section 8491(c)(1) of this title which provide for—

"(1) prudent investments suitable for accumulating funds for payment of retirement income;

"(2) investment strategies which do not require a significant level of active investment decisionmaking in the case of the investment funds established under subparagraphs (B) and (C) of section 8427(b)(1) of this title;

"(3) low administrative costs; and

"(4) investments likely to receive broad acceptance by participants and the public.

"§ 8495. Administrative provisions

"(a) The Board shall meet—

"(1) not less than once during each fiscal year; and

"(2) at additional times at the call of the Chairman.

"(b)(1) Except as provided in section 8491(d)(1)(E) of this title, the Board shall perform the functions and exercise the powers of the Board on a majority vote of a quorum of the Board.

"(2) A vacancy on the Board shall not impair the authority of a quorum of the Board to perform the functions and exercise the powers of the Board.

"(c) Three members of the Board shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

"(d)(1) Each member of the Board who is not a Federal employee and each member of the Advisory Committee shall be compensated at the daily rate of basic pay payable for grade GS-18 under the General Schedule for each day or part thereof during which such member is engaged in performing a function of the Board or Advisory Committee, as the case may be.

"(2) Each member of the Board who is not a Federal employee and each member of the Advisory Committee shall be paid travel, per diem, and other necessary expenses under subchapter I of chapter 57 of this title while traveling away from his home or regular place of business in the performance of the duties of the Commission or Advisory Board, as the case may be.

"(e) The accrued annual leave of any employee who is a member of the Board shall not be charged for any time used in performing service for the Board during any work period.

"(f) Section 14(a)(2) of the Federal Advisory Committee Act (86 Stat. 776; 5 U.S.C. App.) shall not apply to the Advisory Committee.

"§ 8496. Fiduciary responsibilities; liability and penalty

"(a) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'fiduciary' means—

"(A) with respect to the Thrift Savings Fund, each member of the Board and the Executive Director; and

"(B) any person who, with respect to the Thrift Savings Fund, is described in section 3(21)(A) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1002(21)(A));

"(2) the term 'party in interest' includes—

"(A) any fiduciary;

"(B) any counsel to a fiduciary;

"(C) any person providing services to the Board or the Executive Director;

"(D) a labor organization the members of which are participants;

"(E) a spouse, ancestor, lineal descendant, or spouse of a lineal descendant of a person described in subclause (A), (B), or (C) of this clause; and

"(F) a corporation, partnership, or trust or estate of which, or in which, 50 percent or more of—

"(i) the combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote or the total value of shares of all classes of stock of such corporation;

"(ii) the capital interest or profits interest of such partnership; or

"(iii) the beneficial interest of such trust or estate, is owned directly or indirectly, or held by a person described in subclause (A), (B), (C), or (E) of this clause; and

"(3) the term 'person' means an individual, partnership, joint venture, corporation, mutual company, joint-stock company, trust, estate, unincorporated organization, association, or labor organization.

"(b)(1) A fiduciary shall discharge his responsibilities with respect to the Thrift Savings Fund or applicable portion thereof solely in the interest of the participants and beneficiaries and—

"(A) for the exclusive purpose of—

"(i) providing benefits to participants and their beneficiaries; and

"(ii) defraying reasonable expenses of administering the Thrift Savings Fund or applicable portions thereof;

"(B) with the care, skill, prudence, and diligence under the circumstances then prevailing that a prudent individual acting in a like capacity and familiar with such matters would use in the conduct of an enterprise of a like character and with like objectives; and

"(C) to the extent permitted by section 8427 of this title, by diversifying the investments of the Thrift Savings Fund or applicable portions thereof so as to minimize the risk of large losses, unless under the circumstances it is clearly prudent not to do so.

"(2) No fiduciary may maintain the indicia of ownership of any assets of the Thrift Savings Fund outside the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States.

"(c) A fiduciary shall not—

"(1) deal with any assets of the Thrift Savings Fund for his own account;

"(2) act, in his individual or any other capacity, in any transaction involving the Thrift Savings Fund on behalf of a party whose interests are adverse to the interests of the Thrift Savings Fund or the interests of its participants or beneficiaries;

"(3) receive any consideration for his own personal account from any party dealing with sums credited to the Thrift Savings Fund in connection with a transaction involving assets of the Thrift Savings Fund, except fees which the fiduciary is entitled to receive as provided in a contract awarded under section 8493(c)(2) of this title;

"(4) permit the transfer of any assets of the Thrift Savings Fund to or the use of such assets by any person known to be a party in interest, except in return for adequate consideration; or

"(5) permit the acquisition of any property from or services by any person known to be a party in interest, except in exchange for adequate consideration.

"(d) This section does not prohibit any fiduciary from—

"(1) receiving any benefit which the fiduciary is entitled to receive under this chapter as a participant, a former participant, or a beneficiary of a participant or former participant;

"(2) receiving any reasonable compensation authorized by this title for services rendered, or for reimbursement of expenses properly and actually incurred, in the performance of the fiduciary's duties under this chapter; or

"(3) serving as a fiduciary in addition to being an officer, employee, agent, or other representative of a party in interest.

"(e)(1)(A) Any fiduciary that breaches the responsibilities, duties, and obligations set out in subsection (b) of this section or violates subsection (c) of this section shall be liable to the Thrift Savings Fund for any losses to such fund resulting from each such breach or violation and to restore to such fund any profits made by the fiduciary through use of assets of such fund by the fiduciary, and shall be subject to such other equitable or remedial relief as a court considers appropriate. A fiduciary may be removed for a breach referred to in the preceding sentence.

"(B) The Attorney General of the United States may assess a civil penalty against a party in interest engaging in a transaction prohibited by subsection (c) of this section. The amount of such penalty may not exceed 5 percent of the amount involved (as defined in section 4975(f)(4) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954); except that, if the transaction is not corrected (in such manner as the Attorney General shall prescribe by regulation consistent with section 4975(f)(5) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) within 90 days after the date the Attorney General transmits notice to the party in interest (or such longer period as the Attorney General may permit), such penalty may be in an amount not more than 100 percent of the amount involved.

"(C) A fiduciary shall not be liable under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph with respect to a breach of fiduciary duty under subsection (b) of this section committed before becoming a fiduciary or after ceasing to be a fiduciary.

"(2) A civil action may be brought in the district courts of the United States—

"(A) by the Attorney General of the United States—

"(i) to determine and enforce a liability under paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection; or

"(ii) to collect any civil penalty under paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection; or

"(B) by the Attorney General of the United States, any participant, annuitant, former participant who is entitled to a deferred annuity under section 8412 of this title, other beneficiary, or fiduciary—

"(i) to enjoin any act or practice which violates any provision of subsection (b) or (c) of this section; or

"(ii) to obtain any other appropriate equitable relief to redress a violation of any such provision.

"(3) An action may not be commenced under paragraph (2) of this subsection with respect to a fiduciary's breach of any responsibility, duty, or obligation under subsection (b) of this section or a violation of subsection (c) of this section after the earlier of—

"(A) 6 years after (i) the date of the last action which constituted a part of the breach or violation, or (ii) in the case of an omission, the latest date on which the fiduciary could have cured the breach or violation; or

"(B) 3 years after the earliest date on which the plaintiff had actual knowledge of the breach or violation; except that, in the case of fraud or concealment, such action may be commenced not later than 6 years after the date of discovery of such breach or violation.".

(b) The table of chapters at the beginning of part III of such title is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 83 the following new item:

"84. Civil Service Pension System ..... 8401.".

TITLE IV—AUTHORIZATION AND EFFECTIVE DATES

FIRST YEAR EXPENSES OF THE CIVIL SERVICE THRIFT INVESTMENT MANAGEMENT SYSTEM

SEC. 401. (a) Notwithstanding section 8426(c)(3) of title 5, United States Code, as added by section 101 of this Act, the expenses incurred in the administration of the Civil Service Thrift Investment Management System prescribed in subchapter VIII of chapter 84 of such title, as added by section 101 of this Act, during fiscal years 1986 and 1987 shall be paid from sums appropriated pursuant to subsection (b).

(b) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Civil Service Thrift Investment Board, for fiscal years 1986 and 1987, such sums as may be necessary to pay the expenses incurred in the administration of the Civil Service Thrift Investment Management System prescribed in subchapter VIII of chapter 84 of title 5, United States Code, as added by section 101 of this Act, during such fiscal years.

EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 402. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), this Act and the amendments made by this Act shall take effect January 1, 1987.

(b) Subchapter VIII of chapter 84 of title 5, United States Code (relating to the Civil Service Thrift Investment Management System), as added by section 101, shall take effect on the date of enactment.

(c) The program required by section 8426(e) of title 5, United States Code, as added by section 101(a) of this Act, shall be established not later than January 1, 1988.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

The opening section (section 2) provides for the purpose of the legislation. The purposes delineated include providing a stable and flexible retirement plan which is comparable to good private sector retirement benefits plans, enhancing portability of retirement assets between Federal jobs and jobs outside the Federal government, and ensuring a fully funded and financially sound federal retirement program.

TITLE I—CIVIL SERVICE PENSION SYSTEM

Section 101(a) amends title 5, United States Code, by inserting a new chapter 84, entitled "Civil Service Pension System" (CSPS).

Subchapter I of this chapter provides definitions for administration of the CSPS, many of which are the same as or similar to those used in chapter 83 of title 5. New or modified definitions include average pay (highest 5 years) and basic pay (rate established pursuant to law, without regard to any limits on authority to pay). Definitions of firefighter and law enforcement officer are more specific than those used in chapter 83. The subchapter also identifies the participants in the new CSPS and specifies its relationship to the Social Security Act. Employees of the District of Columbia are specifically excluded. Employees of the current Civil Service Retirement System (CSRS) are included if they so choose pursuant to Section 8471.

Subchapter II describes the basic retirement plan, which is a defined benefits plan applicable to all permanent employees covered by the Social Security System on or after January 1, 1984 and any employees subject to the CSRS who elect to join the CSPS.

Section 8411 lists the combinations of age and service which establish entitlement to an immediate annuity.

Subsections (a) and (b) provide for an immediate annuity at age 55 with 10 years of service and age 62 with 5 years of service.

Subsections (c) and (d) provide for an immediate annuity to the special retirement classes (law enforcement officer, firefighter, or air traffic controller) after 25 years of service in the occupation.

Subsection (e) provides for an immediate annuity to an employee who is separated from the service involuntarily and who has completed 25 years of service or is not less than age 50 with 20 years of service.

Subsection (f) provides that the annuity authorized by this section is computed under sections 8413 through 8415 of this title.

Section 8412 provides for deferred retirement at age 62 to a participant who is under age 62 and separates from Federal employment after completing 5 years of service or at age 55 to a participant who is under age 55 and separates from Federal employment after completing 10 years of service.

Section 8413 provides the formula for computing the annuity a participant is entitled to receive. The formula is one percent of the average pay over the five highest consecutive years multiplied by the number of years of service. For the special retirement classes, an annuity supplement equal to the estimated amount of Social Security benefits payable at age 62 will be paid to annitants from age 55 until age 62. This supplement will be increased annually by the percent increase in the Social Security Act average wage index. A pro rata formula for part time service is also specified.

Section 8414 provides for reduction of an immediate annuity that begins before age 62. The reduction is two percent for each year the participant is under age 62 on the date of a voluntary retirement at age 55 with 30 years of service or an involuntary retirement under section 8411(e). The annuity is reduced by five percent for each year the participant is under age 62 for a participant who elects to receive an annuity after age 55 but before completing 30 years of service. A five percent reduction for each year the participant is under age 55 applies to law enforcement officers, firefighters, air traffic controllers, and military reserve technicians.

Section 8415 provides for actuarially reducing an annuity to provide for one or more survivor annuities.

Subsection (a) provides for an automatic annuity reduction to provide a survivor annuity to the spouse of a married participant unless the participant and his or her spouse jointly waive the spouse's right to a survivor annuity as provided in section 8416.

Subsection (b) provides for an automatic annuity reduction when the participant has elected to provide a survivor annuity to a former spouse.

Section 8416 provides that OPM shall prescribe methods of payment of annuities and participant election of the method preferred. Included in those methods are a single life annuity and a joint-and-survivor annuity. An individual designated as having an insurable interest in the annuitant may receive a survivor annuity under this provision.

An individual who is married on the date he or she applies for payment of the annuity to begin may elect a method of payment other than a joint-and-survivor method only if the individual and his or her spouse jointly waive an annuity under this method.

Section 8417 provides that a participant who retires voluntarily prior to age 62 may elect to have his or her annuity payments adjusted in such a way that the total amount received before and after receipt of Social Security benefits begin is approximately the same. This does not apply to deferred retirement or to the special retirement classes.

Section 8418 provides that each Federal agency shall contribute an amount equal to the normal cost of the benefits for the agency's employees, as determined by OPM. It also provides for a yearly determination of the Fund's supplemental liability which is to be amortized over 30 years by payments from the Secretary of the Treasury or the Postmaster General of the United States, as appropriate. OPM may use the current CSRS Board of Actuaries for making actuarial determinations and valuations for the CSPS.

Section 8419 provides that military service is creditable service and that the Department of Defense Military Retirement Fund shall reimburse the fund annually for the normal cost relating to the military service of employees and members who become participants during the fiscal year. This excludes employees covered by the CSRS who elect under section 8471(a) to join the CSPS.

Subchapter III describes the thrift savings plan, which is an optional plan permitting participants to contribute a percentage of their basic pay or disability benefits to a selected investment vehicle and have those contributions matched by the government.

Section 8421 allows participants to contribute up to 10 percent of their basic pay to the thrift plan. Those participants who are receiving disability benefits may contribute up to 10 percent of the disability benefits payable. An opportunity to change the contribution amount will be provided at least annually. Employing agencies are required to match the participant's contribution, up to five percent of the participant's annual rate of basic pay or the disabled participant's disability benefits. Amounts contributed to the thrift fund are not included in the employee's current gross income for income tax purposes.

Section 8422 provides a vesting schedule for the thrift plan. A participant immediately vests in his contributions and their earnings. Beginning after one year of service, the participant vests in 20 percent of the employer's contribution. This increases by 20 percent for each additional year of participation up to five years and beyond, when the entire share contributed by the employer, plus interest, is vested. A participant who dies while employed by the government immediately vests in 100 percent of the employer's contribution and the earnings on it. For a participant who separates from employment before becoming entitled to an immediate annuity, any employer contributions which he has not vested in are transferred to the Treasury for credit to Miscellaneous Receipts.

Section 8423 describes the optional ways an employee may choose from to receive thrift account payments from the thrift plan at separation from employment, depending on his or her status under the basic pension plan.

Subsection (a) permits a participant who is entitled to an immediate annuity to elect one of the four methods below:

(1) An immediate annuity

(2) A deferred annuity

(3) A lump sum or installment withdrawal

(4) Transfer to an individual retirement account or other qualified retirement plan

Subsection (b) permits a participant who is entitled to a deferred annuity to elect one of the methods described above. For the first three methods, the money is not payable until the date of the participant's eligibility for retirement.

Subsection (c) permits a participant who is not eligible for any pension to elect one of the three methods below:

(1) An annuity at age 62

(2) A lump sum or installment withdrawal at age 62

(3) Transfer to an individual retirement account or other qualified retirement plan

Subsection (d) permits a participant who elected to defer an annuity payment to modify the date specified in that election.

Section 8424 describes how annuities available from the thrift plan will be computed and paid. The Thrift Investment Board will prescribe methods of payment which must include a single life annuity and a joint-and-survivor annuity. An individual designated as having an insurable interest in the annuitant is also covered under this provision. The amounts will be determined actuarially. Methods for providing annual increases in the annuity payable must also be prescribed.

Section 8425 provides rules for elections by participants entitled to payments or transfers from the thrift plan.

Section 8426 establishes the Thrift Savings Fund and prescribes how moneys in the Fund may be used. Included in these uses is a requirement for the Board to establish a program to make loans to participants in cases of hardship.

Section 8427 describes how employee and employer money will be invested.

Subsection (a) defines terms used in application of this section.

Subsection (b) requires the Board to establish three funds under which sums in the Thrift Savings Fund may be invested and provides an option to establish other funds. The funds are:

(1) A Government Securities Investment Fund which is invested in special issues of the Treasury.

(2) A Fixed Income Investment Fund which is invested in insurance contracts, certificates of deposits, or other instruments.

(3) A Common Stock Index Investment Fund which is invested in common stock issues included in a commonly recognized stock index, with the percentage invested in a given stock to be the same as the percentage of that stock's market value included in the index.

Subsection (c) specifies that sums in the Thrift Fund which are not designated or available to be invested in one of the other investment funds will be invested in the Government Securities Investment Fund.

Subsection (d) states that participants may elect, at least once each year, the investment funds into which they wish to have their Thrift Savings Fund invested or reinvested.

Subsection (e) specifies that, during the implementation phase of the Thrift Savings Fund, a certain percentage of the contributions made by and for the participant must be invested in Government Securities Investment Fund. For participant contributions, the initial amount is 100%, reduced by 20% each year over a five year period, beginning in 1988. For agency contributions, the same phasing schedule applies, beginning in 1993. All amounts earned on these contributions must be reinvested in the Government Securities Investment Fund. Participants hired during the temporary adjustment period will have contributions for that period, as described in section 8473(b), invested in the Government Securities Fund.

Subsection (f) provides for the Secretary of the Treasury to issue, as needed by the Fund, two year notes bearing an interest rate equal to the average market yield of all such notes as of the end of the month preceding the date of issue.

Section 8428 prescribes how the Executive Director is to account for the funds of each participant in the System and requires that the participant be provided an annual statement of his or her account. An annual audit report by an independent qualified public accountant is also required.

Subchapter IV describes the benefits available to survivors of deceased participants and former participants from the basic plan and the thrift plan.

Section 8431 provides for payment of death benefits from the basic plan to the surviving spouse of a participant or a former participant other than an annuitant if the deceased had five or more years of service. If the participant or former participant was eligible to retire, the survivor gets 50 percent of the accrued annuity (computed as if he or she had retired the day before death, with any applicable reductions for early retirement and for election of a survivor benefit). If he or she was not eligible to retire, the benefit is computed as described above but payment is delayed until the date he or she would have been eligible to retire.

Section 8432 provides for payment of death benefits from the basic plan to the survivor of an annuitant in accordance with an election under section 8416, 8434(a), or 8436(c).

Section 8433 provides for survivor benefits from the thrift savings plan. If the deceased participant or former participant is not survived by a spouse, payment is made to an individual designated as having an insurable interest or, if no such designation was made, to the deceased individual's estate. A surviving spouse entitled to payment of benefits may elect to receive the money under one of three methods. These are:

(1) An annuity

(2) Transfer of the money to an individual retirement account

(3) Lump sum or installment withdrawal

Section 8434 provides for basic and thrift savings plan survivor benefits to a spouse acquired after payment of the annuity begins. The election is effective the first day of the second month beginning after the election is received but not earlier than nine months after the date of the marriage. A deposit to retroactively fund this election is required as needed. An election of an annuity reduction to provide this benefit is not permitted if the spouse acquired after retirement was married to the annuitant when payment of the annuity began and the annuitant and spouse had jointly waived the right to a survivor benefit.

Section 8435 states the entitlement of eligible former spouses to receive survivor benefits from the basic plan and the thrift plan. The benefits from the basic plan are the same as for a surviving spouse under sections 8416, 8431, or 8432. Benefits from the thrift fund are determined actuarially.

Section 8436 provides for an annuitant to elect a survivor benefit from the basic plan and the thrift plan for an eligible former spouse.

Subsection (a) permits an annuitant who has a former spouse to elect an annuity reduction in order to provide a survivor annuity to such former spouse. The election must be made on or before the date the annuitant applies for payment of an annuity from the basic plan or, if later, within two years after the date on which the marriage of the former spouse to the annuitant is dissolved. A deposit, computed to reflect the amount by which the annuity would have been reduced if it had been continuously in effect since the date the annuity commenced, is required. An election for an annuity reduction to provide a survivor benefit to a former spouse shall not be effective if it:

(1) conflicts with a court order or decree,

(2) exceeds the funds available to pay it, or

(3) is made without the written consent of the annuitant's spouse.

Subsection (b) provides that an annuitant whose annuity is being reduced to provide a survivor benefit to a former spouse may elect to provide or increase a survivor annuity for any former spouse. This election must occur within two years after the former spouse's date of death or remarriage before age 55.

Subsection (c) provides for an annuitant to elect to provide a survivor annuity to his or her spouse if the entitlement of an eligible former spouse is terminated or reduced due to remarriage or death.

Subsection (d) provides for a waiver of the requirement that the spouse of a retiree waive a right to a survivor benefit in certain situation.

Section 8437 provides for termination of a survivor annuity on death of the spouse or former spouse, dissolution of the marriage, or remarriage of the former spouse before reaching age 55.

Section 8438 covers deposits to the Fund.

Subsection (a) requires a market rate of interest payment on any deposit needed to fund an annuity election under section 8434(c) or 8436.

Subsection (b) provides for offsetting the retiree's annuity if the required deposit is not made.

Subsection (c) permits OPM to extend the time limit for making the required deposit.

Subchapter V describes the disability benefits available to a participant who has at least 18 months of service.

Section 8441 provides definitions for the administration of this benefit.

Section 8442 provides that an eligible particpants is entitled to receive benefits under this subchapter if disabled based on the Social Security definition and under 62 or if unable to work in his current position, not qualifed for reassignment, and under 55. At age 62/55, the annuity is payable under the basic plan provisions of subchapter II based on at least 5 years actual service plus projected service through age 62/55. Average pay for the purpose of converting the disabled person from the disability rolls to the retirement rolls at age 62/55 is the average pay on the date of disability, increased each time after that date by the Consumer Price Index minus two percentage points.

Section 8443 provides the following methods for computing disability benefits:

(1) If eligible for Social Security or ineligible for Social Security only as a result of insufficient quarters of coverage, 60 percent of average pay minus 100 percent of the Social Security benefit while the participant is under age 62.

(2) If occupationally disabled, 60 percent of average pay for the first year. After the first year, 40 percent of average pay minus Social Security benefits, if any, while the participant is under 55 years of age.

Section 8444 requires a claim for disability benefits to be filed before the date the participant separates from employment by the Federal Government or within 1 year after. This time limit may be waived by the administrator of benefits.

Section 8445 requires the administrator to direct medical examinations for disability retirement applicants or benefit recipients.

Section 8446 requires that an applicant who is determined able to perform the work required in any position offered by his employing agency for which he is qualified, is at the same grade or level as his current position, and is within his commuting area, must be considered for appointment to such position. The applicant is entitled to appeal a determination that he is able to perform the work required of such position.

Section 8447 provides for termination of disability benefits to an individual who recovers from the disability before reaching age 62 or, in the case of an employee who is occupationally disabled, age 55. Recovery is presumed to occur when income for one year equals 60 percent of the current pay for the individual's former grade. These benefits may be resumed if there is a recurrence of disability. In the case of an individual whose benefits were terminated due to restored earning capacity, benefits are resumed if he is not reemployed within one year, his disability continues, and his income for one year is less than the amount establishing his restored earning capacity.

Section 8448 establishes that an individual is not entitled to receive both disability benefits under this chapter and injury compensation benefits under subchapter I of chapter 81 of this title for the same period of time.

Section 8449 provides for disability benefits for a military reserve technician who is separated from employment as a technician due to a disability which disqualifies him from membership in the National Guard or other reserve component, as the case may be, or from holding the military grade required for such employment and who is not placed in another position.

Section 8450 provides that OPM will contract with one or more insurance companies or other firms to serve as a third party administrator for the disability program provisions which OPM is not specifically required to administer. Each contract awarded may not exceed 5 years and may include a provision authorizing extensions for 1 year at a time.

Section 8451 provides requirements for an annual accounting by the third party administrator to OPM.

Section 8452 provides for the establishment of an Employees' Disability Insurance Fund in the U.S. Treasury and requires agencies to make payments to the fund from their salary appropriations.

Subchapter VI describes general provisions applicable to the administration of the basic plan.

Section 8461 provides that OPM shall pay all benefits payable under the basic plan from the Fund and shall administer all provisions not specifically required to be administered by the Board or any other agency. OPM is also authorized to contract for the performance of any of these functions.

Section 8462 provides for an annual adjustment to the basic pension as a result of an increase in the Consumer Price Index (CPI). The increase will be the percentage increase in CPI minus 2 percentage points. The adjustment is made in December (payable in January), and is based on the change from September to September. A pro rata share of the increase is payable to retirees or survivor annuitants for whom this is the first increase.

Section 8463 provides that each annuity and disability benefit is stated as an annual amount, one-twelfth of which is the monthly rate payable.

Section 8464 provides that a participant's annuity under the basic pension commences on the first day of the first month after the participant separates from government employment or such later date as he or she elects. It terminates on the date of death or other terminating event provided by law. It further provides that a survivor annuity commences on the first day of the first month after the date of death of the participant or retiree on whom the annuity is based and terminates on the last day of the last month ending before the surviving spouse dies or remarries before age 55, unless another date is specified in accordance with this chapter.

Section 8465 provides that an individual entitled to receive a basic pension may waive receipt of all or part of the benefits. An individual may also make allotments from the benefit payment.

Section 8466 provides that an application for benefits must be received before the former participant's 115th birthday; for survivor benefits, the application must be received within 30 years after the death or other event which establishes entitlement to the benefit.

Section 8467 requires compliance with the terms of a court order requiring payment of an annuity, in whole or in part, to another person.

Section 8468 provides for termination of an annuity when an annuitant is reemployed by the Government. Upon termination of the employment, his annuity right are redetermined. The amount of the annuity resulting from a redetermination may not be less than the amount of the terminated annuity plus any COLA increases.

Subchapter VII outlines the transition provisions for individuals covered by the CSRS who choose to participate in the CSPS.

Section 8471 permits participants in the current system (CSRS), other than District of Columbia government employees, to elect to participate in the new system (CSPS) during the first year it is in effect and to retain accrued credit for entitlement to benefits under the CSRS for service subject to that system. It also provides that rehires who are required to participate in the CSPS retain credit earned under CSRS and are permitted to deposit to the CSRS fund any amount previously refunded. Survivor benefits may be payable based on conditions of eligibility and service under both CSRS and CSPS.

Section 8472 provides that CSRS participants who elect to participate in the CSPS are allowed credit for service under both systems for purposes of determining eligibility to retire in both systems and of vesting in the thrift plan. Pay for such individuals subsequent to beginning participation in the CSPS is taken into account in computing average pay under both systems. Disability benefits are provided only under the CSPS.

Section 8473 provides that service by a participant during the temporary adjustment period will be recognized as years of participation for the purpose of vesting in the employer's contributions to the Thrift Savings Fund under section 8422. For such participants, moneys will be transferred from the Fund to the Thrift Savings Fund in an amount which equals twice his or her contributions plus interest for any calendar year at the rate determined under section 8334(e) of title 5. The amount transferred will be in the form of interest-bearing securities of the United States. For vesting purposes, half of the amount will be treated as a contribution from the participant and half as a contribution by the employing agency.

Participants hired during the interim period who made a deposit to cover military service will receive a refund of the deposit.

Section 8474 defines "reemployed annuitant" for various Government retirement systems. This section provides that a reemployed annuitant retains entitlement to the Government retirement system under which he/she retired. It further provides that service performed as a reemployed annuitant under CSPS shall be credited only for eligibility to retire under CSPS and cannot be considered creditable service for the annuitant's previous retirement system. Also, pay earned as an employee before and after reemployment is considered in computing average pay under both the CSPS and the annuitant's Government retirement system.

Section 8475 excludes former CSRS participants who join the CSPS from the windfall reduction and the public pension offset provisions of the Social Security Act.

Section 8476 authorizes OPM to prescribe regulations to carry out this subchapter.

Subchapter VIII describes the Civil Service Thrift Investment Management System.

Section 8491 establishes a Civil Service Thrift Investment Board, composed of the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Director of OPM, and two representatives of Federal employee organizations appointed by the President, one of whom must be from a labor organization and one of whom must be from a Federal employee management organization. The Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board will chair the Board. Specific responsibilities of the Board are detailed here.

Section 8492 provides for the establishment of a Civil Service Thrift Advisory Committee, composed of six members appointed by the Board. Three are to be investment asset managers and three are to be administrators of thrift savings plans.

Section 8493 provides for the Board to appoint an Executive Director to carry out the policies of the Board in administering the Thrift Savings Fund. The Executive Director is authorized to enter into contracts as necessary to carry out these policies.

Section 8494 states the investment policy governing the Thrift Savings Fund. This includes a provision that investments chosen are likely to receive broad acceptence by participants and the public, and a provision that the two funds which specifically provide for private sector investment should not require a significant level of active investment decision-making.

Section 8495 provides rules of administration for the Board.

Section 8496 identifies fiduciaries and their responsibilities, defines "party in interest," states basic standards of fiduciary conduct, lists prohibited practices by fiduciaries, and describes penalties for committing a prohibited practice.

TITLE II—AMENDMENTS RELATING TO SOCIAL SECURITY.

Section 201 amends section 210(a) (5) of the Social Security Act to cover service performed by an individual who commences participation in the CSPS.

Section 202 amends section 3121(b)(5) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to tax the wages of an individual who commences participation in the CSPS.

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

Section 301 extends the Federal Employees' Retirement Contribution Temporary Adjustment Act of 1983 from January 1, 1986 until January 1, 1987.

Section 302(a) amends section 8331 of title 5, United States Code, to limit coverage under the CSRS for District of Columbia government employees to those first employed before January 1, 1987.

Section 302(b) amends section 8332 of title 5, United States Code, by adding a new subsection excluding participant in the CSPS from receiving service credit under the CSRS, except in certain limited situations affecting participants retaining entitlement in the CSRS under section 8472.

Section 302(c) amends section 8333(b) of title 5, United States Codes to modify the requirement that an employee or Member must complete at least one year of creditable service as a participant in the CSRS out of the last two years before separation to include service under the CSRS. It also amends section 8333(c) by making the contribution requirements applicable only to service performed while not a participant in the CSPS.

Section 302(d) amends section 8334(a) of title 5, United States Code, relating to deductions from an employee's pay for both CSRS and Social Security coverage. An employee who was covered by the CSRS on December 31, 1985 and who was subsequently covered by Social Security will continue in the CSRS at a reduced contribution. The Contribution to CSRS will be equal to the excess of the employee's normal CSRS contribution over the OASDI portion of the Social Security tax.

Section 302(e) amends section 8339 of title 5, United States Code, to specify that the CSRS benefit received by those covered under subsection (d) will be offset by 100% of the Social Security benefit attributable to federal service.

Section 302(f) amends section 8347(a) of title 5, United States Code, to permit OPM to contract for the performance of administrative services necessary to carry out its responsibilities under subchapter 83.

Section 302(g) amends section 8348(a) of title 5, United States Code, to clarify that the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund is available to pay benefits and administrative expenses for both chapters 83 and 84 of such title.

Section 303 amends section 1005(d) of title 39, United States Code, to include officers and employees of the Postal Service for coverage under the provisions of chapters 83 and 84 of title 5.

Section 304 requires agencies to pay all group life insurance basic plan costs for CSPS participants from salary appropriations.

Section 305 amends sections 8901(10) and 8905(c) of title 5, United States Code, to incorporate health benefit plan eligibility requirements for former spouses as a result of P.L. 98-615. It also amends section 8905(b) to permit a family member of a deceased employee or annuitant who was enrolled in a health benefits plan to continue that enrollment.

Section 306 amends section 2105(c) of title 5 to provide that chapter 84 does not apply to employees of certain non-appropriated fund instrumentalities.

TITLE IV—AUTHORIZATION AND EFFECTIVE DATES

Section 401 provides for payment of the fiscal year 1986 and 1987 expenses of the Civil Service Thrift Investment Board from appropriations.

Section 402 provides that this act takes effect January 1, 1987, except for subchapter VIII of chapter 84 (relating to the Civil Service Thrift Investment Board), which takes effect on the date of enactment, and the loan program required by section 8426(e) which must be established not later than January 1, 1988.

Subject: CRS Analysis of the Stevens-Roth Plan for a Retirement System for Federal Workers Covered by Social Security.

COMPARISON OF ENTRY AGE NORMAL COST ESTIMATES OF CURRENT CSRS TO STEVENS-ROTH PLAN [1]

[In percent]

	Current CSRS (baseline)			Stevens-Roth plan
	Employer share	Employee share	Total	Employer share	Employee share (average)	Total
Defined benefit plan	25.0	7.0	32.0	11.7		11.7
Social security [2]				5.9	5.9	11.8
FEGLI change [3]		.2		.2		.2
Capital accumulation plan (voluntary) [4]				3.0	3.0	6.0
Full cost [5]	25.0	7.2	32.2	20.8	8.9	29.7

[1] All cost figures are rounded to the nearest tenth of a percent. Administrative costs and benefits to special groups are excluded. Under the current CSRS these costs are estimated to be 0.1 and 0.3 percent of pay, respectively.

[2] Social security cost is the percentage of total Federal payroll taxable for social security (OASDI).

[3] Increased employer cost (0.2 percent) of Federal Employees Group Life Insurance (FEGLI) resulting from the employer assuming the full cost of Federal worker life insurance.

[4] For employees, cost of the capital accumulation plan is shown as the average cost. Average cost is determined by dividing the projected sum of all contributions (up to the specified matching limit of five percent for each employee) by the number of employees, assuming 60 percent rate of full participation. The cost to the Government is the employee cost times the matching rate minus the sum of unvested contributions forfeited (0.03 percent) by separating employees.

[5] Average full cost: For the existing CSRS, includes the average employee contribution for life insurance coverage while working. For Stevens-Roth, includes average employee contribution and employer match to the capital accumulation plan.

METHODOLOGICAL SUPPORT

A. Cost and replacement rate models

The estimates of retirement costs and benefits presented in this analysis were generated using the Congressional Research Service's cost and replacement rate models. These computer-based actuarial models were developed by CRS with actuarial support and a Pension Valuation Language (PVL) provided under contract by Hay-Huggins, Inc., an actuarial consulting firm. It should be noted that these models project future outcomes from assumptions. While such projections are valuable tools for making relative cost and benefit comparisons, it is inappropriate to imply or to seek a degree of accuracy for them that is in principle unattainable.

1. Cost model

The cost model projects long-term costs of pension designs. The approach used is known as "entry age normal cost," and can be generally understood as the percentage of every paycheck that should be invested, over the total career of each employee in a group of new entrants, to pay fully for all benefits received by that group, including all eligible survivors. Normal cost is formally defined as the present value of future benefits divided by the present value of future compensation. These values are expressed as a percentage of payroll, and provide a consistent measure of relative pension costs over time.

2. Replacement rate model

The replacement rate model projects the percentage of gross preretirement wages replaced by gross postretirement benefits. This percentage can be shown at retirement and at various ages after retirement, with the latter expressed in values relative to purchasing power at retirement. Capital accumulation replacement rates assume the purchase of an annuity indexed to the assumed rate of inflation.

3. Data and assumptions

The cost and replacement rate models required the use of certain data and assumptions, in order to project cost and benefit outcomes for employees entering work in 1985 and retiring in the year 2030. A profile of the Federal workforce into the future and drawn from data of the current system, and other factors pertaining to costs and benefits were identified and assumptions about the relative weight of those factors were made. Complete documentation of the methodology, data and basis for all assumptions is available from CRS.

1. Demographic assumptions

Given the order of magnitude of Federal employment, fairly reliable data on the Federal workforce could be obtained, and was used whenever appropriate. The vast majority of the data used to construct a demographic profile of the Federal workforce was provided by the Office of Personnel Management (OPM). These data included career patterns, mortality and disability rates, probability of leaving a surviving dependent, etc. Certain modifications were made to the OPM data that lessen the growth over time in the patterns of career improvement, and social security estimations of future improvements in mortality were also incorporated.

2. Economic assumptions

All economic assumptions were taken from the 1985 Social Security Trustees' Report under the designation, "Intermediate II-B." The II-B assumptions are most commonly accepted as being neither optimistic nor pessimistic. When the 1986 Trustees' report is issued, CRS will incorporate any changes to II-B into the cost and replacement rate models. For 1985, the assumptions were annual average increases of: Interest, 6.1 percent; wages, 5.5 percent; and prices, 4.0 percent.

3. Behavioral assumptions

Changes in plan designs relative to one another will cause changes in behavior which in turn affect plan costs. The changes in assumed rates of retirement, separation, etc., were made by the actuarial consultant, after research and discussions with CRS staff.

4. The cost of Social Security

Generally, the cost of social security to its participants is the same as the tax that must be paid to the program. For these estimates, the cost of social security is the ratio of social security (OASDI) taxes to total Federal payroll over the 75-year period of the projection, evenly divided between employees and the Federal Government as employer. Under social security II-B assumptions, the benefits and taxes of the program are roughly in balance over that period, if the tax on social security benefits is treated as a revenue to the program. It should be noted, however, that some of the social security taxes on Federal payroll are not received back by Federal workers in the form of benefits because the average of Federal wages covered by social security exceeds the average covered wage in employment outside the Federal Government. Because the social security formula enhances the benefits of lower-paid workers, approximately 0.4 percent of payroll of the tax credited to social security from Federal wages is redistributed to workers outside the Federal Government. If the Federal Government is viewed, not as an employer, but in its other role as participant in the national economy, this redistributed amount could be construed as a savings.

Other differences in the pattern of payments between the present CSRS and social security are also taken into consideration when costs or replacement rates for a new plan incorporating social security are compared to the current system. The value of this difference is approximately two percent of payroll. About two-thirds of the difference is attributable to the portable rights to social security earnings credits retained by employees who leave employment with less than a full career. The remainder of the difference, after certain offsets and overlaps are netted, is attributable to dependents' benefits payable under social security but not payable from the current CSRS. The sum of these differences in the pattern of payments has been distributed across the various benefit components of the proposal and is thus reflected in lower replacement rates at retirement (excluding benefits from capital accumulation) of about five percent of total benefits attributable to the employer share of total plan costs.

5. Estimated capital accumulation costs

Cost of the capital accumulation plans analyzed by CRS depend on the participation rate of individuals. Such rates, expressed as "percent of full participation," are influenced by two features of the plan: The rate at which employee payments to the capital accumulation plan are matched by employer payments, and the ceiling on employee contributions eligible for such matching dollars. Some employees will contribute the full amounts permitted by the plan specifications, others only some, still others not at all. The percent of full participation is the net average of full participation after all full, partial, and zero contributions have been combined.

The cost to the Federal Government of the capital accumulation plans is established by multiplying the matching rate specified for the plan by the estimated percent of full participation. For example, Hay-Huggins, Inc., estimated that a plan with a 50 percent employer match of employee contributions to 6 percent of pay would acquire a 55 percent average full participation. Multiplying that rate times the maximum government match (three percent) yields a Federal Government cost for the plan of 1.65 percent of pay.

This proposal includes a capital accumulation plan that permits the employees to contribute as much as 10 percent of their salaries, with the first 5 percent matched on a one for one basis. Hay-Huggins estimates that the phased vesting of 25 percent of the matching amount for years two through five would reduce the cost to the government approximately 0.03 percent, as employees who separated with less than five years of service lose portions of the matching amount. Thus, at a 60 percent rate of full participation, employees would contribute an average of approximately 3.0 percent of salary, and the Federal Government's matching cost would be approximately 3.0 percent of pay. Documentation of the method for arriving at the variable used for the capital accumulation cost assumptions is available from CRS.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, today Senator STEVENS and I are introducing one of the major pieces of legislation of the 99th Congress—the new supplemental retirement plan for Federal workers.

The bill that we submit to the Senate is one that combines the latest thinking in retirement planning with the more traditional pension structures of Social Security and a defined benefit annuity. It does not alter the current Civil Service Retirement System.

This bill is necessary because the Congress required that all Federal employees hired after December 1983 and all Members of Congress participate in the Social Security Program. This decision makes it necessary that a new retirement plan be developed that will fit with Social Security.

Our legislation is the result of many months of research, and discussions by several members of the Governmental Affairs Committee and the administration in attempts to develop a bipartisan proposal for the new system. While we have not been able to achieve the goal of a bipartisan proposal, the legislation we are introducing today will provide a solid retirement plan to supplement Social Security. It is important that we proceed with its consideration. Time is running out. At the end of this year the interim plan for workers hired since January 1984 will expire. If Congress fails to act these people and the Government will be required to pay for both Social Security and the costs of the current retirement system. Costs to the employee would be staggering. Excessive costs—some 14 percent of a paycheck would go to retirement—resulting in overlapping and duplicative coverage.

That is why Senator STEVENS and I feel it is our responsibility to bring forth legislation now. It is our good faith effort to keep our commitment to those workers, who are paying into Social Security under the 1983 act, and also contributing 1.3 percent of salary to the pension fund.

Mr. President, even if the Social Security Amendments of 1983 had not mandated a new retirement system for workers hired after December 1983, I believe it would be time for Congress to design a modern pension system for Federal employees. Why should the civil servant be locked into an archaic retirement plan while his counterpart in the private sector or State government participates in plans that provide both retirement security and career flexibility? The Federal worker competes in the job market with the rest of the labor force. It is unfair to have his or her career opportunities limited by the conditions of the current pension system.

We are all aware of the shortcomings of the present retirement system. It favors the older career employee over the younger one, it makes mobility between the public and private sector difficult, it is poorly financed and it is too expensive. Our legislation eliminates the shortcomings of the current system, provides a sound basic benefit package similar to the private sector and allows employees to direct their income where it best suits their needs.

Let me say at the very beginning that this plan, because it deals with people who will retire many years from now, does not reduce the deficit. Certainly costs were a major factor in our work. We did not, however, contain costs by simply looking at the old plan, taking out the expensive parts and the deciding that whatever was left should be the new retirement system. This plan reflects the best of current practice. It has a long-range cost, expressed as a percentage of payroll, of 20.8 percent, which is about the same as a private pension plan for a large private organization. Our thrift plan contains a tax deferral feature that will put Federal employees' benefits on an equal basis with the best private pension plans. In fact, we think our new system will be so attractive to Federal workers that we have included a transfer provision allowing individuals in the current system to enter the new plan.

Our new program is composed of three basic parts. The first is Social Security which workers will continue to pay into according to the payroll deduction schedules set out in the law. Upon retirement, disability, or death, beneficiaries will receive the same entitlement as American workers currently in the Social Security System.

Supplementing the basic Social Security benefit is the second tier of our plan, a defined benefit pension very similar in structure to the present retirement system. Employees, however, make no contributions to this plan. The full cost of the plan is borne by the employer as is done in private industry. Employees vest for a benefit after 5 years of service and are eligible to retire with unreduced benefits at age 62, the same age as Social Security and the typical age for private industry. The annuity is based on the length of service times 1 percent per year, and uses the average of the highest 5 years of salary.

This benefit is adjusted for inflation using an annual cost-of-living adjustment [COLA] based on the Consumer Price Index increase minus 2 percentage points. While this differs from the current plan, we must remember that most private pensions do not grant regular COLA's. By combining this partial automatic adjustment with the full COLA of Social Security and the investment opportunities under the thrift plan, the legislation provides inflation protection necessary to protect an employee's post-retirement standard of living.

The early retirement provisions break important new ground by permitting employees much wider choice about when they can retire with reduced benefits in a way that adds nothing to the long-range cost of the program, just as is done in private industry. We expect this feature to be especially popular with two-worker couples who wish to coordinate their plans as to retirement and possible career changes.

Disability benefits are coordinated with Social Security in our plan to provide income for the temporarily as well as the long-term disabled. The disability insurance plan will be administered through a private company by the Government, easing the costly bureaucratic problems associated with such programs. Regardless to the type of impairment, entitlement for disability benefits begins after 18 months of service. Our objective here is to pay more adequate benefits to those who are truly disabled, and to encourage those able to return to work to do so.

The plan's survivors benefits are patterned after the private sector—a combination of Social Security, pension plan survivor benefits, thrift plan benefits and group life. However, here again we have borrowed on a better idea from private employers. Most employee benefit experts would argue that life insurance best protects young families. So, using the current Federal Employees Group Life Insurance, the Federal Government will now pay for all the basic coverage, while also giving employees the option to buy additional amounts.

The third and most innovative tier of our plan is the one I think will prove the most appealing to the Federal work force. This is our thrift plan, a concept that lets the worker take an active part in investing his money and tailoring his pension funds. The funds set-aside may be used for survivor and disability purposes as well as retirement. Of course, this will mean greater responsibility and increased attention to changing investment patterns on the part of the worker. But private and State employees have managed these investments successfully for years and we are aware of similar thrift options in the Federal Reserve Board pension system.

I think this is the step into the future civil service employees have been waiting for and want to take, discrediting the notion that everything surrounding the civil service is outdated, bureaucratic and unimaginative.

Our savings plan challenges these popular myths by placing the Federal retirement plan at the forefront of pension investment. We begin with a Thrift Investment Board composed of five members—three top Government officials and two representatives of various employee groups appointed by the President. These members plus an Executive Director charged with daily management responsibilities, must meet the same fiduciary standards as officials of private plans do under ERISA, the Employee Retirement Income Security Act. Through the Board, we intend to offer the employee a tax deferred savings plan in which the participant can yearly set-aside up to 10 percent of his pay, with the first 5 percent matched by the Government and invested among a Government bond fund, a fixed income fund or an equity fund.

This triad approach to investment strategy offers workers the opportunity to choose the amount of risk and prospective return appropriate for them. What is important is that this is the employee's choice. If, for financial or other reasons, the employee does not like the investments in one option, he or she may choose another.

Mr. President, I hope in the coming days the Senators of this body will support our efforts. This plan is fair. It does not discriminate between mobile workers and those who stay in Government, nor the young and old. In fact, except for some very few technical occupations, this plan covers everyone the same including the Congress and its employees.

Furthermore, this plan is solidly financed. The money needed for benefits is paid up front, on an actuarial basis, not an arbitrary number.

This is a plan that allows the Government worker the same opportunities as the private sector and gives each employee control of his or her future retirement.

Before I close my remarks, I would like to acknowledge the truly excellent work and leadership provided by Senator STEVENS, chairman of the Civil Service, Post Office, and General Services Subcommittee in bringing this proposal together. Retirement matters are very complicated and technical by nature. They are also very important in that the decisions we make in this legislation will directly affect the livelihood and well-being of people who chose to dedicate part, if not all, of their careers to public service. This legislation is a sophisticated proposal that represents the results of many months of diligent and hard work.

51-059 O-86-6 (Pt. 16)

In addition, the administration supports the structure and basic provisions of this bill. It is my hope that after examination it will have the support of all the Members of this body. The committee intends to hold hearings on this bill in September and press for a markup as soon after as possible. I would urge all Members and interested parties to give this legislation their attention.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, we face a critical challenge in redesigning the Civil Service Retirement System for employees covered by Social Security. In extending coverage to Federal employees, the Social Security Amendments of 1983 left Congress a difficult responsibility that must now be discharged.

With the introduction of S. 1527 today, the chairman of the Governmental Affairs Subcommittee on Civil Service, Post Office, and General Services, TED STEVENS, and the chairman of the Committee on Governmental Affairs, BILL ROTH, have taken a significant step forward. I commend their leadership on this issue, and I share their concern that the complex features of the new retirement system be established by the end of the session.

We cannot allow hard choices in the design of a new Federal pension system to deter us from enacting legislation by the end of this year. Nor can we expect the many thousands of Federal workers who have begun work since the beginning of 1984, or who will be coming to work in the future, to pay 14 percent of their pay for pension expectations that can be uncertain at best. Yet that is precisely what will happen if Congress fails to design a new plan within the 2-year period we gave ourselves. In simplest terms, our objective is to ensure that Federal employees, at work and upon retirement, receive fair and reasonable compensation for their service. Fair and reasonable in the eyes of the workers themselves, whose efforts are vital to the varied functions of the Federal Government. Fair and reasonable, as well, in the eyes of the taxpayers, who rightly insist that their tax dollars should be spent sensibly and to good result.

Mr. President, as the ranking minority member of the subcommittee of which Senator STEVENS is the chairman, I can only express my admiration for the depth of his knowledge in the pension field. All of us should appreciate the service he has provided this body by mastering and interpreting the arcane tools of pension design. The bill these distinguished chairmen have produced is a good bill. It reflects the patient stewardship of Senator ROTH and the learned wisdom of Senator STEVENS. On my side of the aisle, the senior Senator from Missouri has done much to foster a spirit of cooperation and bipartisanship in our consideration of this issue.

Prior to the introduction of the bill, potential differences were fully aired, without the rancor that often characterizes issues in which the stakes are so very high. Consequently, our task is to strike a proper balance within a narrow range of disagreement.

As in many of these deliberations, we must take a close look at many highly technical issues. A web of formulas, categories, and requirements must be woven into a coherent and sensible policy—a policy that is clear enough for those who will depend upon it for their economic security, and flexible enough to address the various situations and needs that Federal workers may face during their careers.

Several areas in the Stevens-Roth bill warrant careful scrutiny. How we decide these issues will shape the basic structure of the plan and its pattern of payments for decades to come. Each area of concern requires important choices; taken together, those decisions will form the heart of a sound and adequate system.

First we must decide how much we should protect future pension benefits from dwindling in the face of rising prices. To be sure, this is a familiar and difficult issue for all of us. The fixed incomes of retirees must be accorded a measure of economic security.

Because Social Security continues to be fully and automatically adjusted for changes in the cost of living, it serves as the basic component of income protection for all workers. But a pension must also serve as a dependable source of retirement income, which is possible only if its value is maintained. The Stevens-Roth bill depends primarily upon the inflation protection granted by the Social Security cost-of-living adjustment. While the expense of COLA's in benefit programs is of great concern to all of us, we must be careful not to schedule an erosion in benefit value that grows worse with each passing year.

As they plan for their retirement years, Federal employees deserve to know with certainty at what age benefits begin. The current Civil Service Retirement System has been criticized for permitting employees to retire as early as age 55. This costly feature of the system will undoubtedly be a major focus of any new plan.

It is important to note that many private sector employers, particularly those with a heavy concentration of physical labor, permit unreduced retirement at age 55 to workers with careers spanning 30 or more years. Virtually all private sector pensions make some provision for retirement at that age. Furthermore, despite the range of jobs in the Federal Government and the private sector, the average retirement age is around 61—for workers inside or outside the Government.

With 62 as its earliest age of eligibility, Social Security reduces the benefits Federal employees would receive at earlier ages. The Stevens-Roth bill goes further, by reducing the Federal pension benefit drawn before age 62. We must consider carefully the impact this provision would have on Federal workers, particularly those who work long careers in difficult and demanding occupations.

We cannot possibly guarantee every worker in every circumstance the same total benefits he or she would now receive. But we can put toget er a package of benefits from Socia Security, from a supplemental Federal pension, and perhaps from an employee savings plan, that is generally comparable to the existing system.

The issue thus becomes one of determining the appropriate mix of benefits to achieve this goal. An employee savings plan with Government matching funds will give every worker the opportunity to supplement a defined and predictable pension amount. But many workers will not be in a financial position to participate in the savings plan fully and consistently throughout their careers. As we move toward a final mix of benefit components, we must be sure that the basic defined pension, along with Social Security, produces adequate retirement income on its own. Contributory savings plans should serve as a supplement available at the choice of the employee.

During the Governmental Affairs Committee's deliberations, every aspect of this lengthy bill will have to undergo rigorous examination. A pension plan must not only meet the obvious and expected needs of its retirees, but must assure its participants and their families adequate income protection in the event of death or disability. We can do no less than provide our employees a package of specific family protections should such family disasters strike. The Stevens-Roth bill addresses these concerns with care. With that beginning, I am confident that Federal workers and their families can expect a final bill that combines compassion with confidence and good fiscal sense.

By Mr. McCLURE (for himself, Mr. GARN, Mr. WALLOP, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. SIMPSON, and Mr. ABDNOR):

S. 1528. A bill to provide for the expenditure for transfer of funds by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture for the emergency prevention, suppression, control, or eradication of grasshoppers or mormon crickets on public lands; by unanimous consent referred jointly to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

GRASSHOPPER CONTROL

● Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation that is of great importance to States in the West that are suffering severe damage to their farmlands and rangelands.

The cause of this damage is grasshoppers and mormon crickets—insects that breed on large tracts of federally owned land and swarm onto State and private lands. The damage these insects cause is substantial: some farmers lost up to 20 feet of cropland a day as grasshoppers stripped any plants in their path.

A review of the current system of pest control on Federal lands, and its effectiveness in recent years, clearly indicates why we must streamline its ability to take quick action against a potential infestation in the future.

In 1984, the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service spent $585,000 to treat grasshopper outbreaks on approximately 70,000 acres of public lands in the West that are administered by the Bureau of Land Management [BLM]. So far this year, they have spent $29 million, and expect that figure to go even higher before the spray program is completed. APHIS has treated 5 million acres of infested lands in the fight to control this year's grasshopper outbreak.

Forecasts for next year are already being made. APHIS expects another outbreak next year if weather conditions remain favorable. The Federal Government, the landowner of 65 percent of the State of Idaho, must have in place a program with adequate funding to control outbreaks on Federal lands.

Grasshopper infestations cause severe economic damage to western crops and rangelands. APHIS is responsible for both managing and funding grasshopper spray programs designed to control the number of grasshoppers on Federal, State, and private rangelands. The APHIS budget contains a line item, called the contingency fund, which should contain moneys for grasshopper and other pest control in the United States.

In June 1984, when calls came from Idaho and other Western States to begin grasshopper control efforts, the APHIS contingency fund was empty. The entire $1 million placed in the fund for pest control had already been spent to control an outbreak of Mediterranean fruit fly in northern Guatemala and southern Mexico. Not a penny was left to help American farmers fight the plague of grasshoppers invading their croplands from federally controlled and managed rangelands.

APHIS argued that since the grasshopper outbreak occurred on BLM lands, BLM should foot the bill. However, as I came to discover, APHIS and the BLM had memorandums of understanding [MOU's] which placed the responsibility for pest control and the payment of pest control efforts in the hands of APHIS. The problem was that under these MOU's, BLM was not required to contribute any money to control pest outbreaks on its lands, even though APHIS was out of money.

Like other Federal agencies, APHIS has been under pressure to control its budget in recent years. Since 1981, APHIS has not requested any appropriations for actual grasshopper spray control work. this situation is due in part because APHIS has given the spray program low priority, concerned that grasshopper funding would detract from its other programs.

APHIS does not have a budget item strictly for grasshoppers. They do have a line item for grasshopper survey work. The spray control work, if needed, is funded out of its contingency fund. Because of budgetary pressures, the contingency fund has been reduced, from $2.5 million per year in 1976–81 to $1 million in 1982–84. The major consequence of eliminating funds earmarked for grasshopper spray control and relying on the shrinking contingency fund is that money has not been available for pest control when it was needed the most.

The only available alternative is the Secretary of Agriculture's emergency authority to borrow funds from other sources, such as the Commodity Credit Corporation. However, APHIS and USDA officials are reluctant to request that the Secretary use such authority because they consider funding the grasshopper spray program by borrowing funds an abuse of the Secretary's borrowing authority.

These pressures have led APHIS to attempt to settle the funding question unilaterally. Since 1982, APHIS has tried several times to cancel or revise its MOU's with BLM and the Forest Service in order to force these agencies to share in the cost of funding the spray program. APHIS notified both agencies in June 1982 that it intended to cancel the MOU's, but the Forest Service and BLM objected. In late 1982, the Senate directed USDA to review the MOU's and to continue its grasshopper survey work in the interim.

In March 1983, APHIS proposed modifying the MOU's to provide for cost sharing with BLM and Forest Service for pest control on lands these agencies own. Both agencies objected and APHIS decided to renew the existing MOU's for 1983 only, while continuing to study the matter. In November 1983, APHIS reported to the Senate Committee on Appropriations that it intended to vigorously pursue the cost-sharing concept for grasshopper control work.

All of these events did not affect grasshopper control work through 1983, since grasshopper infestations did not become a serious threat and Federal spray control programs were not required. In the spring and summer of 1984, APHIS decided that based on grasshopper surveys, no serious infestations would occur in the Western States. However by mid-June in some parts of Idaho and by mid-July in the rest of Idaho and other Western States, weather conditions changed and grasshoppers began swarming over more than 3½ milion acres of federally owned rangelands.

Grasshoppers soon moved off the rangelands onto private croplands. Farmers were measuring grasshopper populations of 50 grasshoppers per square yard and higher. APHIS considers 8 grasshoppers per square yard to be an economic infestation. Eight grasshoppers per square yard can eat as much forage as a cow and calf. You can see what 50 grasshoppers per square yard or more will do to a crop of wheat, hay, barley, oats, sugar beets or potatoes. Farmers in Idaho have written to me telling of losses last year of $94,000, $200,000 and more. The total estimates of damages will never be known. This year's damages will be even greater because of the enormity or the outbreak and the slowness of getting the program on the ground.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these letters from Idaho farmers be included in the RECORD at the end of my remarks. They speak very eloquently on the problem caused by uncontrolled grasshoppers migrating from Federal lands to private croplands.

The farmers in my State cannot stand another year like this year. They must have relief. Adequate funding must be provided, not just at the last minute, but every year, to maintain an effective program. Adequate funding is also necessary to keep the personnel trained and the extension agents in the counties aware of how the control program is to be run. As the landlord of millions of acres of land in the West, it is the Federal Government's responsibility to set up a program which will prevent widespread damage in a timely manner.

If APHIS had taken timely adequate measures last summer, Idaho and several other Western States would not have suffered the losses they suffered this year. Last year, the Federal Government was penny wise and pound foolish. If $10 million had been spent last year to combat grasshoppers, as I requested from the Secretary, the Federal Government would not have had to spend $30 million this year. If the grasshoppers had been killed in 1984, they would not have laid their eggs and multiplied this summer, creating the worst grasshopper infestation Idaho has seen in 30 years.

The legislation I introduce today will provide for a Grasshopper Control Program on all Federal lands. The program will be controlled by APHIS, but with funding for the control program on BLM acreages coming directly from the BLM. BLM manages the majority of the lands which were sprayed, both in Idaho and in other Western States. In Idaho a total of 6.3 million acres were sprayed in 1985. BLM manages 4.75 of the 6.3 million acres. The States of Idaho manages 0.3 million, private ownership is 1 million and other entities such as Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Department of Defense manage the remaining 0.25 million. Clearly the majority of the land is managed by BLM, and it's time they began carrying their fair share of the financial burden.

To provide sufficient funding, this bill allows the Secretary of the Interior to transfer funding from any program within the Department of the Interior to be used for the Grasshopper Control Program until the Department can request funding on an appropriations bill. This will allow the Department to have a program ready at any time; lack of funding will no longer be an excuse for not controlling grasshoppers. Under this bill, the Secretary of Agriculture shall treat Federal, State, or private lands which are infested by grasshoppers at significant levels of economic infestation. There will no longer be an excuse to wait until funds are arranged, the Secretary must activate the program. The Government must be a good neighbor and manage its lands—as any private landowner must—without endangering its neighbors.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill and letters mentioned earlier were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1528

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE EXPENDITURE AND REPLENISHMENT OF FUNDS

SECTION 1. The Secretary of Agriculture shall undertake a program to control grasshoppers and mormon crickets on all federal lands.

SEC. 2. (a) Subject to the provisions of subsection (b), the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to expend or transfer, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture, funds from any no year appropriations for the prevention, suppression, control, or eradication of grasshopper and mormon cricket outbreaks on or threatening lands under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture may not transfer any funds from other programs within the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service.

(b)(1) Appropriations made available to the Secretary of the Interior shall be available for the payment of obligations incurred on federal lands subject to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior during the preceding fiscal year.

(2) Funds transferred pursuant to this section shall be replenished by a supplemental appropriation which shall be requested as promptly as possible.

(3) From any no year appropriations made available to the Department of the Interior, moneys shall be made available for transfer by the Department of the Interior to the Department of Agriculture for the prevention, suppression, control, or eradication of grasshoppers and mormon cricket outbreaks only on federal lands under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior.

GRASSHOPPER AND MORMON CRICKET PROGRAM ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 3. Upon request of the administering agency or a landowner or his agent, the Secretary of Agriculture shall treat Federal, State, or private lands which are infested by grasshoppers or mormon crickets at levels of economic infestation of eight grasshoppers or more per square yard regardless of age. The Secretary of Agriculture shall pay out of appropriations made to the Secretary, or transferred to him by the Secretary of the Interior, 100 percent of grasshopper or mormon cricket control on Federal lands, 50 percent on State lands and 33.3 percent on intermingled lands, and shall participate in prevention, control, or eradication programs of grasshoppers or mormon crickets in conjunction with other Federal, State, and private prevention, control, or eradication efforts.

GRASSHOPPER AND MORMON CRICKET CONTROL PROGRAM MAINTENANCE

SEC. 4. From appropriations made available or transferred by the Secretary of Interior to the Department of Agriculture for such purposes, the Secretary of Agriculture shall provide adequate funding under the rangeland pest control program for a program to train personnel to effectively accomplish the objectives of this Act.

APRIL 12, 1985.

Senator JAMES MCCLURE,

DEAR SIR: We own and lease several farms bordering Federal Lands.

Last year, we lost at least $55,000.00 from Grasshopper damage.

These Hoppers originated on our neighbors (Federal Government) Lands.

The spraying that took place last year was much too little, too late. The farmers, being the backbone of this Great Nation, are dropping in numbers due to the Agriculture economy.

Infestation of our lands by Federal Hoppers must not be allowed to eat away what small profits we have worked so hard for.

The Hopper eggs are already there and the hatch will be great.

We need the Federal Government's help now if we are to survive.

They must take care of their own pests as they would expect us to do the same.

Sincerely,

VERNON CALLAN PHILLIPS,
MARILYN L. PHILLIPS.

APRIL, 12, 1985.

DEAR SENATOR JAMES MCCLURE: We have farm ground adjoining B.L.M. We had quite a bit of damage last year from the grasshoppers. We understand the grasshoppers are going to be a problem this year more so. The loss amounted to 50 to 150 ft. around outside of farm adjoining the Government ground. I feel the Government is responsible for the control of the hoppers because they came from the Federal lands. I think we could use some help on the Government ground.

JIM SCHAEFFER.

DEAR SENATOR MCCLURE: In the summer of 1984 many Idaho farmers like myself were faced with a devastating problem of grasshopper infestation. It is evident to everyone that the problem originated on federally owned & managed BLM ground. It was here also the hoppers breed & multiplied in great numbers & then migrated to precious crop land.

This year we are faced with possibly an even greater number of the crop eating pests, as the eggs are layed & await the spring hatch.

It must be the responsibility of the federal government to take the necessary steps to control this problem, & it is now action must be taken in order to acquire funds in time.

I feel that you are aware of this & I am sure as our spokesman in Washington, you will take the necessary & immediate steps to acquire the needed funding to sufficiently control the federal governments interest as well as the farmers.

Sincerely

RANDY HANSHEW.

FEB. 21, 1985.

Senator JAMES MCCLURE,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCLURE: This is to let you know the personal loss the grasshopper infestation caused us last year. We farm 3 ranches adjacent to BLM land.

On our Barley crops alone in this area on 580 acres we harvested only 55 bushels per acre. All of our other Barley acreage, 633 acres, averaged 121 bushels per acre. This was a loss of $94,934.00. We sold our Barley for $2.48 per bushel.

I hope that something can be done so that this will not happen to farmers again this year or in the future.

Sincerely Yours,

ROSS HUNSAKER.

DESERT VIEW FARMS, INC.,
Rupert, ID, March 1, 1985.

Hon. JAMES MCCLURE: I thought it might be appropriate to drop you a letter and let you know my personal feelings concerning the grasshopper problem last year.

One of the biggest and most disgusting problems that I have ever had with a neighbor occurred last year. You wouldn't think it appropriate for me to let a problem from my fields cross into my neighbor's and destroy his crops due to my lack of attention and care. However this is what happened to us last year. We border approximately four miles of BLM ground. We suffered substantial damage from grasshoppers that traveled to our crops after foliage was eaten off BLM ground. We spent thousands of dollars at our own expense spraying (some fields four times); only to see reduced yields at harvest time. To be more specific: our grain yields were off over 17 bushels per acre on 950 acres. Potato yields were down as much as 70 sacks-plus reduced quality and size—over 230 acres of crop. Our beet tonnage was down 2.5 tons on 400 acres of crop. This left us with a loss approaching $200,000.

My brother and I have operated a family size farm since 1975. These losses can not be taken because we do not have the equity built into our land because of our age and tenure.

Due to incurred losses we are doing everything possible to insure that our neighbor accept responsiblity to be a good neighbor this year. If they don't we will be forced to take whatever means and measures available to ensure that they do. It is our sincere hope that the federal government will accept their responsibility of managing their grounds as a neighbor.

STEVEN D. YOUNG.

APRIL 12, 1985.

Hon. JAMES MCCLURE: Being a farmer whose farm borders the Bureau of Land Management, I am concerned about the grasshopper population that is sure to occur this Spring and Summer; 1984 was bad enough, but 1985 guarantees to be worse. The grasshoppers move onto my farm from the adjacent B.L.M. ground and I would sincerely hope that the Federal Government will be a responsible landowner and considerate neighbor in an effective and prompt solution to this disastrous problem.

Sincerely,

JERRY MAXFIELD.●

● Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I'd like to commend my colleague, Senator MCCLURE, for his role in our joint efforts to control insect pests on federally owned rangelands. The legislation we have introduced today should do much to resolve this problem. Representing a State where the Federal Government owns 2 out of every 3 acres, I realize how important it is that our land management agencies be good neighbors to the private landholders they surround. The control of pests arising on Federal land is only one facet of that responsibility.

Unfortunately, the Federal Government has been a very poor landlord in the past. Last year, millions of dollars of damage were done to private farmland by an infestation of grasshoppers which developed on Bureau of Land Management and Forest Service lands. Although the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service of the Department of Agriculture responded to the emergency and thus averted a complete economic disaster in the State, the bureaucratic machinery was much slower than necessary, and, in fact, only worked after immense congressional pressure. It soon became evident that a more organized and systematic mechanism for grasshopper control is needed.

This bill provides a mechanism whereby funds and technological expertise can be provided effectively, when and where they are needed. It should be more cost effective than the haphazard emergency borrowing and reprogramming that was needed this year. Furthermore, it will enable the Federal Government to control infestations at critical times when the insecticide applications will do the most good for the least cost.

I am as opposed to increased Federal spending as anyone in the Senate. And true, this bill will establish one more means to spend Federal dollars. But can we justify not meeting this obligation? Would failure to pass this bill save the taxpayers money? In most cases, had the grasshopper infestation not been controlled, those farmers who suffered economic losses would have been legally justified to file suit for damages. The cost of this litigation would be many times the preventive pest control established by Senator MCCLURE's bill.

I urge my Senate colleagues to give this legislation their full support. The U.S. Government must meet the responsibilities that come with land ownership. If we do not pass this bill, then we must look at ways to take the Government out of the land-owning business.●

By Mr. DOLE (for Mr. DANFORTH (for himself, Mr. PACKWOOD, Mr. GORTON, and Mr. LAUTENBERG):

S. 1529. A bill to authorize appropriations for State and community highway safety grants, and for other purposes; ordered to be placed on the calendar.

HIGHWAY SAFETY PROGRAMS FUNDING

● Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration [NHTSA] is responsible for efforts to save lives and reduce the number of injuries on your Nation's highways. Despite improvements in highway safety in recent years, however, roughly 43,800 people died in highway accidents in 1984. Clearly, NHTSA needs to work aggressively to improve highway safety.

The legislation I am introducing today on behalf of myself and Senators PACKWOOD, GORTON, and LAUTENBERG, authorizes funding for two important highway safety programs.

The first section of this legislation authorizes funding for fiscal year 1987 for the State and community highway safety grant program, the so-called section 402 program. This legislation authorizes funding of $132 million for this important safety program; this is equivalent to the fiscal 1986 authorization provided in Public Law 98-363.

Section 2 of this legislation authorizes funding for fiscal year 1987 for the Drunk Driving Incentive Grant Program established in 1982. Funds are not authorized for fiscal 1986 because I understand from NHTSA that sufficient funds, which have already been appropriated, exist to meet this program's needs during fiscal 1986. This program, which encourages States to enact tougher drunk driving laws, has been working well. According to NHTSA, 16 States have qualified thus far for a basic grant; 13 of these States have also qualified for a supplemental grant, which requires a State to meet additional criteria. I understand that several other States are working to meet the grant criteria of the 1982 law.

Mr. President, this legislation will enhance highway safety efforts at the Federal and State levels. We must ensure that continued funding is available for these important safety programs.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this legislation be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. THURMOND:

S. 1530. A bill to amend chapter 73 of title 10, United States Code, to make certain changes in the Survivor Benefit Plan provided for under such chapter, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

FORGOTTEN WIDOWS AND SURVIVOR BENEFITS IMPROVEMENTS ACT

● Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, today, for the fifth time, I am introducing survivor benefit plan legislation to rectify a longstanding and most unfortunate and inequitable situation involving the aged widows of certain deceased military retirees. My proposal is a new approach which will cost less than half as much as my previous proposals.

The inequity this legislation is aimed at correcting involves the so-called "forgotten widows." These are the widows of military retirees who died prior to establishment of the survivor benefit plan. Also included in this heading is another group of widows of retired military personnel who died without having had an opportunity to convert over from the previous retired servicemen's family protection plan to the more generous survivor benefit plan.

ORIGIN OF THE INEQUITY

Mr. President, a full understanding and appreciation of how the inequity I refer to came about requires a review of the two principal Government-sponsored benefit plans that have been available to military personnel for the protection of their families in their postretirement years.

Prior to 1972, we had the retired serviceman's family protection plan [RSFPP]. While created with good intentions, there were many problems associated with this program. First of all, the plan was simply not a bargain. The premiums charged for coverage under the RSFPP were excessively high. In some instances, the premiums were 2½ to 5 times as great as those charged contemporary civilians for the same protection coverage.

The high cost of participating in the RSFPP relative to the level of benefits provided, coupled with the low rates of pay received by the military at that time, resulted in a poor rate of participation among military personnel. In fact, only 15 percent of those eligible to participate in the program could afford to do so.

It was mainly due to these problems, Mr. President, that we abolished the RSFPP, and established in its place the current survivor benefit plan [SBP]. While the SBP is a great improvement over its predecessor, there remains today an inequity that dates back to the very creation of the SBP.

ESTABLISHMENT OF SBP

Mr. President, with the enactment of Public Law 92-425, which established the SBP on September 21, 1972, both active and retired military personnel were given the opportunity to participate in the new SBP Program. The opportunity to participate in the SBP was afforded retirees whether or not they had formerly participated in the RSFPP. However, this opportunity was extended to retirees only, and was not extended to the widows of retirees who died prior to September 21, 1972. Thus, the widows of retirees who had formerly participated in the RSFPP, as well as the widows of retirees who could not afford the high cost of the RSFPP and, therefore, did not participate in it, were excluded from participation in the SBP.

While it is true that there was an 18-month SBP open enrollment season in 1982-83, whereby both RSFPP and non-RSFPP [living] retirees were given an opportunity to obtain or convert to SBP coverage, the opportunity was again limited solely to living retirees and did not include the widows of deceased retirees.

Quite frankly, Mr. President, I believe it was wrong for these widows to have been excluded from participating in the SBP in the first place, and grossly unfair for this inequity to have been allowed to continue these many years. Except for the fact that their husbands passed away prior to September 21, 1972, these widows would in all likelihood be covered by the SBP today.

REMOVE THE INEQUITY

While there is no way to make amends for the years these widows have endured being excluded from coverage of SBP, the legislation I am introducing would bring to a close this unfortunate chapter in the history of our treatment of military widows. Under the provisions of my bill, the forgotten widows group would be afforded the long awaited and overdue benefit of the SBP.

The measure I am introducing would provide an SBP annuity at the minimum level of only $165 per month for forgotten widows. Likewise, the bill would increase the RSFPP minimum payment to $165 per month. In addition, the bill would limit offsets in these minimum payments and would provide for these benefits to be increased in the future through cost-of-living adjustments.

OVERCOME PREVIOUS OBJECTIONS

Mr. President, in the past, objections have been raised regarding the cost of my proposals. The cost of this new approach is much less than my previous proposals. However, these previous objections were not based on accurate information as to the number of forgotten widows. For example, Department of Defense [DOD] estimates of several years ago put the number of forgotten widows at close to 39,000. Other estimates in recent years range from 3,845 to 24,288, not including RSFPP annuitants. If there are only about 4,000 of these widows, my measure would cost about $8 million annually. The Defense Department cannot provide a reliable estimate. This is because the only source of calculation is widows who have defense I.D. cards, and many do not use, or renew their I.D. card, especially those living great distances from military hospitals.

Fortunately, with the partial implementation of the Defense Enrollment Eligibility Report System [DEERS], which is now the data base for military health care, a more accurate assessment of the number of forgotten widows is available. One recent estimate by DEERS projected the number of forgotten widows to be only 3,845. This significantly lowers the estimate of the projected cost of providing an SBP annuity to these widows. Previously, estimated annual costs ranged from less than $9 million to a maximum of $40 million. More accurate estimates of the number of forgotten widows should be available when the DEERS Program is fully implemented.

By including the relatively few RSFPP widows who currently receive small annuities, this proposal would avoid creating an annuity gap between RSFPP widows and the forgotten widows which this legislation is designed to help. In so doing, a major objection of my previous forgotten widows legislative proposals would be overcome. The cost of including these RSFPP widows would be nominal, since this legislation would only allow a nominal increase in these widows' current annuity and there are a small number of them. Also, the election is optional.

The main reason cost has been significantly reduced is because the level of benefits offered in the bill are dramatically reduced compared to previous proposals. Some say the benefit level is now much too low. However, as a matter of equity, it would provide the minimum optional benefit currently paid to beneficiaries of an SBP annuity. The annuity is only $1,980 per year, but the proposal contains provisions to preclude offsets and provides for cost-of-living adjustments.

Mr. President, I am mindful of the fact that the cost of any new program is a grave concern for all Senators. This is particularly true in a time when we are faced with massive budget deficits and an even larger outstanding national debt. However, the national debt is not the only debt this Nation owes. We owe a debt to these forgotten widows, and the similarly situated RSFPP annuitants. It is a debt that has gone unpaid for over a decade.

RAPID DECLINING COSTS

In addition, what I am proposing is not a permanent expansion of the SBP. The widows I have been talking about are not young, and they are not getting any younger. Their number grows smaller with each passing year. In fact, if we continue to let this problem go unaddressed 15 more years, it will simply go away. By the year 2000, it is doubtful that any of these widows will be alive. It will be too late for the Congress to correct a cross inequity. Failure to act, however, would be an unconscionable mark on the Congress well into the next century.

CIVIL SERVICE PRECEDENT

Mr. President, I think there are two things that one should keep in mind during consideration of this legislation. The first is that what I propose is not without precedent. In 1948, when the Civil Service survivor benefit plan was established, it too created an inequity very similar to the one I have been talking about here. However, in 1958, 10 years later, the act establishing the plan was amended and made retroactive to include all pre-1948 widows. It has now been almost 13 years since establishment of the SBP to replace the RSFPP Program, and the inequity created then remains with us still.

WIDOW SACRIFICES

The second factor for my colleagues to bear in mind in their consideration of this measure is the sacrifices and hardships these widows have endured.

Most of these women functioned in traditional family roles as wife, homemaker and mother in the context of military service. During long periods, they supported the military work of their husbands, while also contributing to the economic and emotional well-being of the family unit. In most cases, of course, the servicemen's inadequate pay and transitory lifestyle made a normal home and savings program practically impossible.

WIDOWS TRUST IN GOVERNMENT MISPLACED

Additionally, few military widows were aware of the ramifications of their husbands' deaths. Survivor benefits were assumed by these women who trusted that the military would not simply close the file and forget them after the deaths of their husbands. However, their blind trust was misplaced. In many cases, upon the death of the serviceman, all monetary benefits ceased. It was not until the passage of the SBP Program that it became mandatory under law that the spouse be notified in writing, if the serviceman chose not to participate in the SBP Program.

Mr. President, most of these forgotten widows are very elderly women of diminishing means. Some of them, whose husbands were covered by Social Security after 1957, rely solely on that source of income for their subsistence. Those whose husbands retired prior to 1956 are not covered by Social Security as a result of their husbands' military earnings.

VICTIMS OF MILITARY SERVICE

Mr. President, these military widows are victims of long periods with low pay, and many find themselves today existing in poverty. As economic captives, their current problems include dependence on welfare, evictions from apartments as buildings are converted to condominiums, skyrocketing health care costs, and unaffordable nursing home charges. Many are minimum-income widows who are in dire straits due to the fact that their meager income simply has not kept pace with inflation.

DIGNITY IN POVERTY

Over the past 10 years, I have received hundreds of pleading letters from these elderly widows from all across our country. Many of them are barely surviving. However, most, I am proud to say, have managed to keep their pride and dignity, even in poverty.

Mr. President, it is time to give the forgotten widows equitable consideration. Not only have we ignored their plight for these many years, but we have failed to acknowledge their cause. Understandably, they feel rejected, and some feel bitter. It is as if the country has turned its back on their courageous husbands who gave 20, 30, and in some cases, 40 years of the most productive years of their lives for our country. We must now give these forgotten widows the recognition and compensation they deserve.

RESTORE FAITH

Mr. President, the passage of my bill would be a milestone for these elderly widows who, in support of their husbands, gave the best years of their lives for our country. It is inconceivable that our country has deserted them for so long, and it is high time we face up to the responsibilities we owe these widows and restore the faith we have not maintained for our military community.

I urge my distinguished colleagues to act favorably and with compassion on this vital legislation, and to join me in working for its early enactment.●

By Mr. METZENBAUM:

S. 1532. A bill to provide for a moratorium on certain retirement plan reversions, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

PENSION PLAN REVERSION MORATORIUM ACT

● Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, more than 10 years ago Congress enacted the Employee Retirement Income Security Act [ERISA] for the purpose of protecting workers' pension rights.

ERISA was meant to ensure adequate funding for pension plans, to provide for vested pension benefits, and to hold pension plan administrators to the highest fiduciary standards.

There is no doubt that ERISA has had a positive effect. Important improvements have, in fact, been made in our pension system.

During the past several years, however, some employers have found ingenious new ways to avoid their pension plan responsibilities to their employees. By taking advantage of shortcomings in the pension laws, these unscrupulous companies have frustrated the intent of Congress to establish secure retirement programs for the working men and women of this country.

Specifically, employers are terminating pension plans, which are considered overfunded. The companies then recapture the surplus assets in these plans, thereby eliminating reserves that may later be needed to pay benefits. In addition, these terminations are just that—terminations of entire pension plans which leave employees without retirement security.

Typically we are talking about some of this Nation's most healthy pension plans—plans that are sponsored by solid, profitable companies.

Examples?

United Airlines is in the process of undertaking the largest reversion in history—$962 million will be removed from its plan to purchase additional planes and international air routes.

American Express, the first U.S. company to offer a pension plan, is now terminating it in order to recoup $90 million;

Texaco, which paid $10.2 billion last year to acquire Getty Oil, will reduce its debt by removing $250 million from the Getty pension plan.

The controlling interest of A&P was acquired by a German company for an estimated $70 million. It then terminated the plan and recouped $273 million.

Raymond International recouped $30 million to finance a leveraged buyout. According to its former senior vice president and board of directors member, the company left more than half the retirees living below the poverty line.

Mobil Oil, which found $5.7 billion last year to buy Superior Oil, will terminate two Superior plans and pocket $29 million.

And the list goes on.

Occidental Oil, Dr. Pepper, A&P, Champion Paper, Humana, Mattel, Reynolds Metals, U.S. Sugar—all of these have terminated pension plans.

Mr. President, most likely, additional terminations are in the offing. A recent survey of 200 defined benefit plans by Charles Spencer and Associates found that 83 percent were overfunded, making them prime candidates for termination.

For the major corporations of this country, pension plan terminations are a financial bonanza.

But for the working men and women of this country, the impact is truly devastating.

According to the Department of Labor's own study, the cost of termination to workers runs as high as 45 cents on every promised pension dollar.

Terminations deprive retirees of any hope of receiving future cost-of-living increases.

And employers are routinely breaking promises to distribute pension surpluses to their employees.

Pension plan terminations hurt segments of our population—the elderly, and older workers—that are least able to protect themselves. These are hard working people—people who have played by the rules. These are Americans who have looked forward to retirement with what they rightfully thought was a federally protected level of retirement income, only to discover that they are the victims of hollow promises.

I believe that the time has come for action to protect the integrity of our Nation's pension system.

The bill I am introducing today would impose a temporary moratorium on terminations of overfunded pension plans. Congressman ROYBAL, the chairman of the Select Committee on Aging is introducing identical legislation in the House.

The moratorium would apply for a 9-month period beginning June 12, 1985 to terminations with reversions that exceed $1 million. June 12, 1985 is the date on which the House Labor-Management Relations and Select Aging Committees conducted hearings on this issue. The bill provides an exception for companies that can show that the termination is undertaken because of a substantial business hardship.

Mr. President, both in public and private meetings, I have urged the Secretary of Labor to impose a temporary moratorium on pension plan terminations and to seek a permanent solution to this problem.

I still hope that the Labor Department will act to protect the retirement security of millions of Americans who are now in jeopardy. But in the meantime, I believe that it is incumbent on us to impose a moratorium in order to give Congress and the Administration the opportunity to review the issue and to enact appropriate legislation.

I hope that we can move expeditiously to enact this moratorium.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION. 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Pension Plan Reversion Moratorium Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. MORATORIUM OF 270 DAYS ON DETERMINATIONS INVOLVING PLAN TERMINATIONS.

(a) MORATORIUM ON DETERMINATIONS OF CONTINUING QUALIFICATION BY THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.—The Secretary of the Treasury (or his delegate) shall not, before the end of the 270-day period beginning June 12, 1985, issue a determination with respect to the continuing qualification of a retirement plan under subchapter D of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 upon an actual or proposed termination of the plan if the Secretary (or his delegate) determines that the aggregate amount of reversions to employers, upon termination of the plan, has exceeded or would exceed $1,000,000.

(b) MORATORIUM ON NOTICES OF SUFFICIENCY ISSUED BY THE PENSION BENEFIT GUARANTY CORPORATION.—During the 270-day period described in subsection (a), the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation shall not issue a notice of sufficiency of assets under section 4041 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 with respect to a plan if the Corporation determines that the aggregate amount of reversions to employers from the plan would, upon termination of the plan, exceed $1,000,000.

SEC. 3. EFFECT OF MORATORIUM ON DECLARATORY JUDGMENTS RELATING TO QUALIFICATION.

(a) COMPLIANCE WITH MORATORIUM NOT TREATED AS REMEDIABLE FAILURE.—In any case in which the Secretary of the Treasury (or his delegate) fails, in compliance with section 2(a), to make a determination referred to in such section during the 270-day period specified in such section, such failure shall not be treated as a failure for purposes of section 7476(a)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to creation of remedy under declaratory judgments relating to qualification of certain retirement plans).

(b) EXTENSION OF TIME FOR BRINGING ACTION AFTER MORATORIUM.—In the case of any request referred to in section 7476(b)(3) of such Code (relating to time for bringing action) made before or during the period specified in section 2(a), the 270-day period specified in such section 7476(b)(3) shall be extended to 270 days after the expiration of the period specified in section 2(a), except that such extension shall be reduced (in the case of a request made before the period specified in section 2(a)) by the number of days by which the date of such request precedes such period.

SEC. 4. EFFECT OF MORATORIUM ON PERIOD FOR ISSUANCE OF NOTICE OF SUFFICIENCY.

In the case of a notice that a plan is to be terminated which is filed with the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation pursuant to section 4041(a) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 before or during the period specified in section 2(b), the 90-day period referred to in such section 4041(a) shall be extended to 90 days after the expiration of the period specified in section 2(b), except that such extension shall be reduced (in the case of such a notice filed before the period specified in section 2(a)) by the number of days by which the date of such filing precedes such period. Nothing in this section shall be construed to preclude the further extension of such 90-day period (as extended under this section) as provided in section 4041(d) of such Act.

SEC. 5. WAIVER OF MORATORIUM.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—If the Secretary of the Treasury determines, upon application by an employer maintaining the plan, what the application of the moratorium under section 2 would result in substantial business hardship to the employer and would be adverse to the interests of plan participants in the aggregate, the Secretary shall waive the application of section 2 with respect to such plan. The Secretary shall notify the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation of any such waiver. Upon receipt of any application for a waiver under this section, the Secretary shall promptly transmit a copy of such application to the Committee on Education and Labor and the Select Committee on Aging of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources and the Special Committee on Aging of the Senate.

(b) HEARING REQUIREMENTS.—No determination shall be made pursuant to subsection (a) until after a hearing on the record before the Secretary. The employer who made application for such determination shall be required to appear at such hearing, and the Secretary shall allow the participants and beneficiaries of the plan to appear at such hearing or to submit their written comments regarding the application for such determination.

(c) SUBSTANTIAL BUSINESS HARDSHIP.—For purposes of this section, the factors taken into account in determining substantial business hardship shall include (but shall not be limited to) whether—

(1) the employer is operating at an economical loss,

(2) there is substantial unemployment or underemployment in the trade or business and in the industry concerned, and

(3) the sales and profits of the industry concerned are depressed or declining.

SEC. 6. MORATORIUM NOT APPLICABLE TO MULTIEMPLOYER PLANS.

The preceding provisions of this Act shall not apply in the case of multiemployer plans (within the meaning of section 414(f) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954).

SEC. 7. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The preceding provisions of this Act shall apply with respect to each determination and issuance described in section 2 made on or after June 12, 1985, and any such determination or issuance other than in accordance with this Act shall be void.●

By Mrs. HAWKINS (for herself, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. DODD, Mr. PELL, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. MATSUNAGA, and Mr. STEVENS):

S.J. Res. 181. A joint resolution to designate the week beginning September 1, 1985, as "National School-Age Child Care Awareness Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL SCHOOL-AGED CHILD CARE AWARENESS WEEK

● Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, today, I am introducing a resolution declaring the first week in September as National School-aged Child Care Awareness Week. This resolution is identical to the resolution which was adopted last year.

On October 23, and 24 of this year, the National Collaboration for Youth, which is compared of 13 national voluntary organizations who serve millions of our Nation's children and youth, will hold a symposium on school-aged child care. These organizations are concerned about the hundreds of thousands of children who are unattended or in makeshift care arrangements before and after school. The symposium is designed to explore issues involved in providing quality child care programs for school-aged children, emphasize the special value of voluntary agencies in the provision of child care services, encourage collaborative sharing of nonprofit, public, and corporate resources to help meet the needs of these children, and increase the public's awareness of the importance of such programs.

During the last session of Congress, I participated in two congressional hearings on this very important subject. The first was sponsored by the Senate Children's Caucus on June 9, 1983 and we heard testimony from Dr. Long, professor of education at Catholic University, Ed Zigler, director of the Bush Center in Child Development and Social Policy at Yale University, Evelyn Moore, director of the National Black Child Development Institute, Michelle Seligson of the school-age child project at Wellesley College and most importantly, the children who participate in these school-aged child care programs. The second hearing was held in St. Petersburg, FL, by the Senate Labor and Human Resources Subcommittee on Education and highlighted the success of Latchkey Services for Pinellas County, Inc., one of the largest latchkey programs in the United States.

Both hearings identified a need for Federal and State financial support to assist in the development and expansion of latchkey programs. Such a Federal program was authorized by Public Law 98-558 the Human Services Reauthorization Act. The Federal program authorizes that up to 60 percent of the Federal funds allocated for State block grant for child care be used to help establish before and after school child care programs in community centers and unused school facilities. The program was authorized too late in the fiscal year for funds to be appropriated for the latchkey program, but fortunately the Senate has recommended that $5 million be appropriated for this program in the supplemental appropriations bill currently pending in a House-Senate conference committee.

Mr. President, the Federal program of financial support for latchkey child care programs is limited to start-up funding only. If children of working parents are to be cared for by before and after school latchkey programs, the community must supply the ongoing support. The resolution that I am sponsoring today is designed to build that community support by increasing the public's awareness of the need for child care programs for the school-aged child. I urge my Senate colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this resolution.●

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. ZORINSKY, and Mr. INOUYE):

S.J. Res. 182. Joint resolution designating August 18, 1985, as "National Flowers By Wire Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL FLOWERS-BY-WIRE DAY

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, during the week of August 15, 1910, 15 retail florists attended the Society of American Florists Convention at the Hotel Seneca in Rochester, NY. Mr. President as you know, conventions are not an unusual occurrence in my State. However, the florists' convention of 1910 was noteworthy, for from it emerged an idea that would revolutionize the floral industry—flowers by wire. On August 18, 1910, 15 florists formed the Florists' Transworld Delivery [FTD] Association.

The Hotel Seneca has long since been razed; the membership of the FTD Association has grown, blossoming to more than 20,000 members nationwide. Today, flowers, to send birthday greetings, get-well wishes, or good luck, can be sent just about anywhere, from La Paz, Bolivia to Delhi, India, to Rochester, NY.

Today I am introducing a joint resolution to designate August 18, 1985, as "National Flowers By Wire Day." I join my colleague Congressman FRANK HORTON, in commerating the 75th anniversary of the formation of the Florists' Transworld Delivery Association, and I urge my Senate colleagues to join us in this joint resolution.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 182

Whereas August 18, 1985, is the 75th anniversary of the founding of the Florists' Transworld Delivery Association;

Whereas the Florists' Transworld Delivery Association was founded on August 18, 1910, in Rochester, New York, by 15 retail florists who were attending a Society of American Florists Convention;

Whereas the Florists' Transworld Delivery Association has grown over the past 75 years to include over 20,000 members in the United States, Canada, South and Central America, and parts of Asia;

Whereas the service of sending flowers by wire across a city, State, or country or around the world has become a commercial necessity;

Whereas flowers speak the universal language of joy, sympathy, love, and understanding; and

Whereas flowers with their color and beauty bring inspiration, serenity, and joy, so important in this unsettled world: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That August 18, 1985, is designated "National Flowers-by-Wire Day" and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe this day with appropriate activities.●

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today as an original cosponsor of legislation introduced by my distinguished senior colleague from New York to honor August 18, 1985, as National Flowers-by-Wire Day. Flowers are the symbols of love and beauty in our world.

For 50,000 years people have placed flowers on the graves of their loved ones—a tradition still widely practiced today. In Egypt and the Middle East, people started cultivating flowers in gardens around 3000 B.C. One could not imagine the Renaissance paintings of the Innunciation without the ever-present image of purity, the lily.

There are over 250,000 species of flowering plants or angiosperms on Earth. Yet with all these species, varying colors and sizes, different uses and meanings, many people would be bereft of their beauty and aroma if it were not for flowers-by-wire. FTD [Florists' Transworld Delivery Association] was founded 75 years ago, August 18, 1910, in my home State in Rochester, NY.

Fifteen retail florists were attending a Society of American Florists Convention at the old Hotel Senaca. From this grew FTD with 20,000 members in the United States, Canada, South and Central America, and parts of Asia.

I urge my colleagues to support a more beautiful world by cosponsoring and supporting this joint resolution.●

At the request of Mr. THURMOND, the name of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ROCKEFELLER] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 43, a joint resolution to authorize the Armored Force Monument Committee, the U.S. Armor Association, the World Wars Tank Corps Association, the Veterans of the Battle of the Bulge, the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment Association, the Tank Destroyer Association, the 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, and 16th Armored Division Associations, and the Council of Armored Division Associations, jointly to erect a memorial to the "American Armored Force" on United States Government property in Arlington, Virginia, and for other purposes.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 114

At the request of Mr. HEINZ, the names of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. GLENN], and the Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 114, a joint resolution designating August 29 as "Railroad Retirement Day."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 141

At the request of Mr. SASSER, the names of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PRESSLER], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. QUAYLE] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 141, a joint resolution to designate the week beginning May 18, 1986, as "National Tourism Week."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 147

At the request of Mr. HATCH, the names of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. DENTON], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER], and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WARNER], were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 147, a joint resolution to designate a calendar week in 1985 as "National Infection Control Week."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 150

At the request of Mr. BRADLEY, the names of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 150, a joint resolution to designate the month of March 1986 as "National Hemophilia Month."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 158

At the request of Mr. MURKOWSKI, the names of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. LAXALT], were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 158, a joint resolution designating October 1985 as "National Community College Month."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 159

At the request of Mr. JOHNSTON, the names of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. EAST], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. STAFFORD], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN], the Senator from Maine [Mr. MITCHELL], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HART], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MCCONNELL], were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 159, a joint resolution to designate the rose as the national floral emblem.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 166

At the request of Mr. DURENBERGER, the names of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. MATTINGLY] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HART] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 166, a joint resolution to appeal for the release of Dr. Yury Orlov and other Helsinki Final Act monitors.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 176

At the request of Mr. D'AMATO, the name of the Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 176, a joint resolution to provide that a special gold medal honoring George Gershwin be presented to his sister, Frances Gershwin Godowsky, and a special gold medal honoring Ira Gershwin be presented to his widow, Leonore Gershwin, and to provide for the production of bronze duplicates of such medals for sale to the public.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 179

At the request of Mr. KENNEDY, the names of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS], the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 179, a joint resolution requesting the President of the United States to resume negotiations with the Soviet Union for a verifiable comprehensive test ban treaty.

SENATE RESOLUTION 174

At the request of Mr. GORE, the name of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MELCHER] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 174, a resolution expressing the sense of the Senate with respect to the proposed closing and downgrading of certain offices of the Social Security Administration.

SENATE RESOLUTION 199

At the request of Mr. HEINZ, the name of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. ABDNOR] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 199, a resolution to urge the Senate of the United States to reject any tax reform proposal which would impose a tax on the annual increase in the value of permanent life insurance.

SENATE RESOLUTION 202

At the request of Mr. FORD, the name of the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MCCONNELL] were added as cosponsors of Senate Resolution 202, a resolution to urge negotiators for major league baseball owners and players to quickly settle their differences and avoid a scheduled players' strike.

SENATE RESOLUTION 206—REGARDING FEDERAL ACTION TO MITIGATE CONSEQUENCES OF HIGH WATER LEVELS ON THE GREAT LAKES

Mr. DURENBERGER (for himself, Mr. GLENN, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. QUAYLE, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. SIMON, Mr. SPECTER, and Mr. METZENBAUM) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

S. RES. 206

Resolved, That the Senate finds that—

(1) the Great Lakes Basin constitutes one of North America's most important natural regions and greatest natural resources;

(2) the Great Lakes Basin contains 20 percent of the total United States population and supports economic activity which accounts for 25 percent of the annual national income for the United States;

(3) the Great Lakes Basin provides recreational opportunities to over 60 million visitors each year at national, State and local parks;

(4) the vast surface area of the lakes, combined with the natural restrictions of the connecting channels, usually make the Great Lakes a naturally well-regulated system that is able to cope with huge water supply variations while maintaining water level fluctuations within one to two feet at any given time;

(5) precipitation for the Great Lakes Basin has been above average in 15 of the last 18 years, since 1977, 7 percent above average, and since August 1984, 32 percent above average;

(6) accordingly, water levels for Lakes Michigan, Huron, and St. Clair are exceeding the 1973 record highs and continue to be above average for Lakes Superior, Ontario and Erie.

(7) man's ability to regulate the levels of the Great Lakes is extremely limited;

(8) all control works in the Great Lakes system under the jurisdiction of the International Joint Commission are being operated to minimize, to the extent possible, damage; and

(9) the Government of Canada has reduced to the maximum extent possible diversions from the Albany River Basin into Lake Superior.

SEC. 2. It is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) there must be a concerted effort on the part of Federal agencies with flood control mandates, including the United States Army Corps of Engineers, Federal Emergency Management Agency, United States Department of Agriculture, and the Small Business Administration, jointly and severally, to plan for and execute efficient and effective cooperation and technical assistance to State and local governments to mitigate the consequences of the high water levels on the Great Lakes; and

(2) this concerted effort to mitigate the consequences of the high water levels on the Great Lakes should be done within existing law.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, as cochairman of the Great Lakes Task Force of the Northeast-Midwest Senate Coalition, I am pleased to submit on behalf of myself and my cochairman Senator GLENN, as well as my colleagues on the task force, Senators KASTEN, LUGAR, QUAYLE, RIEGLE, LEVIN, MOYNIHAN, BOSCHWITZ, SIMON, METZENBAUM and SPECTER, a sense of the Senate resolution to urge Federal agencies with flood control mandates to plan for and execute efficient and effective cooperation and technical assistance to State and local governments to mitigate the consequences of the high water levels on the Great Lakes.

The Great Lakes and their surrounding drainage area are one closely interrelated system, making the lakes one of the world's greatest natural resources. The vast surface area, combined with the natural restrictions of the connecting channels, usually make the Great Lakes a well regulated system that is able to cope with huge water supply variations while maintaining water level fluctuations within 1 to 2 feet in any 1 year. Today, however, we face an unusual situation.

The water levels on the lower lakes, Huron, Michigan, and St. Clair, exceeded the 1973 record levels this spring. The levels on Superior, Erie, and Ontario are near record levels. And they are expected to remain high throughout the fall. The International Joint Commission who has the responsibility to monitor the lake levels, has taken every available action within their jurisdiction to control the lake levels. The IJC hosted a House/Senate briefing on July 19 on this subject. I would like to commend the IJC for a thorough briefing.

The resolution we are submitting today is the result of that briefing as it became clear that man has less to do with the water levels of the Great Lakes than nature. And nature is the culprit responsible for the current high water levels on the lakes. I would like to insert in the RECORD an article entitled, "Nature, Not Engineers, Fills Up Great Lakes." This article clearly states the current situation on the lakes and what can and cannot be done.

Mr. President, this resolution reaffirms the commitment of the Federal Government to work together with private citizens, State and local governments to mitigate the consequences of the high water levels on the Great Lakes.

I ask unanimous consent that the article mentioned earlier be placed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Toledo Blade, May 5, 1985]

NATURE, NOT ENGINEERS, FILLS UP GREAT LAKES

(By Steve Pollick)

Great Lakes history is repeating itself with a vengeance this spring in the form of record high water levels, extensive shoreline flooding, and millions of dollars in property damages.

Shoreline damages in southeastern Michigan along Lake Erie and Lake St. Clair exceeded $30 million in a storm at the end of March.

As much as $10 million in damage have accumulated so far this spring in Ontario's Windsor-Chatham areas on the northern shore of Lake Erie and on the eastern shore of Lake St. Clair.

In the northernmost lake, Lake Superior, flooding damages exceeded $3.1 million in Marquette County, Mich., alone.

On the Lake Michigan side of Upper Michigan, the Escanaba River system at one point reached the so-called 500-year flood stage, according to the U.S. Geological Survey.

For thousands of lakeside resident, the high water and flood threat is a bitter, desperate case of deja vu. Indeed, many property owners have been there before, in the early 1970s. From 1972 to 1976 an estimated $119 million in high water-related damages occurred on Lake Erie alone.

The hard part to swallow for many persons, however, is that very little can be done to control high water periods, or low ones for that matter, on Erie or the other lakes.

Notions abound that somehow the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers is to blame, that the corps has been paid off by big shipping to keep water artificially high for big cargo vessels. That simply is not the case.

"People are desperate and the corps is visible, so they strike out" at the corps, said Ronald Wilshaw, chief of the lake hydrology section of the corps' Detroit district.

The problem of high water levels has been studied in great detail since the mid 1970s by the International Joint Commission of the United States and Canada, among others.

The IJC was created by treaty and was empowered, among other things, to make binding decisions in regard to boundary waters.

In a study on the feasibility of regulating water levels of Lake Erie, released at the end of 1981, the IJC said that significant, manmade regulation of lake levels is far too expensive, possibly running into hundreds of millions of dollars, and that regulation would constantly pit one set of legitimate interests against another.

Shippers, for example, might campaign for relatively high water and shoreline cottage owners might want relatively lower levels to expose beaches and minimize storm damage. Boaters and fishermen might want something in between. Shippers and hydroelectric power interests are something else still.

"Without there being a net economic benefit to all users of the system, you cannot justify regulating the lake to the benefit of one group," said Frank Bevacqua, an IJC spokesman. There is no other real basis for making such decisions, he added.

Regulating the level of Lake Erie also would create expensive problems downstream. "If you get more water out of Lake Erie you pass the problem downstream," he explained.

Measures would have to be taken to control higher water levels in Lake Ontario. In turn, additional measures would be necessary on the St. Lawrence River below Lake Ontario.

Politically such a complicated, ambitious project might be well nigh impossible to achieve, let alone afford, given the many private and often opposing interests—plus several state, two provincial and two federal governments that would have to be involved and satisfied.

Similar problems would accrue if attempts were made to increase diversion of Great Lakes waters from Lake Michigan via the Chicago Sanitary and Ship Channel.

The channel connects to the Illinois Waterway, which connects to the Mississippi River system. To substantially increase the flow through the Chicago channel in turn could cause downstream flooding along the waterway and on the Mississippi, according to Mr. Wilshaw of the Detroit corps office.

In a sense, the IJC threw up its hands over the Erie regulation problem, as evidenced by this statement in the 1981 study: ". . . there is a clear lack of public understanding of the various natural and manmade factors affecting Great Lakes water levels and the reasons for extreme high and low water levels."

The study also said: "Many shore property owners do not understand that natural factors are the main cause of lake-level fluctuations and that man's ability to control these fluctuations is limited. Still others believe that the outflows of Lake Erie are being regulated for the benefit of hydroelectric and navigation interests."

There is a diversion structure on the east end of Lake Erie, in the Niagara River, about a mile above the famous falls, 18 miles below Lake Erie, extending about halfway across stream from the Canadian side. It is connected to a hydroelectric generating station and its flow and the flow over the falls are apportioned by a 1950 treaty.

Contrary to what some persons believe, however, the structure has no effect on the level of Lake Erie. "If is has an effect, it's so small we can't identify it," said Bill Erdle, chief of water control for the corps of engineers' Buffalo district.

The river falls 10 feet from the end of Lake Erie to the hydro structure and any water "backed up" behind it would peter out well before lake level is reached upstream.

Another structure at the east end of Lake Erie, the Welland Canal, diverts shipping around the Niagara River into Lake Ontario. However, its effect on Lake Erie is to lower water levels about five inches, Mr. Erdle said.

Among the major recommendations for Lake Erie, the IJC urged greater use of "coastal zone-management practices" to reduce shoreline flooding and erosion—instead of trying to control the water level of the lake. Such practices include strict land-use zoning and building setback requirements.

The commission recently did order its Lake Superior board of control to reduce outflow without causing Superior to exceed its maximum agreed level of 602 feet above sea level. The order is similar to one issued during high water in 1973.

Control is possible because Superior's only outlet, the St. Mary's River, is regulated by a gated structure operated by two hydroelectric plants and shipping locks.

The IJC order will cause less water to be available for the hydro plants and cause some backup of Superior.

In other words, a tradeoff has been arranged in which hydro power and shoreline interests on Lake Superior will have to suffer a little so that shoreline interests below—on lakes Michigan, Huron, St. Clair, and possibly Erie—eventually may suffer a little less.

Even so, the slowing of flow from Lake Superior will take months to have just a small effect. In six months, the commission estimates, Michigan and Huron will be 3.5 inches lower, St. Clair 2.4 inches lower, and Erie just 1.7 inches lower.

"It's doing what we can do," explained Doug Cuthbert, chief of water planning and management for Environment Canada at Burlington, Ont. "It's the limit of what we can do."

High water problems on the northern side of the Great Lakes also are significant, he said. "Our concerns are basically very similar to that of the United States."

He tells, for example, of 20 cottages on Lake Erie's Long Point being swept from their foundations and deposited in pieces in a marshland behind and severe flooding and erosion on the point and also on Point Pelee.

The underlying problem for the high water is readily apparent if one takes a look at the big picture—rain and snow patterns for the entire Great Lakes Basin for the two decades or so.

Mr. Erdle at Buffalo noted that precipitation for the Great Lakes basin has been above average in 15 of the last 18 years, and in 2 of the 3 other years, 1971 and 1976, it was only slightly below average. The lone "dry" year was 1974.

Mr. Wilshaw at Detroit notes since 1967 the basins of Lakes Michigan and Huron have seen annual precipitation 5 per cent above average.

Since 1977 the basins' precipitation has been 7 per cent above average, and since August, 1984, 32 per cent above average.

Precipitation on Superior has not been as excessive, but also has been above average. The picture on the upper lakes is critical for Lake Erie, because it receives 80 per cent of all its water from the three big lakes, via the St. Clair and Detroit connecting rivers.

Tributaries in the Erie basin supply only 20 per cent of the lake's total water, but even there the above-average precipitation trend is evident.

"It's not necessarily the local rains, but other rain and snow . . ." Mr. Wilshaw explained. "You've got figures here that are just overwhelming."

He acknowledged that it is difficult for the individual to conceive of the sprawling Great Lakes system and how it is interconnected.

Indeed, many individuals take the "backyard view," basing their opinions on what they see or experience locally without regard to perhaps much more significant circumstances beyond the horizon.

Lack of rain in Toledo for a week or two, for example, may mean nothing at all to the level of Lake Erie, especially if at the same time areas of Michigan and Wisconsin and Ontario to the north and west, on Lakes Huron and Michigan, are receiving a lot of rain.

The high water just didn't go away after the floods of the early and mid-1970s. The storms did, for a while; in the meantime, lake levels slowly then more quickly built to current all-time highs.

Lakes Erie, St. Clair, Michigan, and Huron all are at all-time highs for spring, and that fact is not likely to change much by fall.

Evaporation cannot be counted on, despite the fact that it is sizable—36 inches a year on Lake Erie on average.

That loss is typically offset by average rainfall on the lake—coincidentally 36 inches.

In the end, all that can be done to control the high water is being done, namely the slowdown of Lake Superior outflow. But Canada's Mr. Cuthbert stresses: "It's not going to resolve the flood problem on Huron, St. Clair, and Erie to a large degree."

"People think of a lake as a normally placid body of water that just sits there," the corps' Mr. Erdle said.

He agrees with the analogy that the bathtub is full and the water is still running.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

RESPONSE TO UNFAIR JAPANESE TRADE PRACTICES

HOLLINGS AMENDENT NO. 556

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. HOLLINGS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1404) to require the President to respond to unfair trade practices of Japan; as follows:

On page 6, add the following immediately after line 6:

SEC. 3. POLICY.—The policy of this Act is—

(1) to prevent further disruption of the United States textiles and textile products markets, damage to United States textile and apparel manufacturers, and loss of jobs by United States workers by providing for orderly and non-disruptive growth of imports of textiles and textile products; and

(2) to implement the objectives of the Multi-Fiber Arrangement by requiring the effective enforcement of import levels of textile and textile products contemplated by the Multi-Fiber Arrangement.

SEC. 4 FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the United States and most major textile producing countries are parties to the Multi-Fiber Arrangement, the purpose of which is to ensure the orderly growth of imports of textiles and textile products and to avoid disruption of the markets for textiles and textile products in importing nations:

(2) the Multi-Fiber Arrangement, which first entered into force on January 1, 1974, and which was most recently extended in December, 1981, through July 1986, contemplates a 6 percent annual rate of growth for imports for most exporting countries and provides for a lower rate of growth for imports from major exporting countires.

(3) since 1980, the objective of orderly growth of imports of textiles and textile products provided for in the Multi-Fiber Arrangement has not been achieved; from 1981 through 1984 imports of textiles and textile products into the United States have grown at an annual rate of 19 percent, far in excess of the 1 percent growth rate of the United States market for textiles and textile products during the same period and far in excess of the annual rate of import growth of less than 2 percent that prevailed during the period 1974 through 1980;

(4) the disruptive surge in imports of textiles and textile products which occurred from 1981 through 1984 resulted from the failure of the United States to enforce adequately its rights under the Multi-Fiber Arrangement and to extend coverage of the Multi-Fiber Arrangement to imports made of competing fibers;

(5) import growth of apparel products has substantially outstripped the growth of the domestic market so that import penetration of the domestic market has more than doubled in the last 6 years, reaching a level of 50 percent in 1984;

(6) based on a nationwide audit of major retail outlets, the import penetration of such major items of apparel as trousers, blouses, shirts, suits, skirts and sweaters exceeds 50 percent of domestic consumption;

(7) since the most recent extension of the Multi-Fiber Arrangement, certain exporting countries have sharply increased their exports of textiles and textile products made in whole or in part from fibers not subject to the Multi-Fiber Arrangement with the effect of circumventing restraints agreed to under the Arrangement; the increased imports of these textiles and textile products have caused disruption of the United States market for textiles and textile products and have seriously undercut the effectiveness of the Multi-Fiber Arrangement;

(8) imports of textiles and textile products into the United States are predominantly the product of major exporting countries, with 5 large exporting countries now accounting for more than 50 percent of all imports of textiles and textile products;

(9) the domination of import trade by producers in the major exporting countries has limited participation in the United States market by other exporting countries, many of which share important trade and other national interests, and encourage mutually beneficial trade and investment, with the United States;

(10) a change in United States textile trade policy to afford the smaller exporting countries and countries in the Caribbean region a relatively greater share of imports of textiles and textile products would promote the national economic interests of the United States;

(11) the textile and apparel trade deficit of the United States was more than $16,200,000,000 in 1984, an increase of 53 percent over 1983, and accounted for 13 percent of the nation's overall merchandise trade deficit;

(12) the current level of imports of textiles and textile products, 9,800,000,000 square yard equivalents in 1984, represents over 1,000,000 job opportunities lost to United States workers;

(13) imported textiles and textile products now account for 38 percent (the equivalent of 3.2 million bales of cotton) of the annual cotton consumption in the United States; only one of five of the bale equivalents included in imported textiles and textile products is grown in the United States; the result of the massive increases in cotton textile and apparel imports has been a declining market share for, and a $1 billion loss to, domestic cotton producers in 1983 alone, which was only partially offset by Federal cotton program benefits; another result is that U.S. cotton producers, who are spending about $20 million annually in research and promotion efforts, have built markets not for themselves but for foreign growers;

(14) imports of wool products have doubled since 1980, creating major disruptions among domestic wool products producers and seriously depressing the price of United States produced raw wool; the United States has long recognized that imports of wool products pose particular problems for the wool products industries in the United States and has therefore adopted a policy of 1 percent import growth on wool products; this policy has been acknowledged in our bilateral agreements under the Multi-Fiber Arrangement and has been reviewed by the Textile Surveillance Body;

(15) as a result of this increased penetration and the very limited growth of the domestic market, the United States companies producing textiles and textile products identical, or similar, to those imported have been seriously damaged, many of them have been forced out of business, many have closed plants or curtailed operations, workers in such companies have lost employment and have been otherwise materially and adversely affected, and serious hardship has been inflicted on hundreds of impacted communities causing a substantial reduction in economic activity and lost revenues to local governments;

(16) the increase in imports and increased import penetration of the United States domestic market have occurred notwithstanding the fact that, through extensive modernization programs and investment in more modern equipment, productivity, as measured by output per man hour, in the textile mill products sector has increased in the last 10 years at the average annual rate of 4.2 percent and in the apparel sector at the average annual rate of 3.4 percent, as compared with the lower productivity growth of all manufacturing in the same period of 1.9 percent;

(17) the factors described above are causing serious damage, or the actual threat thereof, to domestic producers of textiles and textile products; as a result, market disruption exists in the United States requiring the new measures established under this Act;

(18) based on experience during the past ten years and on other factors, the growth of the United States market for textiles and textile products is unlikely to exceed an average annual rate of 1 percent during the next several years;

(19) if the rate of growth of imports of textiles and textile products into the United States that occurred since 1980 continues, plant closings will continue to accelerate, leaving the United States market with reduced domestic competition for imported products;

(20) in order to avoid further market disruption and deterioration of the situation confronting the United States industry producing textiles and textile products, which is already seriously damaged, it is essential—

(A) to require the establishment of import levels for textiles and textile products supplied by major exporting countries that reflect—

(i) the import level that would have occurred had imports from these countries grown since 1980 by the 6 percent or lower annual growth rate contemplated by the Multi-Fiber Arrangement, or 1 percent in the case of wool products, or

(ii) the actual import level resulting from restraints under a bilateral agreement with the United States providing for an annual import growth rate of less than 6 percent,

whichever is the lesser,

(C) to limit the future growth rate of imports of textiles and textile products into the United States to levels which reflect orderly growth as provided for in the Multi-Fiber Arrangement and the most recent Protocol extending the Multi-Fiber Arrangement;

(21) the establishment of import levels, and limitation of future import growth to levels, that reflect effective enforcement of the Multi-Fiber Arrangement and that also reflect the expected growth rate of the United States market for textiles and texile products will fulfill announced policy objectives of the United States regarding trade in textiles and apparel;

(22) as the Department of Defense has long recognized, a strong, viable and efficient domestic textiles and textile products industry is essential in order to avoid impairment of the national security of the United States;

(23) the developments that have led to the sharp increase in imports of textiles and textile products since 1980 may not have been foreseeable; nevertheless, the rights of the United States under international agreements should have been invoked in order to prevent increased quantities of textiles and textile products from being imported under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious damage to domestic producers of textiles and textile products in the United States; and

(24) the sharp increase in imports of textiles and textile products since 1980, and the effect of this increase on the United State textile and apparel industry and its workers, constitutes exceptional circumstances within the meaning of the Multi-Fiber Arrangement and its Protocol.

SEC. 5. AMENDMENTS TO AGRICULTURAL ACT OF 1956.—Title II of the Agricultural Act of 1956 is amended by inserting immediately after section 204 of such title the following new sections:

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 204A. For purposes of sections 204B through 204D of this Act—

"(1) The term 'textiles and textile products' includes, but is not limited to, all man-made fibers, tops, yarns, piece goods, made-up articles, garments, and other textile manufactured products (which derive their chief characteristics from their textile components) made in whole or in part from any natural or man-made fiber, or blend thereof, that are classified under Schedule 3, part 6 of Schedule 6, parts 1, 4, 5, 7, or 13 of Schedule 7, part 1 of Schedule 8, or part 1 of the Appendix to the Tariff Schedules of the United States (19 U.S.C. 1202);

"(2) The term 'category' means, with respect to textiles and textile products imported from each country, each of the following—

"(A) Each category of textiles and textile products identified by a 3-digit textile category number in the Department of Commerce publication 'Correlation: Textile and Apparel Categories with Tariff Schedules of the United States Annotated', dated January 1985;

"(B) A category consisting of the man-made fiber articles classified under subpart E of part 1 of Schedule 3 to the Tariff Schedules of the United States; and

"(C) Each category consisting of each of the following products when, because of any fiber content, that product is not subject to the Multi-Fiber Arrangement:

"(i) yarn,

"(ii) fabric,

"(iii) apparel, and

"(iv) other textile products;

"(3) The term 'import sensitive category' means—

"(A) A category (other than a category applicable to textiles and textile products that are a product of a country in the Caribbean region) for which the ratio of imports to domestic production, as reported in the Department of Commerce publication "U.S.

Production, Imports and Import/Production Ratios for Cotton, Wool and Man-Made Fiber Textiles and Apparel", equals or exceeds 40.0 for the preceding calendar year; or

"(B) A category covering wool products;

"(4) The term 'country' means a foreign country (other than Canada and the Member States of the European Economic Community as constituted on January 1, 1985), a foreign territory, or an insular possession of the United States;

"(5) The term 'major exporting country' means a country (other than a country in the Caribbean region) from which the United States imported an annual aggregate quantity of textiles and textile products under all categories that equalled or exceeded 1.25 percent of all textiles and textile products under all categories imported into the United States from all countries and from Canada and the Member States of the European Economic Community during calendar year 1984;

"(6) The term 'country in the Caribbean region' means the United Mexican States and a country eligible for designation as a beneficiary country under section 212 of the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act (19 U.S.C. 2702);

"(7) The term 'wool product' means an article containing over 17 percent by weight of wool;

"(8) The term 'exporting country' means a country other than a major exporting country;

"(9) The term 'entered' means entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption in the customs territory of the United States;

"(10) The term 'imported' means entered; and

"(11) The term 'Multi-Fiber Arrangement' means the Arrangement Regarding International Trade in Textiles, as extended by the Protocol done at Geneva, December 22, 1981.

"LIMITS ON TEXTILE AND APPAREL IMPORTS

"SEC. 204B.(a) Notwithstanding section 204 of this Act or any other provision of law, the aggregate quantity of textiles and textile products classified under each category that is entered during calendar year 1985 shall not exceed—

"(1) in the case of textiles and textile products that are a product of a major exporting country, the lesser of an amount equal to 101 percent (A) of the aggregate quantity of such products from such country classified under such category that would have entered during calendar year 1984 if the aggregate quantity of such products from such country classified under such category entered during calendar year 1980 had increased by six percent annually, or 1 percent annually in the case of a category covering a wool product, during calendar years 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, or (B) if the United States has an agreement with such country providing for an annual growth rate for such category of less than six percent, of the aggregate quantity of such products from such country classified under such category that entered during calendar year 1984;

"(2) in the case of textiles and textile products that are a product of an exporting country, an amount equal to the aggregate quantity of such products from such country classified under such category that entered during calendar year 1984, plus an amount equal to (A) fifteen percent of such quantity, in the case of a category that is not an import sensitive category, or (B) one percent, in the case of a category that is an import sensitive category.

For purposes of this section, if during any calendar year after 1984 the United States imports from a country, other than a country in the Caribbean region, that is not a major exporting country an aggregate quantity of textiles and textile products under all categories that equals or exceeds 1.25 percent of all textiles and textile products under all categories imported into the United States from all countries and from Canada and the Member States of the European Economic Community during such calendar year, then such country shall be considered to be a major exporting country for all succeeding calendar years.

"(b) For calendar years after 1985, the aggregate quantity of textiles and textile products classified under each category that may be entered during each such calendar year shall—

"(1) in the case of such products that are a product of a major exporting country, be increased by an amount equal to one percent of the aggregate quantity that could be entered under such category during the preceding calendar year; and

"(2) in the case of such products that are a product of an exporting country, be increased by an amount equal to—

"(A) in the case of a category (other than an import sensitive category), six percent of the aggregate quantity that could be entered under that category during the preceding calendar year, and

"(B) in the case of an import sensitive category, one percent of the aggregate quantity that could be entered under that category during the preceding calendar year.

"(c) If, under subsection (a) or (b), the aggregate quantity of textiles and textile products from a country that may be entered during a calendar year under a category is—

"(1) less than 1,000,000 square yard equivalents, in the case of a category covering yarn, fabric, made-ups, and miscellaneous products, other than wool products;

"(2) less than 700,000 square yard equivalents, in the case of a category covering apparel, other than wool products apparel; or

"(3) less than 100,000 square yard equivalents, in the case of a category covering wool products, then, notwithstanding subsection (a) or (b), the aggregate quantity of textiles and textile products that may be entered from such country under such category during the calendar year shall be 1,000,000, 700,000, or 100,000 square yard equivalents, respectively. The amount prescribed in the preceding sentence shall be accorded growth subject to the provisions of subsection (b) beginning the first calendar year after the aggregate quantity of imports from such country under such category equals the minimum quantity prescribed under this subsection.

"(d) The Secretary of Commerce shall prescribe such regulations governing the entry, or withdrawal from warehouse, for consumption of textiles and textile products as may be necessary to carry out sections 204A through 204D of this Act.

"IMPORT LICENSING

"Sec. 204C. In order to ensure the equitable and efficient administration of section 204B of this Act, the Secretary of Commerce shall, within six months after the date of enactment of the Agricultural Act of 1956 Textile and Apparel Trade Enforcement Amendments Act of 1985, establish and administer an import licensing system under which an importer of any textiles and textile products from any country and from Canada and the Member States of the European Economic Community, will be required to present an import permit as a condition of entry. The Secretary shall charge a fee for import licenses in such amount as may be necessary to cover the cost of administration of the system.

"ANNUAL REPORT

"SEC. 204D. Not later than March 15, 1986, and March 15 of each calendar year thereafter, the President shall submit to the Congress a report on the administration of sections 204A through 204C of this Act during the preceding calendar year. Such report shall include detailed information about the implementation and operation of the limitations established under section 204B. All departments and agencies shall cooperate in preparation of this report as requested by the President."

SEC. 5. EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(a) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by section 5 of this Act shall apply to textiles and textile products entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption after ——— —, 1985.

(b) CALENDAR YEARS 1985 AND 1986.—The Secretary of Commerce shall prescribe by regulation the aggregate quantity, if any, of textiles and textile products that may be entered under section 204B(a) or (c) of the Agricultural Act of 1956 as amended by this Act from each country under each category during the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending December 31, 1985. Notwithstanding subsection (a), to the extent that the aggregate quantity of imports of textiles and textile products from a country under a category entered after December 31, 1984, and before the date of enactment of this Act exceeds the quantity permitted entry for such country and such category during calendar year 1985 under section 204(B)(a) or (c) of such Act, the limit that would otherwise apply under section 204B(b) for such category for such country for calendar year 1986 shall be reduced by the amount of such excess quantity.

COMPREHENSIVE NUCLEAR TEST BAN TREATY RESOLUTION

LUGAR AMENDMENT NO. 557

Mr. LUGAR proposed an amendment to the joint resolution (S.J. Res. 179) requesting the President of the United States to resume negotiations with the Soviet Union for a verifiable comprehensive test ban treaty; as follows:

Add at the end of the Kennedy-Mathias resolution the following new section:

The Congress finds that:

August 6 marks the 40th anniversary of the detonation of the nuclear bomb at Hiroshima;

The Soviet Union has announced its intention to begin a five-month moratorium on nuclear testing on August 6;

A complete cessation of nuclear test explosions must be related to the ability of the United States to maintain credible deterrent forces;

Any test ban agreement must be verifiable and must be made in the context of deep and verifiable arms reductions;

The United States has concluded, based upon a thorough evaluation of the evidence, that the Soviet Union has repeatedly violated the Limited Test Ban Treaty and likely violated the Threshold Test Ban Treaty;

The President has now invited a Soviet team to observe and to measure a nuclear test at the Nevada Test Site, without a requirement of reciprocity, or any other conditions;

LUGAR AMENDMENT NO. 558

Mr. LUGAR proposed an amendment to amendment No. 557 proposed by him to the joint resolution Senate Joint Resolution 179, supra; as follows:

It is the sense of the Congress that at the earliest appropriate date, following certification by the President that, in the context of the requirement to maintain a viable nuclear deterrent, of assuring Soviet compliance and of achieving deep reductions in nuclear arms, substantial progress has been made on the verification of nuclear weapons testing, to include onsite monitoring, the President should propose to the Soviet Union the timely resumption of negotiations with the objective of concluding a verifiable comprehensive test ban treaty.

RELIEF OF KENNETH DAVID FRANKLIN

STEVENS AMENDMENT NO. 559

(Ordered referred to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.)

Mr. STEVENS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1027) for the relief of Kenneth David Franklin; as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SECTION 1. WAIVER OF EMPLOYEE STATUS REQUIREMENT AND TIME LIMITATION FOR CLAIMING DISABILITY RETIREMENT BENEFITS.

(a) WAIVER OF EMPLOYEE STATUS REQUIREMENT.—Notwithstanding the requirement of section 8334(d) of title 5, United States Code, relating to status as an employee, Kenneth David Franklin of Raleigh, North Carolina, or his spouse, may make a deposit under such section.

(b) WAIVER OF TIME LIMITATION.—Notwithstanding the time limitation of section 8337(b) of title 5, United States Code, on filing a claim for disability retirement benefits, Kenneth David Franklin shall be entitled, after making the deposit allowed in subsection (a), to receive disability retirement benefits under subchapter III of chapter 83 of such title based on the claim referred to in the decision of the Merit Systems Protection Board numbered AT831L8410231, dated April 20, 1984, and the decision of the Merit Systems Protection Board numbered AT08318410232, dated April 20, 1984.

SEC. 2. COMPUTATION OF BENEFITS.

Upon receipt of the deposit allowed in section 1(a), the Director of the Office of Personnel Management shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the aggregate amount of the disability retirement payments that Kenneth David Franklin would have received if he had been receiving such payments for the period beginning on February 3, 1980, and ending on the date of the commencement of the period covered by the first disability retirement payment pursuant to this Act. The Secretary of the Treasury shall pay such amount, and interest on such amount at an annual rate of 6 percent, compounded annually, to Kenneth David Franklin from funds contained in the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund.

EDUCATION OF THE HANDICAPPED ACT AMENDMENTS

WEICKER (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 561

Mr. DOLE (for Mr. WEICKER, for himself, Mr. HATCH, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. DOLE, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. PELL, Mr. SIMON, Mr. METZENBAUM, and Mr. DODD) proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 415) to amend the Education of the Handicapped Act to authorize the award reasonable attorneys' fees to certain prevailing parties, and to clarify the effect of the Education of the Handicapped Act on rights, procedures, and remedies under other laws relating to prohibition of discrimination; as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the committee amendment insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Handicapped Children's Protection Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. Section 615(e)(4) of the Education of the Handicapped Act is amended by inserting "(A)" after the paragraph designation and by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraphs:

"(B) In any action or proceeding brought under this subsection, the court, in its discretion, may award a reasonable attorney's fee in addition to the costs to a parent or legal representative of a handicapped child or youth who is the prevailing party.

"(C) Whenever the parent or legal representative of a handicapped child or youth—

"(i) is awarded fees under subparagraph (B), and

"(ii) is represented by a publicly funded organization which provides legal services,

the reasonable attorney's fee which is awarded pursuant to this subsection shall be computed based upon the actual cost related to the bringing of the civil action under this subsection to the publicly funded organization, including the proportion of the compensation of the attorney so related, other reasonable expenses which can be documented, and the proportion of the annual overhead costs of the publicly funded organization attributable to the number of hours reasonably spent on such civil action.

"(D) For the purpose of this paragraph, the term 'publicly funded organization' means any organization which receives funds, other than attorney fee awards, from Federal, State, or local governmental sources which are available for use during any fiscal year in which the action or proceeding is pending to enable the organization to provide legal counsel or representation.".

SEC. 3. Section 615 of the Education of the Handicapped Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) Nothing in this title shall be construed to restrict or limit the rights, procedures, and remedies available under the Constitution, title V of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, or other Federal statutes protecting the rights of handicapped children and youth, except that before the filing of a civil action under such laws seeking relief that is also available under this part, the procedures under subsections (b)(2) and (c) shall be exhausted to the same extent as would be required had the action been brought under this part.".

SEC. 4. The amendment made by section 2 shall apply with respect to actions or proceedings brought under section 615(e) of the Education of the Handicapped Act after July 3, 1984, and actions or proceedings brought prior to July 4, 1984, under such section which were pending on July 4, 1984.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION HEALTH CARE PROGRAMS

MURKOWSKI (AND CRANSTON) AMENDMENT NO. 560

Mr. DOLE (for Mr. MURKOWSKI, for himself and Mr. CRANSTON) proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 876) to amend title 38, United States Code, to establish, extend, and improve certain Veterans' Administration health-care programs; as follows:

On page 37, strike out lines 13 through 22.

On page 38, line 5, strike out "202" and insert in lieu thereof "201".

On page 38, line 11, strike out "203" and insert in lieu thereof "202".

On page 39, line 4, strike out "204" and insert in lieu thereof "203".

On page 64, strike out lines 8 through 18, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

ASSISTANCE FOR CERTAIN FORMER POLITICAL HOSTAGES

SEC. 502. (a) The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) In recent years some United States citizens have been held in captivity as political hostages or have been victims of other terrorist acts.

(2) The United States citizens who were passengers on TransWorld Airlines flight number 847 on June 14, 1985, were victims of a hijacking of such flight and some of those passengers were subsequently held in captivity as political hostages.

(3) The experience of being held in captivity as a political hostage is a traumatic event that is outside the range of usual human experience.

(4) Stressful experiences connected with such a traumatic event can be expected to evoke in some victims certain psychological reactions, including symptoms of stress, which may be manifested shortly after the event or may be manifested weeks, months, or even years later.

(5) There is no established program under which United States citizens may obtain systematic assistance in coping with the short-term or long-term personal effects of captivity as political hostages after they return home.

(6) The Veterans' Administration has developed expertise in providing readjustment assistance to veterans who have experienced traumatic and stressful events outside the range of usual human experience as a result of military combat.

(7) The Veterans' Administration medical centers, including 13 specially designated inpatient units for veterans with post-traumatic stress disorder, 187 readjustment counseling centers and satellite facilities for Vietnam-era veterans, and the National Center on Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder have staff with expertise (A) in diagnosing and treating veterans who have experienced traumatic and stressful events, and (B) in training Veterans' Administration and other health-care personnel in, and conducting research and exchanging information relating to, diagnosis and treatment of such veterans.

(b) The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall take appropriate action otherwise authorized by law to ensure that the expertise of the Veterans' Adminstration in diagnosing and treating individuals who have experienced unusual trauma and stress and in training health care personnel on such matters is made available to other Federal Government agencies and other appropriate organizations which are providing assistance to United States citizens who were passengers on TransWorld Airlines flight number 847 on June 14, 1985, or other United States citizens returning from captivity as political hostages, to attempt to minimize the potential short-term or long-term adverse psychological effects of such captivity on them.

On page 66, after line 24, insert the following new sections:

MODIFICATION OF RESTRICTIONS ON REAL PROPERTY AND CONVEYANCE OF A FENCE ON SUCH PROPERTY, SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH

SEC. 505. (a) Section 2 of the Act entitled "An Act authorizing the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to convey certain property to the Armory Board, State of Utah", approved July 29, 1954 (68 Stat. 580), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. Any conveyance under the first section of this Act—

"(a) shall provide that the tract conveyed may be used only for hospital, educational, civic, residential, or related purposes;

"(2) shall provide that, if any part of such tract is used in any manner that is determined by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to interfere with the care and treatment of any patient at a Veterans' Administration health-care facility located in the reservation described in such section, such use shall cease immediately upon notice by the Administrator of such interference to the Armory Board, State of Utah, and to each person using such part in such manner;

"(3) shall provide that, if any part of such tract is used for a purpose other than a purpose prescribed in paragraph (1), title to such part shall revert to the United States;

"(4) shall provide that, if any interference referred to in paragraph (2) does not cease as required under such paragraph, title to the part of such land that is being used in a manner to cause such interference shall revert to the United States; and

"(5) shall contain such additional terms and conditions (including reservations of rights for the United States) as the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs determines to be necessary to protect the interests of the United States.".

(b) The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall convey, without consideration, to the Armory Board, State of Utah, all right, title, and interest of the United States in the fence erected as required by the quitclaim deed issued to the Armory Board by the Administrator on October 14, 1954, under the authority of the Act referred to in subsection (a). The conveyance shall contain such terms and conditions as the Administrator determines to be necessary to protect the interests of the United States.

(c) The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall execute any documents that are necessary to bring the conveyance made under the authority of the Act referred to in subsection (a) into conformity with the amendment made by such subsection.

MODIFICATION OF RESTRICTIONS ON REAL PROPERTY, MILWAUKEE COUNTY, WISCONSIN

SEC. 506. (a) The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall execute such instruments as may be necessary to modify the conditions under which the land described in subsection (b) will revert to the United States in order to permit Milwaukee County, Wisconsin, to lease all or part of such land to a nonprofit corporation which shall (1) construct and equip on such land structures, facilities, and other permanent improvements useful for public recreational purposes or general civic purposes, and (2) use such land for such recreational or civic purposes. The Administrator may carry out the preceding sentence subject to such terms and conditions (including reservations of rights for the United States) as the Administrator determines to be necessary to protect the interests of the United States.

(b) The land referred to in subsection (a) is (1) the land conveyed to Milwaukee County, Wisconsin, pursuant to the act entitled "An Act to authorize the administrator of Veterans' Affairs to convey certain lands and to lease certain other land to Milwaukee County, Wisconsin", approved September 1, 1949 (63 Stat. 683), and (2) the land conveyed to Milwaukee County, Wisconsin, pursuant to the Act entitled "An Act authorizing the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to convey certain property to Milwaukee County, Wisconsin", approved August 27, 1954 (68 Stat. 865).

SERVICEMEN'S GROUP LIFE INSURANCE AND VETERANS' GROUP LIFE INSURANCE

SEC. 507. (a)(1) Subsection (a) of section 767 is amended—

(A) by striking out "$35,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$50,000"; and

(B) by striking out the amount of $30,000, $25,000, $20,000, $15,000, $10,000 or $5,000" and inserting in lieu thereof an amount less that $50,000 that is evenly divisible by $10,000".

(2) Subsection (c) of such section is amended by striking out "the amount of" the first place it appears and all that follows through "as the case may be," and inserting in lieu thereof "any amount less than $50,000, such member may thereafter be insured under this subchapter in the amount of $50,000 or any lesser amount evenly divisible by $10,000".

(3) Subsection (d) of such section is amended—

(A) by striking out "the effective date of this subsection" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "January 1, 1986"; and

(B) by striking out "up to a maximum of $35,000 (in any amount divisible by $5,000)" and inserting in lieu thereof "in the amount of $50,000 or any lesser amount evenly divisible by $10,000".

(b)(1) Subsection (a) of section 777 is amended—

(A) by striking out the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Veterans' Group Life Insurance shall be issued in the amounts specified in section 767(a) of this title. In the case of any individual, the amount of Veterans' Group Life Insurance may not exceed the amount of Servicemen's Group Life Insurance coverage continued in force after the expiration of the period of duty or travel under section 767(b) or 768(a) of this title."; and

(B) by striking out "$35,000" in the sentence immediately following the matter inserted by clause (A) and both places it appears in the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "$50,000".

(2) Such section is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(h)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, members of the Individual Ready Reserve and the Inactive National Guard are eligible to be insured under Veterans' Group Life Insurance. Any such member shall be so insured upon submission of an application in the manner prescribed by the Administrator and the payment of premiums as required under this section.

"(2) Notwithstanding subsection (b)(2) of this section, Veterans' Group Life Insurance coverage under this subsection shall be issued on a renewable five-year term basis, but the person insured must remain a member of the Individual Ready Reserve or Inactive National Guard throughout the period of the insurance in order for the insurance of such person to be renewed.

"(3) For the purposes of this subsection, the terms 'Individual Ready Reserve' and 'Inactive National Guard' shall have the meaning prescribed by the Administrator in consultation with the Secretary of Defense.".

(c) The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall take effect on January 1, 1985.

EXTENSION OF THE PERIOD FOR ENTERING INTO TRAINING UNDER THE EMERGENCY VETERANS' JOB TRAINING ACT OF 1983

SEC. 508. Section 17(2) of the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act of 1983 (Public Law 98-77; 29 U.S.C. 1721 note) is amended by striking out "September 1, 1985" and inserting in lieu thereof "March 1, 1986".

EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY TO OPERATE AN OFFICE IN THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES

On page 67, line 3, strike out "201(b), 203(b)" and insert in lieu thereof "202(b)".

On page 67, line 3, strike out "502(b)" and insert in lieu thereof "507(c)".

COMPACT OF FREE ASSOCIATION

HOLLINGS AMENDMENT NO. 562

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. HOLLINGS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (S.J. Res. 77) to approve the "Compact of Free Association", and for other purposes; as follows:

On page 91, add the following immediately after line 12:

ARTICLE VIII

SEC. 2. POLICY.

The policy of this Act is—

(1) to prevent further disruption of the United States textiles and textile products markets, damage to United States textile and apparel manufacturers, and loss of jobs by United States workers by providing for orderly and non-disruptive growth of imports of textiles and textile products; and

(2) to implement the objectives of the Multi-Fiber Arrangement by requiring the effective import levels of textiles and textile products contemplated by the Multi-Fiber Arrangement.

SEC. 3. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) the United States and most major textile producing countries are parties to the Multi-Fiber Arrangement, the purpose of which is to ensure the orderly growth of imports of textiles and textile products and to avoid disruption of the markets for textiles and textile products in importing nations;

(2) The Multi-Fiber Arrangement, which first entered into force on January 1, 1974, and which was most recently extended in December, 1981, through July 1986, contemplates a 6 percent annual rate of growth for imports for most exporting countries and provides for a lower rate of growth for imports from major exporting countries;

(3) Since 1980, the objective of orderly growth of imports of textiles and textile products provided for in the Multi-Fiber Arrangement has not been achieved; from 1981 through 1984 imports of textiles and textile products into the United States have grown at an annual rate of 19 percent, far in excess of the 1 percent growth rate of the United States market for textiles and textile products during the same period and far in excess of the annual rate of import growth of less than 2 percent that prevailed during the period 1974 through 1980;

(4) the disruptive surge in imports of textiles and textile products which occurred from 1981 through 1984 resulted from the failure of the United States to enforce adequately its rights under the Multi-Fiber Arrangement and to extend coverage of the Multi-Fiber Arrangement to imports made of competing fibers;

(5) import growth of apparel products has substantially outstripped the growth of the domestic market so that import penetration of the domestic market has more than doubled in the last 6 years, reaching a level of 50 percent in 1984;

(6) based on a nationwide audit of major retail outlets, the import penetration of such major items of apparel as trousers, blouses, shirts, suits, skirts and sweaters exceeds 50 percent of domestic consumption;

(7) since the most recent extension of the Multi-Fiber Arrangement, certain exporting countries have sharply increased their exports of textiles and textile products made in whole or in part from fibers not subject to the Multi-Fiber Arrangement with the effect of circumventing restraints agreed to under the Arrangement; the increased imports of these textiles and textile products have caused disruption of the United States market for textiles and textile products and have seriously undercut the effectiveness of the Multi-Fiber Arrangement;

(8) imports of textiles and textile products into the United States are predominantly the product of major exporting countries, with 5 large exporting countries now accounting for more than 50 percent of all imports of textiles and textile products;

(9) the domination of import trade by producers in the major exporting countries has limited participation in the United States market by other exporting countries, many of which share important trade and other national interests, and encourage mutually beneficial trade and investment, with the United States;

(10) a change in United States textile trade policy to afford the smaller exporting countries and countries in the Caribbean region a relatively greater share of imports of textiles and textile products would promote the national economic interests of the United States;

(11) the textile and apparel trade deficit of the United States was more than $16,200,000,000 in 1984, an increase of 53 percent over 1983, and accounted for 13 percent of the nation's overall merchandise trade deficit;

(12) the current level of imports of textiles and textile products, 9,800,000,000 square yard equivalents in 1984, represents over 1,000,000 job opportunities lost to United States workers;

(13) imported textiles and textile products now account for 38 percent (the equivalent of 3.2 million bales of cotton) of the annual cotton consumption in the United States; only one of five of the bale equivalents included in imported textiles and textile products is grown in the United States; the result of the massive increases in cotton textile and apparel imports has been a declining market share for, and a $1 billion loss to, domestic cotton producers in 1983 alone, which was only partially offset by Federal cotton program benefits; another result is that U.S. cotton producers, who are spending about $20 million annually in research and promotion efforts, have built markets not for themselves but for foreign growers;

(14) imports of wool products have doubled since 1980, creating major disruptions among domestic wool products producers and seriously depressing the price of United States produced raw wool; the United States has long recognized that imports of wool products pose particular problems for the wool products industries in the United States and has therefore adopted a policy of 1 percent import growth on wool products; this policy has been acknowledged in our bilateral agreements under the Multi-Fiber Arrangement and has been reviewed by the Textile Surveillance Body;

(15) as a result of this increased penetration and the very limited growth of the domestic market, the United States companies producing textiles and textile products identical, or similar, to those imported have been seriously damaged, many of them have been forced out of business, many have closed plants or curtailed operations, workers in such companies have lost employment and have been otherwise materially and adversely affected, and serious hardship has been inflicted on hundreds of impacted communities causing a substantial reduction in economic activity and lost revenues to local governments;

(16) the increase in imports and increased import penetration of the United States domestic market have occurred notwithstanding the fact that, through extensive modernization programs and investment in more modern equipment, productivity, as measured by output per man hour, in the textile mill products sector has increased in the last 10 years at the average annual rate of 4.2 percent and in the apparel sector at the average annual rate of 3.4 percent, as compared with the lower productivity growth of all manufacturing in the same period of 1.9 percent;

(17) the factors described above are causing serious damage, or the actual threat thereof, to domestic producers of textiles and textile products; as a result, market disruption exists in the United States requiring the new measures established under this Act;

(18) based on experience during the past ten years and on other factors, the growth of the United States market for textiles and textile products is unlikely to exceed an average annual rate of 1 percent during the next several years;

(19) if the rate of growth of imports of textiles and textile products into the United States that occurred since 1980 continues, plant closings will continue to accelerate, leaving the United States market with reduced domestic competition for imported products;

(20) in order to avoid further market disruption and deterioration of the situation confronting the United States industry producing textiles and textile products, which is already seriously damaged, it is essential—

(A) to require the establishment of import levels for textiles and textile products supplied by major exporting countries that reflect—

(i) the import level that would have occurred had imports from these countries grown since 1980 by the 6 percent or lower annual growth rate contemplated by the Multi-Fiber Arrangement, or 1 percent in the case of wool products, or

(ii) the actual import level resulting from restraints under a bilateral agreement with the United States providing for an annual import gowth rate of less than 6 percent,

whichever is the lesser,

(C) to limit the future growth rate of imports of textiles and textile products into the United States to levels which reflect orderly growth as provided for in the Multi-Fiber Arrangement and the most recent Protocol extending the Multi-Fiber arrangement;

(21) the establishment of import levels, and limitation of future import growth to levels, that reflect effective enforcement of the Multi-Fiber Arrangement and that also reflect the expected growth rate of the United States market for textiles and textile products will fulfill announced policy objectives of the United States regarding trade in textiles and apparel;

(22) as the Department of Defense has long recognized, a strong, viable and efficient domestic textiles and textile products industry is essential in order to avoid impairment of the national security of the United States;

(23) the developments that have led to the sharp increase in imports of textiles and textile products since 1980 may not have been foreseeable; nevertheless, the rights of the United States under international agreements should have been invoked in order to prevent increased quantities of textiles and textile products from being imported under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious damage to domestic producers of textiles and textile products in the United States; and

(24) the sharp increase in imports of textiles and textile products since 1980, and the effect of this increase on the United States textile and apparel industry and its workers, constitutes exceptional circumstances within the meaning of the Multi-Fiber Arrangement and its Protocol.

SEC. 4. AMENDMENTS TO AGRICULTURAL ACT OF 1956.

Title II of the Agricultural Act of 1956 is amended by inserting immediately after section 204 of such title the following new sections:

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 204A. For purposes of sections 204B through 204D of this Act—

"(1) The term 'textiles and textile products' includes, but is not limited to, all man-made fibers, tops, yarns, piece goods, made-up articles, garments, and other textile manufactured products (which derive their chief characteristics from their textile components) made in whole or in part from any natural or man-made fiber, or blend thereof, that are classified under Schedule 3, part 6 of Schedule 6, parts 1, 4, 5, 7 or 13 of Schedule 7, part 1 of Schedule 8, or part 1 of the Appendix to the Tariff Schedules of the Untied States (19 U.S.C. 1202);

"(2) The term 'category' means, with respect to textiles and textile products imported from each country, each of the following—

"(A) Each category of textiles and textile products identified by a 3-digit textile category number in the Department of Commerce publication 'Correlation: Textile and Apparel Categories with Tariff Schedules of the United States Annotated', dated January 1985;

"(B) A category consisting of the man-made fiber articles classified under subpart E of part 1 of Schedule 3 to the Tariff Schedules of the United States; and

"(C) Each category consisting of each of the following products when, because of any fiber content, that product is not subject to the Multi-Fiber Arrangement:

"(i) yarn,

"(ii) fabric,

"(iii) apparel, and

"(iv) other textile products;

"(3) The term 'import sensitive category' means—

"(A) A category (other than a category applicable to textiles and textile products that are a product of a country in the Caribbean region) for which the ratio of imports to domestic production, as reported in the Department of Commerce publication "U.S. Production, Imports and Import/Production Ratios for Cotton, Wool and Man-Made Fiber Textiles and Apparel", equals or exceeds 40.0 for the preceding calendar year; or

"(B) A category covering wool products;

"(4) The term 'country' means a foreign country (other than Canada and the Member States of the European Economic Community as constituted on January 1, 1985), a foreign territory, or an insular possession of the United States;

"(5) The term 'major exporting country' means a country (other than a country in the Caribbean region) from which the United States imported an annual aggregate quantity of textiles and textile products under all categories that equalled or exceeded 1.25 percent of all textiles and textile products under all categories imported into the United States from all countries and from Canada and the Member States of the European Economic Community during calendar year 1984;

"(6) The term 'country in the Caribbean region' means the United Mexican States and a country eligible for designation as a beneficiary country under section 211 of the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act (19 U.S.C. 2702);

"(7) The term 'wool product' means an article containing over 17 percent by weight of wool;

"(8) The term 'exporting country' means a country other than a major exporting country;

"(9) The term 'entered' means entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption in the customs territory of the United States;

"(10) The term 'imported' means entered; and

"(11) The term 'Multi-Fiber Arrangement' means the Arrangement Regarding International Trade in Textiles, as extended by the Protocal done at Geneva, December 22, 1981.

"LIMITS ON TEXTILE AND APPAREL IMPORTS

"SEC. 204B. (a) Notwithstanding section 204 of this Act or any other provision of law, the aggregate quantity of textiles and textile products classified under each category that is entered during calendar year 1985 shall not exceed—

"(1) in the case of textiles and textile products that are a product of a major exporting country, the lesser of an amount equal to 101 percent (A) of the aggregate quantity of such products from such country classified under such category that would have entered during calendar year 1984 if the aggregate quantity of such products from such country classified under such category entered during calendar year 1980 had increased by six percent annually, or 1 percent annually in the case of a category covering a wool product, during calendar years 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, or (B) if the United States has an agreement with such country providing for an annual growth rate for such category of less than six percent, of the aggregate quantity of such products from such country classified under such category that entered during calendar year 1984;

"(2) in the case of textiles and textile products that are a product of an exporting country, an amount equal to the aggregate quantity of such products from such country classified under such category that entered during calendar year 1984, plus an amount equal to (A) fifteen percent of such quantity, in the case of a category that is not an import sensitive category, or (B) one percent, in the case of a category that is an import sensitive category.

For purposes of this section, if during any calendar year after 1984 the United States imports from a country, other than a country in the Caribbean region, that is not a major exporting country an aggregate quantity of textiles and textile products under all categories that equals or exceeds 1.25 percent of all textiles and textile products under all categories imported into the United States from all countries and from Canada and the Member States of the European Economic Community during such calendar year, then such country shall be considered to be a major exporting country for all succeeding calendar years.

"(b) For calendar years after 1985, the aggregate quantity of textiles and textile products classified under each category that may be entered during each such calendar year shall—

"(1) in the case of such products that are a product of a major exporting country, be increased by an amount equal to one percent of the aggregate quantity that could be entered under such category during the preceding calendar year; and

"(2) in the case of such products that are a product of an exporting country, be increased by an amount equal to—

"(A) in the case of a category (other than an import sensitive category), six percent of the aggregate quantity that could be entered under that category during the preceding calendar year, and

"(B) in the case of an import sensitive category, one percent of the aggregate quantity that could be entered under that category during the preceding calendar year.

"(C) If, under subsection (a) or (b), the aggregate quantity of textiles and textile products from a country that may be entered during a calendar year under a category is—

"(1) less than 1,000,000 square yard equivalents, in the case of a category covering yarn, fabric, made-ups, and miscellaneous products, other than wool products;

"(2) less than 700,000 square yard equivalents, in the case of a category covering apparel, other than wool products apparel; or

"(3) less than 100,000 square yard equivalents, in the case of a category covering wool products, then, notwithstanding subsection (a) or (b), the aggregate quantity of textiles and textile products that may be entered from such country under such category during the calendar year shall be 1,000,000, 700,000 or 100,000 square yard equivalents, respectively. The amount prescribed in the preceding sentence shall be accorded growth subject to the provisions of subsection (b) beginning the first calendar year after the aggregate quantity of imports from such country under such category equals the minimum quantity prescribed under this subsection.

"(d) The Secretary of Commerce shall prescribe such regulations governing the entry, or withdrawal from warehouse, for consumption of textiles and textile products as may be necessary to carry out sections 204A through 204D of this Act.

"IMPORT LICENSING

"SEC. 204C. In order to ensure the equitable and efficient administration of section 204B of this Act, the Secretary of Commerce shall, within six months after the date of enactment of the Agricultural Act of 1956 Textile and Apparel Trade Enforcement Amendments Act of 1985, establish and administer an import licensing system under which an importer of any textiles and textile products from any country and from Canada and the Member States of the European Economic Community, will be required to present an import permit as a condition of entry. The Secretary shall charge a fee for import licenses in such amount as may be necessary to cover the cost of administration of the system.

"ANNUAL REPORT

"SEC. 204D. Not later than March 15, 1986, and March 15 of each calendar year thereafter, the President shall submit to the Congress a report on the administration of sections 204A through 204C of this Act during the preceding calendar year. Such report shall include detailed information about the implementation and operation of the limitations established under section 204B. All departments and agencies shall cooperate in preparation of this report as requested by the President."

SEC. 5. EFFECTIVE DATE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by section 4 of this Act shall apply to textiles and textile products entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption after ——— —, 1985.

(b) CALENDAR YEARS 1985 AND 1986.—The Secretary of Commerce shall prescribe by regulation the aggregate quantity, if any, of textiles and textile products that may be entered under section 204B (a) or (c) of the Agricultural Act of 1956 as amended by this Act from each country under each category during the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending December 31, 1985. Notwithstanding subsection (a), to the extent that the aggregate quantity of imports of textiles and textile products from a country under a category entered after December 31, 1984, and before the date of enactment of this Act exceeds the quantity permitted entry for such country and such category during calendar year 1985 under section 204B (a) or (c) of such Act, the limit that would otherwise apply under section 204B(b) for such category for such country for calendar year 1986 shall be reduced by the amount of such excess quantity.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

SUBCOMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS, RESERVED WATER, AND RESOURCES CONSERVATION

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the Senate and the public the scheduling of a public hearing before the Public Lands, Reserved Water and Resource Conservation Subcommittee of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources on Wednesday, August 7, 1985, in Twin Falls, ID. The subcommittee will receive testimony from the public on S. 1528 to provide for the expenditure of transfer of funds by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture for the emergency prevention, suppression, control, or eradication of grasshoppers or mormon crickets on public lands.

The hearing will be held at the College of Southern Idaho, Shields Building, rooms 17-118, 315 Falls Avenue, Twin Falls, ID, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Those wishing to testify should contact the offices of Senator JAMES A. MCCLURE in the following cities in Idaho:

Boise, ID, 304 North Eighth Street, room 149, 208-334-1560.

Twin Falls, ID, 401 Second Street North, suite 106, 208-734-6780.

Pocatello, ID, 216 Federal Building, 250 South 4th Avenue 208-236-6817.

Idaho Falls, ID, 482 C Street, suite 304, 208-523-5541.

Oral testimony may be limited to 3 minutes per witness. Written statements may be longer. Witnesses may be placed in panels and are requested to bring five copies of their testimony with them to the hearing. Those wishing to testify should sign up no later than Tuesday, August 6, 1985, at 12 noon.

For further information, please contact Senator MCCLURE's offices at the above listed numbers or Mr. Tony Bevinetto of the subcommittee staff at (202) 224-5161.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Governmental Affairs be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Tuesday, July 30, to hold a hearing to consider the nomination of Constance J. Horner, to be Director of the Office of Personnel Management.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE, NUTRITION, AND FORESTRY

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Tuesday, July 30, 1985, from 3 p.m. until 5 p.m. in order to mark up S. 616, the farm bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON RULES AND ADMINISTRATION

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules and Administration be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Tuesday, July 30, to consider pending calendar business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

JAPANESE TRADE TACTICS

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, Japanese trade tactics are wrecking our economy and destroying American jobs. We must address this hostile challenge now before even further job loss and long-term economic damage is done.

The Department of Commerce announced this morning that the U.S. trade deficit with Japan soared to a record $4.573 billion just for the month of June. Our trade deficit with Japan almost doubled in 1984, and will balloon by a further one-third this year, to perhaps $50 billion.

The U.S. exports primarily raw materials to Japan such as corn, oil seeds, coal, lignite, and peat. Japan, on the other hand, exports primarily manufactured goods to the United States such as autos and consumer electronics. They have now openly targeted commercial electronics, the production technologies of the future, as their next goal for domination.

I ask that there be printed in the RECORD two related articles from the New York Times: One on Japanese targeting of the semiconductor industry and one, by Theodore White, which outlines the history and the nature of the Japanese strategy.

The articles follow.

[From the New York Times, July 27, 1985]

HOW JAPAN PLAYS WHEN THE CHIPS ARE ON THE TABLE

To the Editor:

"Why Japan Won the Chip Race" (editorial, July 5) puts the tail on the wrong end of the dog. Your argument that Japan has "won" the race because of the high dollar, Japan's lower cost of capital and because "Japanese companies worked for years at refining their production techniques and increasing their market share" (as if American companies did not) provides an inaccurate portrayal of the international competitive situation in the semiconductor industry.

In fact, except in Japan, where the American industry has been unfairly excluded, the United States commands an overwhelming market share against the Japanese: 5 to 1 in the United States and Europe, and 2 to 1 in other countries where companies from the two countries compete head to head.

This is not to say that there are not many fundamental macroeconomic reforms that the United States should take immediately to strengthen its industrial base. The semiconductor industry has long supported measures, such as reductions in the Federal budget deficit and changes in the tax code to encourage saving, to remedy our economy's structural problems. We agree with you that such steps are essential. However, at least with respect to semiconductors, there are major trade problems that are not macroeconomic. They can be traced directly to specific unfair trade practices by the Japanese Government and by Japanese companies.

For example, you dismiss the documented factual record of coordinated action by Japanese Government and industry to exclude American semiconductor products from the world's second largest market as "clannish buying practices," as though the actions were merely impolite, rather than the sort for which American executives would be sent to jail. Nor, apparently, do you comprehend just how damaging this policy is.

In an industry where technological change is constant, cash flow for research and development is absolutely essential if a company is to remain competitive. A home market protected in good times and bad can provide such a steady source of funds, as well as economies of scale unavailable to those excluded.

You also dismiss documentation of predatory pricing by the Hitachi Corporation by referring to exchange-rate differentials, as though they could explain the fall of prices for the 256K Eprom chip from more than $20 each when Hitachi entered the market in November 1984 to little more than $4 today, following a six-month period during which the yen rose against the dollar. Why not simply take Hitachi at its word? It is prepared to dump chips at any price to drive competitors from the marketplace.

In short, there is more than ample evidence that Japanese targeting practices, not structural differences in the two economies, are the principal cause of the current situation in the semiconductor industry. Our industry is competitive with the Japanese wherever it is given a fair chance to compete. We have not sought import restrictions.

It surpasses understanding that you would not be in support of efforts to open markets to competition. Perhaps if you examined the evidence, you would recognize the injustice that you have done to America's most important high-technology industry.—

Thomas D. Hinkelman, President, Semiconductor Industry Association, San Jose, Calif., July 18, 1985.

THE DANGER FROM JAPAN

(By Theodore H. White)

No sense of irony stained the spectacle of victory aboard the U.S.S. Missouri, no sense of shadows to rise years later.

We were all too bedazzled by the splendor of the day—for here was American power at its zenith. We had won the war, totally, and the men who had won it, soon to become legend, were all there on the veranda deck in pressed suntans or navy whites. A band had been swinging through "Anchors Aweigh" as we gathered that morning, but as the climax approached a hush fell; silence stretched like a blanket over our murmurings.

None of us of course knew what America would make of the victory, or the Japanese of their defeat. But the power was all ours and stretched, visibly, as far as the eye could see. The Third Fleet had come in from offshore and now crowded Tokyo Bay—flattops and battleships, cruisers and destroyers, guns trained on the land we had laid waste. There was no question but that we had won this war.

It was Sunday, Sept. 2, 1945, there on the other side of the dateline, and the skies, after a Saturday drizzle, stretched gray. But this was no guarded and hidden schoolhouse, with only a handful present to watch, as at the surrender of German forces only four months earlier at Rheims. Douglas MacArthur's sense of drama insisted that all the world be there to witness, and we were several hundreds thick on the foredeck.

The Missouri had been swept clean. The Stars and Stripes above the mainmast was the same that had fluttered over the Capitol on the day Japan attacked Pearl Harbor; it had just been flown out from Washington. The flag of Commodore Perry, who had pried Japan open to the West 90 years before, was draped on the rear turret, with the 31 stars of the then half-grown union faded but clear. And on each of the three 16-inch guns clung our sailors in white, holding on by a handgrip, or with their legs curled tight about the barrels.

Just in front of the turret was the surrender table, draped in a navy-blue coverlet, bare but for the documents. There the Japanese would sign. A few minutes before the appointed hour we heard the piping that announced the launch carrying the Japanese was alongside. We watched them come aboard: Mamoru Shigemitsu, the Japanese Foreign Minister, in morning coat and striped trousers; Gen. Yoshijiro Umezu, Chief of Staff of the army, in his starched brown uniform. Shigemitsu limped, for he had been crippled years before by Japanese terrorists who had tried to kill him, considering him a man of peace. But that brought him no sympathy from us now as he grasped the rail to pull himself up, then limped to the table of surrender.

I bristled at the sight of them. I had seen the Japanese blast and flame Chungqing, the city I had lived in years before, then bring their planes down to machinegun people in the streets. Japanese had shot at me, I had fired at them, and so the luxury of this moment was one I enjoyed. Others, too, hated the Japanese—perhaps all except Douglas MacArthur, who saw them as he saw all Orientals, as errant little brown brothers who must be rebuked, but then brought into Western civilization. Yet that day he was task-master and conqueror.

A few minutes after 9, General MacArthur himself appeared, and the Japanese came forward. No one helped Shigemitsu, but some Americans more generous than I brought him a chair to sit on as he signed the surrender. Next came Umezu, the brown pock marks on his cheeks swelling and falling as he clenched his jaws. He wanted no chair: he stood stiffly, unfolded like a jackknife, then bent and signed the paper: Neither said anything. Then MacArthur spoke for peace and conciliation—rather well, I think now as I read his text 40 years later. Then all the others signed. I notice, as I follow the notes I made on my copy of the text, that when the Dutch representative signed, the sun broke through the clouded morning, and the scene began to glisten.

At this point happened the episode that stands out sharpest among the memories of that day—the flyover. As MacArthur intoned "These proceedings are closed," we heard a drone and looked up. It is difficult to recall now, after years of floundering and blunder, how very good we were in those days, with what precision we ordered things. Four hundred B-29s had taken off from Guam and Saipan hours before to arrive over the Missouri at this precise minute of climax. They stretched across the rim of the horizon, and their heavy droning almost instantly harmonized with a softer buzzing as 1,500 fleet aircraft from our flattops joined them. The B-29s had burned out Japan's cities, dropped the two big bombs; the fleet aircraft had sunk the Japanese Navy. Now the killing arms of our power, the air forces, slid down their height in the sky to circle low over the armada of American ships. Then, still very low, they disappeared across the sky, over two cities they had left in ruins, first Yokohama, then Tokyo, as if brandishing our power over the people who had dared, without warrant and with planned deceit, to attack and bloody us at Pearl Harbor.

We had won out over them. We lost more than 100,000 men to prove we could not be lacerated without warning, without seeking revenge.

Except that America's revenge on Japan was of such an extrordinary character as to befuddle all scholars who claim that history has a logic of its own. What we are faced with now is the idea that events contradict history's logic. Perhaps we did not win the war, perhaps the Japanese, unknown even to themselves, were the winners.

It had taken us years to get to Tokyo Bay. But that story had begun with an idea, as all wars do.

As a very young reporter, I had gone to Asia, and there became acquainted with the crowning Japanese idea: "The Greater East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere." The slogan was scrawled across the walls of all the regions I visited, from Manchukuo to North China, down finally to Hanoi in 1940, when the Japanese took over Vietnam. And they meant to go further: to Thailand (with its tin), Malaya (rubber), Indonesia (oil and timber). The Japanese idea was simple: that Japan was the leader of East Asia, and so it should harness Asia, with its resources, its genius of mind, its hundreds of millions of people, and all would grow prosperous—Japan most of all.

But the Chinese, both Nationalist and Communist, had resisted. And, as the Japanese did their best to beat the Chinese into submission, America said: No. Franklin Roosevelt imposed his embargo on Japanese trade—no scrap metal, no oil, nothing that would help Japan pursue its purpose of conquest. The noose had thus tightened about Japan in 1941, whereupon they attacked us and hoped, having hurt us, that we would negotiate on their terms. Tactically, the attack on Pearl Harbor was one of the most brilliantly executed strokes of the war. But politically, it was most unwise, for America fought back.

Today, 40 years after the end of World War II, the Japanese are on the move again in one of history's most brilliant commercial offensives, as they go about dismantling American industry. Whether they are still only smart, or have finally learned to be wiser than we, will be tested in the next 10 years. Only then will we know who finally won the war 50 years before.

So we must go back to Japan at that weekend of surrender and see what we made of it.

The eye recalls almost nothing sharp of those first three days. Both Tokyo and Yokohama were wasteland. Here and there was a speckle of corrugated iron shacks where the bombed-out victims of our raids lived. Spikes of smokestacks rose above rubble. In the streets trudged the Japanese—forlorn and shabby. Along the country roads trickled the first of their demobilized soldiers, their belongings slung over their shoulders. All of Japan was open to us, except for the Emperor's palace in Tokyo, behind its moat and earthen walls. The 11th Airborne Division had arrived to protect him from all intruders—Americans and Japanese alike.

A few days before we entered Japan, an intelligence officer had briefed a few of us correspondents on how delicate that mission would be: Japan was still armed, with 57 divisions in the home islands. Some units were violent. There had already been one assault on the Emperor's palace in the days since he had radioed his submission to us; it had been beaten off. The Emperor was our key. "In essence," concluded the officer, "we've achieved a coup d'etat. Our coup has been to take the Emperor. We've given him the widest latitude in telling his people how to take defeat. But, when they learn he takes orders from us, that we're using him to restore order, there's no telling how the mechanism will react.

So, when we flew in on Friday, Aug. 31, before the surrender, the soldiers in my plane were taking apart, fingering, reassembling their guns as soldiers always do before assault, ready to shot if this surrender was a trap.

But it was no trap; the Japanese had surrendered; the Emperor had defused the Japanese war machine, still capable of one last explosive bloodletting. The airfield perimeter had been guarded immediately by the 11th Airborne. The Japanese had not only obeyed our orders to remove all propellers from their planes at Atsugi Airfield, our point of descent, but the planes themselves had been bulldozed into a junkheap at the far corner.

That first weekend of reconnaissance and tingling fear we roamed the streets of Yokohama with strut and swagger. We took over the new Grand Hotel on the Bund—just up the street from the offices of the House of Mitsui. So I strolled down to visit it.

The House of Mitsui was one of the grand zaibatsu, those great Japanese merchant trading houses that we meant to abolish but did not. I walked in with Jim Stewart of the Office of War Information, who spoke fluent Japanese, and we were ushered into an executive's suite.

His face I have forgotten; in my notes his name reads simply "Fujiro," and he spoke fine English. When he understood that we had come not to arrest him but to talk, he relaxed. I wanted to pick up the threads of the story of defeat and surrender.

Fujiro told it well: It had been four months since the last ocean-going vessel of Japan's far-flung merchant marine had made it safely back to Yokohama, Japan's largest port. It had been more than a year since Kawasaki, the nation's oil port, had received a tanker from the East Indies. Yokohama was prostrate, he said. He guessed that 200,000 people had been killed in our bombings and 700,000 had fled.

But the Americans were not hated, he assured us. The people hated their army. "Why no planes, no guns to defend us?" He spat out names like Tojo, Oshima, Shiratori. The people expected them to be executed. People hated the United States bombers, but the first Americans to land were well-behaved. Jim Stewart remarked that, unlike the Japanese, American soldiers did not rape. Fujiro acknowledged this.

Then to his plea. Hunger. Food. Let Japan work to support herself. Japan could still make ships—"let us make ships to earn our way." Some textile mills remained; the Japanese could still make cloth to earn a living. But Japan needed food most of all—one-third of all its food in the closing days of the war had come out of China. Japan could sell us tea and silk, but it needed food.

What were the plans now of the House of Mitsui? we asked. He replied: "Frankly, gentleman, until your military tells us what to do, we have no plans." Before we left, he poured us a toast: "To your safe arrival!" We drank; the House of Mitsui bowed as if we were not only liberators but allies.

These days, the House of Mitsui is thriving again, its trading net spread from steel mills in China to refineries in Iran to operations in America—the whole world has become its "Greater Co-Prosperity Sphere."

Food, then, that weekend and that month was of the essence.

There is a strange and wonderful thing about Americans, of which I am proud. In war we bomb, we kill, occasionally our soldiers are savage, too—although when an American officer goes berserk, we try him in our military courts, as we did Lieut. William Calley for the massacre at Mylai. But Americans abhor starvation, and they are very good at organizing to help all starving people—defeated Germans, defeated Japanese, Ethiopians subject to Marxism.

So, in the first few days of occupation, our rage evaporated in the task immediately at hand: to feed the Japanese people we had conquered.

What MacArthur was up against were the essentials that geography forces on anyone who governs Japan. Japan is a nation of four rocky islands—with a combined area that is smaller than California. Seventy-two percent of the land is mountain and rock, useless for anything but tourism and scenery. Only 16 percent is tillable. When, a century ago, the Japanese were a nation of 30 million people, they could barely feed themselves and infanticide was a common practice. Their internal history has thus been scorched with savage civil wars. Then, when Japan was opened, the coiled aggressions so long turned against each other turned against their neighbors—China first, then the Russians, then Korea.

But the Japanese add to their poverty of physical resources two extravagantly useful conditions. They have, first, a sharply indented coastline, with natural ports inviting deep water to their shore. England has the same advantage, which once gave that nation, and now gives Japan, access to all the world's resources of ore, oil, foods, timber; by cheap shipping, Japanese can draw raw materials from anywhere and can send competitive manufacturers anywhere, too.

To this gift of geography is added a gift of genetics, a striking quality of mind. We often think of the Japanese as less than innovative but, technically, they are superb adapters and producers. We learned that in the war against them: their torpedoes were better and faster than ours . . . until we learned to make ours better. Their initial combat plane—the Zero—was a superlative machine; it could turn, dart, wheel away and mock American flying machines. No matter that Americans had invented the airplane and the flattop; when the war started, Japan had in several arms superior, if derivative, technology. What licked them was American bravery, the mobilization of then-superior American science and industry, and their own blundering politics that led them to challenge us.

Whether Americans made an equal blunder in entering Asia in 1945 is something historians will debate for decades to come. But if we did blunder in that fall season of 1945, the blunder stemmed from mercy and generosity. Both mercy and generosity proposed a peace the like of which had never been granted before to any conquered nation—except, perhaps, the Germany defeat only months before.

Our first challenge in those early weeks was, of course, the simple mechanics of occupation. But then we faced the problem of how to govern the now-abject nation—above all, how to feed it. Japan's hospitals were full of the diseases of malnutrition. MacArthur ordered at once that our occupying forces distribute their rations to Japanese civilians from Army kitchens. He then ordered that all the 3½ million tons of food stockpiled for our own armies for the projected landings of October and November be rushed in. Yet still there was not enough. He himself described it best in a cable to the War Department in the spring of 1946—a spring of imminent starvation. We must either feed the Japanese or starve them, he wrote, and then we must face the consequences. "Starvation breeds mass unrest, disorder, violence. Give me bread or give me bullets," he finished in a grandiloquent MacArthurian flourish.

The next paragraph of MacArthur's reminiscences is a single sentence: "I got bread."

MacArthur had, almost immediately after moving his headquarters from Yokohama to Tokyo, set about creating a new Japan. Of the Emperor, he demanded that a new prime minister be immediately named. By October, the Emperor had replaced his uncle, the nominal prime minister at the time of surrender, with Baron Shidehara, to whom, on his first visit, MacArthur explained America's wishes for the new Japan.

MacArthur's directives were cut from the cloth of American good will. Japan (so ran his first directive) must completely emancipate Japanese women; must let workers organize in unions; ban abuse of child labor; abolish secret police. Further, Japan must reorganize its education system and "democratize" its industrial system. He left it to Shidehara to work out the details.

It was this broad grant of latitude that was most important. The Japanese could pick and choose their way through MacArthur's directives. The way they chose to implement them allowed their industry, their universities, their ingenuity to flourish. And the rebirth of Japan since its defeat is a parable of history. If one speeds up the interaction of ideas and drive, it becomes a drama.

It is impossible to blame the Japanese for accepting American mercy and the American invitation to thrive. Neither Congress nor the United States War Department wanted to feed Japan indefinitely or pay for its recovery. It was up to the Japanese to work their own way back, to remove themselves from the backs of the American taxpayer.

A young lieutenant with the 27th Infantry Division was among the first to land in that week after the surrender; his company had fought in the battle of Okinawa; it had entered with 180 men and come out with only 20. That young combat lieutenant, Malcolm Baldrige, is now Secretary of Commerce, and he recalls the desolation in Japan. "We sent them," he recalls now, "blood-fractionating technology on humanitarian grounds. Today the company we gave the technology to compete with Americans around the world. We sent them technicians from the Underwriters Laboratory to certify that Japanese products were up to American standards, fit for export. Today U.S. companies fight to get their exports certified for entry into Japan." Baldrige is both wise and somber. The Japanese, as Government policy, are undermining one American industry after another. But Baldrige, as a senior Administration official, must restrain his forebodings in public.

To understand his bitterness one must again go back to the story of governing ideas. Early in 1947, as Japan was thawing from defeat, we sponsored something called GATT—the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, with headquarters in Geneva. GATT embodied an idea almost two centuries old, the idea of Adam Smith. Smith believed that history moves in stages, and, because he lived at the dawn of the Industrial Revolution, he denounced the outworn ideas of mercantilism—the world stage was now set for "free trade." An "invisible hand," Smith held, should and would shape the flow of goods from one nation to another, wherever "comparative advantage" in production would draw wares from one country to another.

By the mid-1940s, American thinking had made a holy cause of "free trade." Our conventional analysis of the Second World War held that both Hitler and the Japanese had violated the theology of "free trade," staking out spheres of economic dominance with bayonets, thus bringing war. Now, however, in 1947, GATT would enforce free trade in all the non-Marxist world, eliminating tariffs and barriers, and allowing goods to flow freely from country to country. We were at our peak in the history of commerce. Thus—onward and upward to the sunlit plateau of world prosperity and peace.

For the Japanese it must have seemed too good to be true, and it took them several years to learn that the Americans had rewarded them with a world market far larger than the Great East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere. The Americans had given them an invitation to the world trading game in total ignorance of what Japanese genius and tactics might accomplish. As late as 1954, a haze of victory still clouded American thinking. Said John Foster Dulles, Secretary of State, at a National Security Council meeting in August of that year, I "told Premier Yoshida frankly that Japan should not expect to find a big American market because the Japanese don't make the things we want. Japan must find markets elsewhere for the goods they export." It would be at least 30 years before history proved Dulles wrong, before our trade deficit with Japan grew to the thunderhead of an estimated $45 billion for 1985.

There were, of course, several things wrong with the ideas that begot GATT. First was the belief that all the world would behave by the rules codified by GATT. We could not entertain the idea that some nations would race, like broken-field runners, through the new rules of tariffs and trade; that GATT would be riddled and pockholed by subsidies, regulations, quotas and barriers that made mockery of the idea of free trade.

But the more important thing that went wrong with GATT was almost too simple to consider. If all people of the world were entitled to equally free trade, then the cheapest producers would be those who paid their people least, yet mastered world-class technology. In other words, nations whose workers were grateful for starvation wages could conquer the markets of countries like America, whose workers demanded the world's highest wages. The only way thus to complete was by efficiencies of production, in which the Japanese steadily strove to match the Americans, or by wage standards with which American workers could not compete, or both. Asian standards of living would have to go up or our standards would go down until an equilibrium would be reached.

In the 40 years since defeat, Japan has grown to be a giant. Japan has passed the Soviet Union in industrial production and stands as world class No. 2 to our No. 1. If the present Japanese expansion of production continues, it will be, in 20 years, a greater industrial power than the United States.

When the Japanese looked out from their world of ruins in the months after defeat, disaster drew self-examination as tight as skin about every individual as well as the community. "Japan was smashed," says one American industrialist. "Its industry was shattered or obsolete. Every institution had failed them. . . . There was no leadership, no model for creating a new Japan except that which American forced on it." So MacArthur and his staff became the leadership, America the model.

What the Japanese have done since in remodeling the American model is no less than spectacular. They have devised a system of government-industry partnership that is a paradigm for directing a modern industrial state for national purposes—and one designed for action in the new world of global commerce that the United States blueprinted.

The Japanese have a tangled bureaucracy that baffles foreign intruders, but one must recognize at least the two main players in the game to understand the dynamics of the Japanese trade thrust.

The Ministry of Finance comes first. In the words of one American Ambassador to Japan, "it has the ultimate call." Its policies set the exchange rate of the yen, keeping the currency undervalued in order to keep export prices low. It stimulates savings and investment, finances industry by directing the allocation of funds through the banks it controls. The Ministry of Finance provides the launching pad from which MITI directs the guided missiles of the trade offensive.

MITI—the Ministry of International Trade and Industry, the second major player in the game—is totally new Japanese invention. MITI targets those Japanese industries that are to grow, targets the countries and markets to be penetrated. It can adjust depreciation rates for favored industries; coordinate research into arcane technologies—for example, into the fifth generation of computers. (Its only American rival in such research is the Pentagon, which can afford to match Japan Incorporated's budget).

Sometimes MITI makes mistakes—as in the overbuilding of the Japanese steel and shipbuilding industries, now in surplus capacity because of competition from South Korea. More often it is wise enough to put to sleep industries that can no longer compete. The island of Kyushu once employed 200,000 coal miners; only 7,000 remain there because oil and coal come cheaper from abroad—and so Kyushu has become a thriving center for electronics. MITI defines strategies; Japanese private enterprise follows through with zest. No better marriage of government planning and private enterprise has ever been seen.

The Japanese have caught the essence of Adam Smith—that history moves through its stages as opportunity and technology beckon. Nor is it alone in seeing the perspectives of the world America fostered. Although Jean Monnet designed Europe's Common Market, America was its godfather. Europe also presses to orient its industries to national purpose. West Germany, Europe's foremost industrial power, presses hardest. But the Germans expend much of their energies within the Common Market we sought to build. In American commerce, trade with West Germany is large, yet marginal. In 1971, when America first fell into the trade deficit that forced us off the gold standard, Germans exported $3.7 billion worth of goods to America, Japan $5.9 billion. Last year, the Germans shipped $16.9 billion—but the Japanese shipped $60.4 billion. The Germans, somehow, evoke little American bitterness because we understand their culture, establish American plants there without hindrance. The Japanese provoke American wrath because they are a locked and closed civilization that reciprocates our hushed fear with veiled contempt.

Few American businessmen abroad would qualify as Knights of the Round Table. American oil companies once, in the prime of their power, could make and unmake governments. But many American businesses have been welcomed overseas, if only because they usually pay higher wages than competitors. Most of all, they have been restrained by American antitrust laws from the kind of nationally coordinated trade offensive captained by MITI against all other countries.

American industry grew up in partnership with European industry. But Japan rouses different fears. Behind Japan ("the Big Dragon," some call it) march the "four little dragons" (Korea, Hong Kong, Taiwan, Singapore) following in its path. And behind loom China and India, desperate as they are to raise their standards of living—at the expense of American standards, if necessary.

The Japanese are far ahead in the race for world trade markets, and they are moving now to yet another stage. Their export surplus gives them huge sums to invest—in the Middle East and America—so that Japanese capital is moving from penetration to control. Japanese are beginning to supply venture captal for the seedbeds of American technology, from Silicon Valley in California to Route 128 in Boston. They hover over the Draper Laboratories in Massachusetts—the national laboratories that devise the guidance system of our missiles—and acquire what patents security lets free to the public. In the Los Angeles area alone, the Japanese have installed or acquired 1,500 firms. Their acquisitions in our banking system have grown significantly; contrarywise, Americans are all but excluded from Japanese capital markets. And, by the doctrine of GATT, all this is entirely legal.

Yet what is legal may also be unfair. While Japan's tariff rates are, in broad economic terms, roughly equal to those of other industrial nations, they are spiked with special tariffs in industries that are considered vulnerable to foreign competition. In addition, Japanese markets are protected by a maze of so-called nontariff barriers to trade—many of which fall outside the reach of GATT regulations. We cannot sell our exports freely in Japan, whether beef, tobacco, citrus fruits, or leather goods. Consumer markets, too, are closed by regulations that the Japanese attribute to "cultural differences."

What Japan does import from us are, chiefly, those raw materials always taken by master nations from colonial nations—grain, cotton, ores, fuel. We still ship to Japan a few remaining high-technology items, like aircraft, and some telecommunications and high-powered computers in which we hold a narrowing lead. But the Japanese continue to squeeze that lead, because their infant-industry-protection laws are planned to give them time to catch up. They will not buy American satellites until they learn to make their own. Corning Glass Works has had a fiber-optics patent pending in Japan for 12 years; in this time, the Japanese have learned to make fiber optics of their own that they now sell to America. Crude oil may be sold to Japan; but the Japanese will not buy our refined oil. American products certified here must go through slow, tedious retesting in Japan before entering the Japanese market, while Japanese technology catches up.

American markets for Japanese goods are not only open but come with an invitation. The United States Census makes its marketing information open to all; for a fee anyone can buy its tapes that define area by area, county by county, income group by income group, where Toyota, Sony, Hitachi, Honda can best space their distributorships; and American advertising agencies will, for a fee, translate consumer appetite into market conquest. No nation that thinks of itself as an assembly of consumers can resist Japanese penetration. But a nation that thinks of itself as a community has reason for alarm.

Today not a single consumer radio is made in America, although Americans invented the modern radio; not a single black-and-white television set is made here, although America invented television. The few companies that assemble color television sets in the United States could not exist without imported parts made in Asia, although color television was originally developed in America. Almost all our video-cassette recorders are made in Japan; so are most hand-held calculators, watches, a huge share of our office machinery, and most high-fidelity audio equipment. Only one American motorcycle manufacturer remains (Harley-Davidson); the Japanese hold 95 percent of our market. Only one American piano manufacturer remains (Steinway). The Brooklyn Navy Yard, where the conquering U.S.S. Missouri was launched in 1943, no longer exists.

The American automobile and steel industries were the first to be hit by Japan's trade offensive—they were vulnerable. Emerging from the war fat, stuffy and complacent, content largely with obsolescent equipment and practices, shortsighted American management let its technologies fall well behind those developing elsewhere. In 1966, the Japanese shipped only 63,000 automobiles to America; by 1970, MITI had stimulated the shipment of 415,000. Americans found Japanese cars to be good cars; they consumed little gasoline, they were cheaper; their fit-and-finish were splendid, and with the rise in gasoline prices, the American appetite for Japanese automobiles soared. But when the Reagan Administration this spring released Japan from negotiated voluntary quotas on car exports to the United States, Japan announced that it would raise its shipments to 2.3 million autos to America, as if we were a controlled colonial market. It was too much. By a vote of 92 to 0, the Senate declared Japanese trade practice unfair. But it was a belated revolt; this summer, American consumers are gobbling up Japanese automobiles faster than the Japanese can gear up to ship them.

This year, apparently, MITI's chief target is the American electronic industry. Last year, the trade deficit with Japan in electronics surpassed our trade deficit in automobiles—reaching $15.4 billion of our total adverse balance with Japan of $37 billion. The American semiconductor industry is reeling from assault. The Japanese, without mercy, propose to wipe out our supremacy in this industry, based on our own research and invention. Hitachi, now an electronics exporter, was blasted to bits by our bombers in the last two weeks of the war as one of the leading Japanese armsmakers. But Hitachi is now on the counterattack, its tone martial again. Here, for example, is Hitachi's directive this year to its offices in Denver, where it is trying to take away the semiconductor market from America's Intel Corporation and Advanced Micro Devices. It reads: "Win with the 10 percent rule! Find AMD and Intel sockets. Quote 10 percent below their prices! If they requote, go 10 percent again. Don't quit till you win!"

A benign prosperity temporarily soothes the American economy. In the six years since 1979, America has added 6,000,000 jobs to its total work force. But these are mostly service jobs. In the skill-and-brawn base of American production, not only have real wages fallen, but the job base is shriveling. In machinery production, in these six years, the United States has lost 288,000 jobs; in primary metal-making (such as steel) we have lost 439,000 jobs; in fabricated metals, 241,000 jobs; in motor-vehicle production, 118,000 jobs; in textiles, 186,000 jobs. All in all, on the line, in the old shops, where Americans make things, we have lost 1,834,000 jobs.

No industry in America has been harder hit by Asian competition than the American garment industry, which has lost 155,000 jobs in the last six years alone. One should listen to Sol Chaikin, an air corps veteran of the China war theater against Japan.

Chaikin is now the president of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union. Once, in the early 1950's, his union counted 230,000 workers in New York City alone. Today he counts only 100,000 and they work at the lowest-paid union jobs in the city.

"Ours," says Chaikin, "is the most competitive industry in America. It's a cheap industry to get into and we have 15,000 ladies-garment manufacturers in the U.S.A. They all have the most modern machinery, but the Asians have the same machinery and they work for less and for longer hours. The Japanese once were our chief competitors, but Japanese wage rates have now risen to levels comparable to ours. The Japanese now buy American designs, open factories with new machinery in Singapore and Hong Kong, ship the fabrics from Japan, and export from offshore. In Korea and Taiwan, they pay 57 cents an hour; in Hong Kong, $1.08 an hour; and in Sri Lanka they pay $5.00 a week. In New York, our workers get only $175.00 a week take-home pay—and they pay almost $1 for a subway fare each way."

Chaikin knows that his workers in New York cannot compete with Asian standards of living. "It's as if we were being poured into a Mixmaster with China, India, Japan, Taiwan; they've homogenized the international labor market and are squeezing us out like toothpaste." Chaikin insists that some garment jobs, at least, must be preserved for American working people, that the American market should be shared with Americans. But there is no high-technology ladder to leap over cheap Asian wages when it comes to handwork. Of blue-collar jobs in America, one in seven is held by a textile-garment-apparel worker. The National Academy of Engineering estimated in 1983 that, of 2,000,000 jobs in the garment-textile industry, only 750,000 would be left in 10 years. Chaikin's back is up against the wall.

Less than a mile from Chaikin's union headquarters is the elegant executive suite of the Radio Corporation of America. Chairman of the Board Thornton F. Bradshaw is another combat veteran, whose destroyer was put out of action by the Japanese Navy in the last months of the war. Bradshaw, if anyone, is an authentic statesman of American industry. He is unworried about RCA, which is happy and prosperous. His view is entirely different from Chaikin's, for his company has adjusted to the world market. But RCA long ago gave up on penetrating Japan. Its creator, Gen. David Sarnoff, thought the American market was enough, and licensed to Japan and the rest of the world the technologies RCA has patented—technologies that underlie much of modern electronics production. RCA prospers from its lead in advanced electronics—from its satellites, from its arms contracts (like the Aegis guided missile cruiser) from its broadcast net, NBC, from its marketing of imported parts and products, from manufacturing television sets. But, despite RCA's prosperity, Bradshaw is deeply worried—about America as an industrial community where both work ethic and practice have decayed.

Bradshaw is concerned for America's economy as a whole, Chaikin for his working people—both equally honorable concerns. But neither believes that any reasonable persuasion can slow the Asian trade surge unless the American Government acts—sooner rather than later. What is needed is a structural change in American life and thinking, as sweeping as Japan's in 1945-1950—from factory floor to research labs and universities, from reduction of the Federal budget deficit, to a total review of our trading policies.

So the story moves to Washington.

Washington is always in crisis—small crises, acute crises, lurking crises. But the trade crisis is quite extraordinary for the anarchy of ideas that prevails. Ideas clash in perception of a world that has totally changed since the days of victory. Trade, as we designed it, has become completely global, and America has become the last open gaming table for world adventurers. Within the confusion of Washington's thinking, however, at least three truths are taken as paramount.

The first truth, the starting point of all thoughtful conversations, is the overwhelming burden of the overvalued dollar.

"When I was dealing with Japan the problem was different," says Robert S. Strauss, Jimmy Carter's trade representative from 1977 to 1979. "I talked in a universe of tariffs . . . of trade . . . nontrade . . . cultural barriers . . . political difficulties." Strauss, a very suave, but very though man, is remembered as one of the few American trade representatives who have been able to out-negotiate the Japanese. For a brief period, his tenacity caused the impermeable membrane of Japanese resistance to yield. "Now," he says, "you're talking about a world where trade has reached $2 trillion a year, but capital flows have reached a magnitude of $20 trillion a year, swirling around the world like a jet stream. It drops off here because of safety and high interest rates, and pushes the dollar up. It makes the trade problem look like a pygmy problem. It distorts everything, and leaves the poor American exporter, no matter how good or efficient, like a runner doing a sprint with an anvil under his arm.

"The Japanese don't adjust the yen every day. But you don't have to be a genius to know that when the Bank of Japan coughs, everyone gets the sniffles. But we have no policy. Even if we started now, we couldn't work things out in a year, or five. We need a strategy."

There comes next the second truth: Japan's "unfair" trading practices, its regulations, rules, restrictions, quotas. Says Secretary of Commerce Baldrige: "Japanese export policy has as its objective not participation in, but dominance of, world markets. Japanese trade policies assume as a right protection of their industries that are emerging, like satellites, depressed industries like paper and chemicals, politically important industries like agriculture, socially sensitive industries like leather. . . .

"In 1983, we took 30 percent of Japan's overseas exports, in 1984, 35 percent. In practical terms, this means that all the net increase in Japanese domestic employment in recent years is attributable to sale to the United States. . . . America's pursuit of free trade is like Sir Galahad's quest for the Holy Grail."

From the National Association of Manufacturers to the AFL-CIO, one catches the alarm in vivid language. "'There are six to eight main interacting trade-and-production groups, or 'keiretsu,'" says one association official, who asked not to be identified. "They buy and sell chiefly to their own subsidiaries, and they divide Japan's market up. When we squeeze, they'll allot, say, 11 percent of a particular market to all importers. They are opaque, insensitive people, who don't know that they have brought us to the edge."

Says Lane Kirkland, president of the AFL-CIO, the man most concerned for the fate of American workingmen, who last visisted Japan this winter, "To hear the Japanese plead for free trade is like hearing the word 'love' on the lips of a harlot."

The last body of truths comes from the engineering community—it is the most serious, most somber, most challenging. It is that the Japanese are very, very good, better at some things than Americans. They are brilliant, efficient, aggressive people who prize education as much or more than Americans—and have learned to use it. John Gibbons is the head of Congress's Office of Technology Assessment—he is a physicist, who comes to Congress from the Oak Ridge Labs of the Atomic Energy Commission. He starts the story of Japan's renaissance with the occupation:

"The most important thing we did after the war was to reorganize it; we democratized it; we lifted the burden of arms from it, and they poured resources into education. We helped them. We gave free doctorates in nuclear science to their students and brought them to Oak Ridge. But you have to realize that the Japanese already had traditional skills and techniques; they were superb in alloying metals, in ceramics, in fermentation—out of the broths they knew how to brew came the fermentation know-how vital to biotechnologies.

"They are ahead of us in productivity in automobiles, in steel, in robotics. We are ahead in fundamental research, but they get all our science papers and research, and they add to that their mastery of 'process technology,' translating fundamental research into the making of things. They recruit their managers from the factory floor; we get ours out of law schools."

In Gibbons' view, the challenge lies, above all, to American technology and education. Unless we can translate our lead in fundamental research into practice, then others will be the chief beneficiaries of our science and laboratories.

In a few days in Washington, one can trace a trail of irritations blistering under the bland rhetoric that still binds the Pacific alliance together.

Start at the State Department with middle-level officers who deal daily with the Japanese—and one hears language almost unheard elsewhere in that labyrinth of quiet diplomats. "Japan," said one, who asked not to be identified, "is a protectionist nation: They have no sense of moderation; they are aggressive. They are an island nation looking out on the rest of the world as plunder from a protected bastion. Negotiations are tedious, painful—oh, so painful—and, when they yield with no grace. It's not only quotas on beef, citrus fruits, leather, but even on our catsup and peanut butter.

"In 1981, they banned American metal baseball bats. We had the technology for making a safe cap for metal bats. The Japanese made a metal bat with a plastic plug top; a plug flew off at a baseball game and struck a spectator. So all metal bats, safe and dangerous, were banned. We negotiated for three years, we had to get them to change 18 laws and regulations; we had to get the consent of the Japanese Softball Association. Then, when the Japanese learned to make safe metal caps, they reopened the market. Last year, we finally managed to export 350 metal bats to Japan!"

This is the voice of a working diplomat in the State Department. The bureaucracy bows to political leadership. But is remains the national political scouting force abroad, and cannot help but observe politics at home. Its officers do not blink at the reality that Americans want to buy cheap quality goods; no one forces them to buy Japanese goods. Nor can they blink at the fact that no fewer than 30 states now have their own officers in Japan soliciting Japanese investment. But they cannot blink either at the fact that so much of American industry is being wiped out, and that the men and women discarded scream to Congress.

At the supreme level, President Reagan deals with Premier Yasuhiro Nakasone of Japan, who yields and, with exquisite courtesy, goes on television to urge his people to sample American and foreign imports. But at the working level, each negotiation is a tormented, ad hoc, item-by-item bargaining.

A shawl of self-restraint drapes over most official American Spokesmen; to be accused of "Japan-bashing" is considered "protectionist" or, worse, "racist." Foremost among those who thus speak for the old free-trade tradition, one finds Secretary of State George P. Shultz. "There is great sentiment for protection around the country," he told a gathering of the American Stock Exchange recently, "but in my opinion it's wrong . . . it's bad . . . this is a matter of deep conviction on my part." But no such restraint binds Congress, or the unions who influence so many constituencies. Congress is entertaining half-a-dozen bills right now sponsored by afflicted Congressmen; it is even considering a 25 percent tariff on all imported goods.

Congress is where one can best see the deadlock of ideas, as shoe workers, garment workers, steel workers, auto workers demand protection. But Senator Christopher Dodd of Connecticut is typical of a Congressman in the middle; he is a young, liberal, thoughful Democrat, and knows that foreign trade is essential to America. He comes from that state in the Union that is most dependent on foreign trade—25 percent of Connecticut's gross state product goes into exports. But Dodd also sits on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which he describes as torn between "bumper-sticker patriots," and those who believe that world peace rests on world trade.

Dodd is worried not about his state, but about the lack of an American strategy for dealing with the nature of the new trading world. He says: "We can't make a strategy by assembling a majority in the House to protect shoes, or automobiles, or tool-and-die makers. We need an overall trade policy and we need it now before the whole thing explodes."

And so Dodd comes down, as do Baldrige, Strauss, and the National Association of Manufacturers, to the conclusion that there must soon be a great international gathering that will create an orderly new system of trade to replace the present anarchy where the wolves pick off the laggards.

What such an international gathering will do, or can do, is still obscure. The Marshall Plan is remembered as an example of what may be won . . . but the Marshall Plan took five years to evolve, in interminable conferences from 1944 to 1949. Now the market that must be shared is not simply the Atlantic basin; it is the whole globe. Korea makes steel and ships, Taiwan makes electronics, Brazil makes steel, arms, shoes, India and China creep up on every technological front. All seek to follow Japan's course, at whatever cost to American jobs. Conscience prevents Americans from spurning the poor and suffering of the world who seek to better themselves; but common sense forbids a course that permits their betterment by our impoverishment. Somehow a new way must be found to fairly share both world resources and markets. It will take a long tome to work that way out, for America must restructrue to live in this world as the Japanese have done. And time is short.

So one tries finally to penetrate the thinking of Executive policy—where an ailing President, plagued with budget deficits, tax reform, the Middle East and terrorism, is too busy to reflect on trade policy, decide on his will, or impose it.

It is left for others to speak for him, and when they speak, they speak of peace:

"Who won the war?" An official State Department spokesman repeated my question and answered: "We won the war. What did we get from the victory? We expanded the area of freedom. We made a democratic Japan. Our bases in the Pacific and Japan are essential to our defense. There's peace in the Pacific now, Japan is our reward."

Peace, of course, is primordial. But the Japanese share the same peace, and under our protection, paying little for it, reserve the right to press American livelihoods to the wall. How far or how deeply they can press their trade strategy before Congress explodes in anger is unknown. But it would be well for the Japanese to remember that if peace is paramount, they need us to keep the peace more than we need them. And if a ripple of depression forces Congress to act, a lockup of the open American market would wound Japan more than it would wound us. The superlative execution of their trade tactics may provoke an incalculable reaction—as the Japanese might well remember of the course that ran from Pearl Harbor to the deck of the U.S.S. Missouri in Tokyo Bay just 40 years ago.●

REALIZING PRODUCTIVE POTENTIAL IX

INTERNATIONAL TRADE: COMPETITION IS THE KEY

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, only a decade ago, American export products were considered among the best in the world. They carried the mark of successful trading products: high quality and low price. The result then was a strong and vital economy with unequaled productive abilities. Today, that appraisal has markedly changed. The rise of strong competitors, the transformation of the global economy, and the decline in American industry is forcing us to reconsider our claim of world economic leadership. The most telling statistic is one that looms large in all of our minds: a trade deficit that was $123 billion in 1984.

Even the American public has come to understand that our exports are facing serious competitive problems. A recent poll from the April/May issue of Public Opinion illustrates the shift in public opinion.

One of the first questions the poll asked the public was to determine the relative quality of American, Japanese, and German export products. Moreover, the poll was taken twice, with a decade between the two surveys. In 1973, only 12 percent of the survey thought that Japanese-made cars were better in quality than those made in the United States; 40 percent rated Japanese automobiles as inferior. By 1983, however, the dominant opinion was reversed; 40 percent felt that Japanese-made cars were better in quality, while a minority—21 percent—thought that Japanese autos were not as competitive.

American autos also lost ground vis-a-vis German cars. 33 percent favored German cars in 1973, versus the 20 percent that believed American automobiles were better. By 1983, 43 percent of the respondents saw German autos as higher in quality, while an even smaller 15 percent favored American ones.

Japanese-made stereos, radios, and TV sets have also become the public's preferred products. In 1973, 30 percent of the poll respondents stated that Japanese versions were not as good, and only 24 percent thought that the foreign product was better. A decade later, 40 percent saw Japanese entertainment equipment as better, and a relatively small 17 percent supported American products as better in quality.

The same poll asked Americans whether the same Japanese products were a better value for the dollar than those made here. A little more than a decade ago, only 18 percent agreed that Japanese autos were a better value, and a strong 34 percent disagreed. However, the 1983 poll showed that the balance favored the Japanese: 40 percent saw Japanese autos as a better value, whereas only 24 percent took the opposing position.

Japanese stereos, radios, and TV sets saw the same trends: 27 percent said the comparable Japanese product was better, and a somewhat larger 30 percent thought that the foreign good was worse. By 1983 37 percent had evaluated the Japanese-made products as better, and only 19 percent favored the American-made good.

The article also described some specific strengths and weaknesses of American versus foreign autos. Respondents of the survey were asked to rate cars as better or not as good over a 10-year period, from 1975-84. In terms of gas mileage, 60 to 76 percent of the poll consistently ranked foreign cars as better than American ones. As for quality of workmanship, respondents rated American cars as better until 1978, when foreign autos came out ahead. From 1978 to 1984, the percentage that supported foreign cars increased from 35 to 55 percent.

Despite this consensus, American automobiles were stronger in some areas: 52 to 60 percent of the respondents repeatedly thought that foreign cars were not as good in terms of riding comfort. An even higher 61 to 70 percent rated American cars as easier to repair; 33 to 40 percent consistently noted that American cars had greater freedom from repairs. Finally, American autos edged out the foreign ones in overall cost of ownership.

Nevertheless, it is clear that American products are perceived as having lost their competitive edge in many areas. By stressing price and quality, other countries have made their products more competitive, and as a result, they have made significant gains in world market share. Our trade problem is one that requires immediate attention. The question is, what has been the cause of our decline, and what are we going to do about it? These are issues that have been a major concern to many of us in the Congress, and I will continue to address them in my future statements.●

JOHN NEWHOUSE—"THE DIPLOMATIC ROUND: TEST"

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, we are all familiar with the debate in this country about the President's star wars proposal. Its proponents argue that it offers the hope of a more secure world while its opponents insist that not only would it be destabilizing, but its cost would be astronomical. For our European allies, star wars poses additional concerns, both technological and diplomatic. The administration's request for European participation in the project puts NATO in the position of having to say no to its major ally or of accepting a proposal that, in the view of many observers, conflicts with NATO's traditional defense strategies. According to an insightful article by John Newhouse in the July 22 New Yorker, domestic and scientific opinion in Europe largely holds that star wars would prove imprudent and dangerous; Newhouse reports that most defense experts in Britain, France, and West Germany are unalterably opposed to the SDI rationale.

One confusing message that our Star Wars program sends to our European allies concerns the Euromissile deployment. After agreeing to deploy nuclear-tipped missiles in Europe to enhance our deterrent, our NATO allies are now being encouraged to take part in a project whose underlying logic suggests that those deployments are ultimately unnecessary. As one French diplomat comments in the Newhouse article:

> We cannot all go to the ends of the earth persuading Europeans that they should accept deployment of missiles, and then call them immoral and about to become obsolete. This is a great contradiction. The Germans and the British share our precise concerns, and their analysis corresponds to our own.

I recommend John Newhouse's informative article on the European response to star wars. The Europeans are deeply concerned about the program's threat to the ABM Treaty and to the arms control process, and as citizens of an historical battleground, they are troubled by what star wars may mean for them. As longstanding friends and allies, the United States should take these concerns into consideration in our future debates about SDI.

Mr. President, I ask that the entire text of the article by John Newhouse may be printed at this point in the RECORD.

THE DIPLOMATIC ROUND: TEST

(By John Newhouse)

"Obsessive" is a fair description of the state of mind into which the Star Wars project—President Reagan's plan for taming the nuclear genie—has maneuvered European governments. Reagan's commitment to his strategic defense initiative, or S.D.I., as diplomats and soliders call it, is reliably said to be total and unshakable; the project is meant to be his enduring legacy to the cause of keeping the planet Earth in one piece. But other governments, along with most people in official Washington, strongly doubt whether the plan is feasible; nor will it be, they say, for as far into the future as most imaginations can stretch. Also, every European capital is deeply apprehensive about the near-term consequences of the initiative, which is known to be very much Reagan's own. In mid-May, just after the economic summit meeting in Bonn, I visited Bonn, Paris, and London to find out what people were thinking and saying about Star Wars and how they were responding to heavy American pressure to endorse the project and take on a part of the immense research much of it recondite, that underlies the largest spending program this or any other country has ever proposed. In all three capitals, people seemed to be talking of little else; Star Wars has become a consuming topic. Even though the press coverage of the summit meeting dwelt largely on Reagan's visit to the Bitburg cemetery, Star Wars, I learned, was really the dominant, if generally offstage, topic of the conference. In Bonn, some of my appointments were postponed because emergency meetings on Star Wars popped up. One official cancelled an appointment because he was abruptly hauled off to Washington for an unexpected meeting on the subject. The issue has pushed the Germans into what is for them the most uncomfortable of positions—having to choose between America, their protector, and France, an old enemy but now the other half of a partnership that anchors Europe's political and economic stability. The contesting pressures from Paris, which is openly hostile to Star Wars, and Washington are heavy, and may become intolerable; a choice between the two places isn't one the Germans can make. They need both. A European ambassador based in Bonn says, in describing the effects of Star Wars, "The Foreign Ministry is Ratosigkeit"—a condition somewhere between stumped and bewildered.

In Paris, the government of President Francois Mitterrand has been maneuvered or tempted—or in part both—into playing cavalier seul, a role that General Charles de Gaulle exalted in the nineteen-sixties. In matters affecting French security, de Gaulle incarnated France's strong preference for free hands and self-sufficiency. "However large may be the glass offered to us, we prefer to drink from our own, while touching glasses round about," he said. Actually, most French, British, and German officials and diplomats are roughly in agreement about Star Wars. But each of their leaders is dealing with the problem largely in terms of political self-interest—hence differently from each of the others. Mitterrand wants to cut the losses he is expected to suffer in parliamentary elections next year, and he reckons that he can gain politically by saying what he and his people think about Star Wars; he is probably right. His colleagues in Bonn and London, Chancellor Hemut Kohl and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, confront a more complicated situation. Kohl's is especially difficult; like Mrs. Thatcher, he wants to avoid getting into a row with Washington over Star Wars, or even getting very far afield from its eminent patron. Kohl's political stock is falling. A member of his government, Interior Minister Friedrich Zimmermann, has openly criticized him for lack of leadership. And on Sunday, May 12th, Kohl personally and his Christian Democratic Party experienced an unexpected and shattering political defeat in North Rhine-Westphalia, where about a third of the electorate lives. Although Star Wars wasn't an issue, German diplomats worry that it will become one—perhaps the pivotal issue in federal elections to be held in April of 1987. The Social Democratic Party is unalterably opposed to it, and some of Kohl's political advisers are already envisioning a campaign in which Germans will be asked whether they are for or against America and the Atlantic alliance, with Star Wars becoming the test of continued German support for both.

German officials and diplomats, most of whom are as appalled by Star Wars as the French, also worry that their Chancellor, because of his heavy-handed insistence that Reagan go through with the ceremony at Bitburg, is deeply indebted to him and will be asked to make good with open support of Star Wars. After Bitburg, Kohl was apparently overheard to say, "Ron, I will personally never forget what you did." The Administration isn't letting him forget. Stories about Kohl's having damaged his standing with the White House began to appear just after the summit. "Reagan's trust and confidence in Kohl have been impaired, perhaps permanently, by the controversial wreath-laying ceremony," a story in the Washington Post said. And the French government has used the press almost unceasingly to register its unhappiness with Kohl's summit performance—especially his quite unexpected expression of support for Star Wars, which seemed to undercut Mitterrand's efforts to rally support behind a European alternative. The French campaign appears to be working. "We are hearing tones out of France that we have not heard in a long time," a German official told the Times.

Although Margaret Thatcher shares the concerns of her ministers and civil servants about Star Wars, there is her somewhat special relationship with Reagan to be protected; and it is said that, being a scientist (a chemist) herself, she is generally sympathetic to efforts to cross distant frontiers. Still, since she plans to spend well over ten billion pounds sterling to improve Britain's nuclear deterrent she can hardly join the Reagan claque in extolling missile defense and denouncing nuclear deterrence as immoral. Then, there is the anti-ballistic-missile, or A.B.M., treaty, which some of the Reagan people would like to scrap, partly because it forbids putting devices into space that are supposed to destroy offensive missiles—and Star Wars is built around the notion of using lasers and other "directed-energy" weapons for just that purpose. All Europeans hope that the A.B.M. treaty will be kept intact. They and most orthodox American thinkers on the subject are sure that any sizable defensive system would have the perverse effect of creating an enormous spiral in offensive nuclear arms—a situation in which there would be far less stability, and so less security for all.

The British and the French have another reason for cherishing the A.B.M. treaty: without it their own modest nuclear-missile forces might have trouble reaching Russian cities, because the Soviets could in theory erect strong defenses around them. European governments are also strenuously in favor of continued compliance by Washington and Moscow with the second strategic-arms-limitation accord—SALT II—which was signed in June of 1979 and, although it has never been submitted to the Senate for ratification, has been adhered to; the treaty expires at the end of this year, and the Reagan people have been bitterly divided over whether to continue accepting its restrictions.

While what is said about Star Wars in Bonn, Paris, and London varies somewhat, it amounts to a variation on the same basic themes. Germans stress their concern about predictable Soviet countermeasures and the over-all military effects. "If the strategic defense initiative goes forward, we will be in difficult times," says a German general who is closely involved. "Our leaders would have to ask the people for more money for defense. And the Americans, we think, would have to improve nuclear weapons across the entire spectrum: short-range and long-range ballistic missiles, cruise missiles—all weapons."

Suppose Star Wars comes to nothing, I said.

"You can't spend twenty-six billion dollars"—the Administration's five-year spending goal—"and not have something," the general replied. "That something may be improved offensive weapons, possibly a new family of them, or a mixture of new offensive and defensive weapons. We can't say now what it will be. But all that money will buy something." He and most other Europeans strongly doubt, however, whether the something will resemble the Reagan vision.

The French are the most abusively critical and seem to be the most deeply offended by what they regard as the arbitrary and impulsive manner in which Star Wars was thrust upon them. Washington, they say, is trying to impose an entire new strategy on the Western alliance without any consultation. "Our first objection is to the Reagan presentation," a French diplomat says. "We regard nuclear deterrence as indispensable. We cannot all go to the ends of the earth persuading Europeans that they should accept deployment of missiles, and then call them immoral and about to become obsolete. This is a great contradiction. The Germans and the British share our precise concerns, and their analyses correspond to our own." The British, Mrs. Thatcher included, emphasize the importance of protecting the accepted arrangements concerning deterrence. "All this is terra incognita, and everyone puts his own particular gloss on it," one of her advisers says of Star Wars. "But what is most important to her is the involibility of existing treaties and the SALT II constraints."

What, I asked, did he hear from the Administration about its intentions on that score?

"Washington is a Tower of Babel on this," he said.

In all three European capitals, various officials speak of Star Wars as one of those political tests which West Europeans confront every decade or so and can pass only by acting jointly. Acting jointly comes harder to them than just about anything, so the test is usually, though not invariably flunked. Some Europeans are saying that the test, although clearly there, is more economic or technological than political. Star Wars won't budge very far from Square One militarily, they think—and some Americans agree—but the commercial spinoff from all that money spent on the most awesome technologies could be immense; phrases like "third industrial revolution" are bandied about. "In the end, the spinoff may be all there is of S.D.I.," an American diplomat says. "I mean the artificial intelligence, space telecommunications, miniaturized computers, and the rest. Directed-energy devices have uses other than destroying objects. You can communicate information with them. Commercial projects in space will be far more feasible, because the program should drastically reduce the price per kilo of space vehicles."

One is told that Star Wars will have an even greater impact on high-technology commerce in the years ahead than the Apollo program had in the ninteen-sixties and seventies. "Apollo had to be made fail-safe, because people were being sent to the moon and had to be returned safely," says a French expert on high technology. "The unproved, cutting-edge technologies couldn't be risked. S.D.I. is creating a demand for the cutting-edge technologies that wouldn't otherwise exist. It will mean no less than a revolution in software, and will have very direct impact on industry in general." A technology gap with the United States and Japan is felt by some Europeans to be their most serious problem. Others among them demur, saying that what is laggard isn't European technology but, rather, Europe's ability to exploit its attainments commercially—a problem that returns conversation to Europe's lack of cohesion and its failure to convert national markets into one huge single market. "America and Japan make money with high technology, and Europe loses money with it," a French diplomat says. Mitterrand talks sombrely about "the Balkanization of European technology." And all Europeans seem to agree on the need either to plug their countries into Star Wars in some way or to create comparable demand in Europe for the cutting-edge technologies. A concern about missing the boat is general. "Europeans can't be sold, but they may be bought" is an allusion to their dilemma over Star Wars that one hears in Washington. It means that the attractions of taking part in the program will overcome doubt and aversion. Perhaps. But the comment overlooks some reasons for Europeans to be polite yet essentially noncommittal about Star Wars. First of all, there is the so-called brain drain; America already attracts a share of the bright young lights in European science and technology. The Apollo program made deep inroads, especially into British talent, and the impact of Star Wars could be greater still—unless, that is, Europe can create an alternative.

An even larger reservation arises from the widely held doubts of Europeans that their companies will be offered more than crumbs by the people running Star Wars. The more alluring projects are in most cases likely to be highly sensitive, and thus classified and off limits to non-American firms. Europeans also know that Congress can exclude them—and often has excluded them—from projects in which their involvement had been approved by other areas of the federal government. The most skeptical of the Europeans are the British and the French—the ones with the most experience in cooperating with Americans on advanced weapons. Washington's real interest, they think, lies not in recruiting their companies but in drawing teams of especially accomplished Europeans away from companies. "The trade will be brains for crumbs," a Whitehall civil servant says.

Few Europeans, however hostile they may be to Star Wars, oppose American research in space weaponry, if only because they know that the Soviet Union has a similar program. Both programs have been under way for some time—probably since the late nineteen-sixties. Each is a hedge against the other, but it is thought that, given the forbidding nature of the technologies, neither has progressed much. The assumption has been that directed-energy weapons might be an option in the distant future, and that at some point—probably well into the next millennium—these devices could be phased into the deterrence scheme and nuclear weapons could perhaps be phased out. In brief, none of Reagan's predecessors have questioned the wisdom of sustaining research in this family of weapons, which includes lasers, beams of charged particles traveling at nearly the speed of light, and ultra-high-speed missiles, along with an array of daunting support technologies for them. What to do about "exotics," as they used to be called, was an issue during the negotiations on the A.B.M. treaty. Late in 1971, the parties agreed to ban testing and deployment of such systems and their components; no restrictions were placed on research, if only because it isn't possible to monitor, and so verify, the extent of research. But the ripple effect of the Reagan proposal would include moving research out of the laboratories and into space—starting probably in the early nineteen-nineties—and carrying out tests that would violate the A.B.M. treaty. Since the planning for all this is under way, the treaty—the backbone of the arms-control regime—is in jeopardy, and a common anxiety is uniting America's allies.

Reality in the nuclear age tends to become what people whose voices carry say it is. Competent technicians are available to shore up any side of any argument. A given point of view may be vulnerable to ridicule but not to being disproved by facts; these are obscured by unknowns and abstractions arising from the nature, the role, the destructive potential, and the reliability of nuclear weapons. Probably no one other than a politically secure American President could have imposed upon his own country and others—allies and adversary alike—a notion as farfetched as most experienced scientists and technicians consider the Star Wars proposal to be. In one short passage of a speech delivered in March of 1983, the President proposed creating a defense that would "give us the means of rendering . . . nuclear weapons impotent and obsolete." Virtually no one beyond a remarkably tiny circle in the White House had been aware that he would make such a proposal, or even that he was contemplating it. Within the government, the idea hadn't been examined, let alone "staffed out," as Presidential initiatives invariably are. Secretary of Defense Casper Weinberger may have been forewarned, although it is far from clear that he was, but Secretary of State George Shultz was blindsided. On the evening before the speech was delivered, Shultz was meeting in his office with three aides when a copy of the speech arrived from the White House—not for comment but for Shultz's information. One of the aides described their reaction as "stunned, flabbergasted." Nuclear deterrence, it appeared, was out, and defense—not just partial defense but a seamless, perfect astrodome—was in. Many people in the Administration were appalled, and most were skeptical, to put it mildly. The true believers and the advocates were a small group—as they still are—including the President's science adviser, George Keyworth, and Edward Teller, who pioneered the development of the hydrogen bomb.

The advocates have tended to equate technically competent opponents of Star Wars with the scientists who questioned the feasibility of the Manhattan Project and the Apollo program. Predictable breakthroughs in computers and data processing, they argue, will allow lasers and particle beams to destroy ballistic missiles during the four minutes or so of their boost phase, which is when they are most vulnerable: in this phase they are rising slowly; their hot exhaust plumes make them easy to detect with infrared sensors; and each missile constitutes one target instead of many, because its numerous warheads and decoys are still lodged in the nose cone awaiting release. And what about attacking vehicles that may survive the boost phase? It is said that these, too, can be knocked out—in a "layered" space defense—but Star Wars advocates concede that destroying them becomes progressively more difficult during the twenty minutes of flight remaining.

Reagan, in his remarkable speech, said that society should be defended against a nuclear attack instead of merely avenged. No one disputes his preference. And he isn't the first Chief Executive to believe, quite genuinely, that if an idea he likes plays well as a speech it will play as policy. Nor do the many Star Wars critics—space scientists, weapons experts, and numerous others—dispute the proposition that objects on earth (or in space) can be readily destroyed by devices in space. The issue, they say, is whether a defense—either the leakproof astrodome envisioned by Reagan or something just partly effective—can be built on the Star Wars concept. It can't, they say, because a good offense will always beat any defense. And they strongly dispute the analogy that is made with splitting the atom and with putting people on the moon. These accomplishments, they observe, were strictly scientific projects, with only the barriers to knoweldge and insight to be overcome. The moon, which is unarmed, has little in common with Russia, which is heavily armed with an array of nuclear forces, some portion of which would be unaffected by a Star Wars defense even if it could be made reliable against ballistic missiles.

The point, the critics say, is that the Soviets won't sit by idly while the other superpower cobbles together a defense against a major component of their strategic forces. First, they can be counted on to neutralize a defense, or try to, by swamping it with more offensive weapons or decoys. Second, they could deploy beam weapons of their own against orbiting Star Wars battle stations. Some of these weapons might be ground-based, with mirrors directing the beams; others would be space-based themselves. It turns out to be much easier to destroy space-based devices than it is for space-based devices to survive long enough to destroy missiles launched from the ground. In any case, a Star Wars defense, if one is ever built, will vindicate the name, because its orbiting battle stations will be pitted against similar Soviet battle stations intended to counter them. The mise en scène could be enriched by the positioning of explosive mines in space. As yet another hedge against Star Wars, the Soviets might adopt techniques that would enable them to reduce the vulnerable boost stage of their missiles from four minutes to one. Two European Foreign Ministers—one British, one French—have used the term "Maginot Line" in talking about space-based defense.

Star Wars is hard on American diplomats, who have to explain and justify whatever their leaders serve up. The advocacy role in this case is especially difficult, partly because other governments are aware that much of the American support for Star Wars comes from people who don't believe in it at all but do see it as a vehicle for quietly pushing land-based nuclear defense. These are people who want to replay the debate on A.B.M.s that occurred in the late nineteen-sixties and early seventies, and went against A.B.M.s. They intend to win the debate this time. Star Wars, they reckon, will sooner or later enter an irreversible decline, and at that point A.B.M.s—ground-based—will come into their own.

Among these people are some whose first priority is sidetracking the arms-control process altogether and getting on with the job of building not just a major A.B.M. system but many more offensive-weapons systems as well. Their goal is stratetic superiority. A less ambitious lot, including some who really don't want a replay of the debate but see a need for some compromise, would like to try persuading the Soviets to amend the treaty to leave room for a few more A.B.M. sites than the single site it currently allows. Weinberger, a staunch advocate of Star Wars, which he has called "an inspired vision," told Mitterrand last March that his job was to strengthen deterrence but that Reagan wanted something better, so the research on Star Wars was going forward. And a senior figure in the Élysée Palace says that Assistant Secretary of Defense Richard Perle, who is the chief influence on Weinberger in these matters and the Administration's most resourceful advocate of scuttling arms control, told him that the idea of space-based defense was absurd and wouldn't work but that he and others wanted the money to protect missile silos. Yet in a speech to the National Space Club on March 29th Reagan said that Star Wars "is not, and should never be misconstrued as, just another method of protecting missile silos."

Briefly, the public advocacy of Star Wars now contains two potentially contesting viewpoints. In one group are people who echo the President's line and say that the project actually will eliminate nuclear missiles. The other, more modest contention is that Star Wars won't do that but will strengthen nuclear deterrence, because it will complicate Soviet planning for a first strike. An American diplomat compares the selling of Star Wars to a light-beer commercial on television. "Some people say it's less filling, others that it tasts great," he says.

Not until late last year did Europeans start to take Star Wars seriously. For nearly eighteen months, their governments largely ignored it, seeing no reason to do otherwise, since most people in Washington, including many of Reagan's, didn't seem to take it altogether seriously. "The strangest thing about the strategic defense initiative is how long it took us to react," a senior French diplomat says. "For a long time, we treated it as unserious—as la cowboyerie." All that changed in November and December. The scale of Reagan's reelection meant that for some time to come—at least until he entered his lame-duck phase—his people, other people, and other governments would be obliged to take any of his proposals, however notional, very seriously. In mid-December, Mikhail Gorbachev, who at the time was judged the probable successor to Konstantin Chernenko as General Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, visited London. It was Gorbachev's first significant visit to a Western capital, and it was a great success. He made a strong impression on Margaret Thatcher—who after several hours of conversation described him as someone she could work with—and on other political figures as well. He was a bella figura in the British press, as did his attractive and stylish wife. The main topic of the Thatcher-Gorbachev talk was Star Wars, to which the Soviet government had not reacted slowly. Mrs. Thatcher and her entourage were struck by the single-minded force of Gorbachev's case against what his government had for several months been calling the militarization of space. "He made it clear at every stage of the conversation that they were afraid of S.D.I. and saw it as inevitably escalating the arms race," one of her advisers says. And a senior American diplomat says, "Gorbachev woke up Europeans with his heavy emphasis on Star Wars."

Actually, the British Foreign Office was quicker off the mark than the others, and had developed deep reservations about Star Wars—many of which Mrs. Thatcher largely shared—well before Gorbachev's visit. His argument was rather disconcerting, because some of it matched British worries about extending the arms race into space and possibly killing off arms control in the bargain. Also, the British want no replay of the harsh East-West political struggle that was provoked by the decision taken in 1979 to deploy medium-range American missiles in Europe. The uncompromising Soviet line about space weaponry seemed to portend just such a struggle. Gorbachev's success in London—especially with Mrs. Thatcher—was much more than a media event, because the Reagan Administration was flustered by it and hasn't yet recovered. The mere prospect of the old Kremlin guard's being displaced by Gorbachev had already been a bit unsettling: a younger, more vigorous, and possibly more capable figure than any predecessor in the post-Stalin era would be dealing with the oldest of American Presidents, and in his second term—always a time of ebbing power. Washington was ready to be thrown off stride by the Gorbachev triumph in London.

America's major allies handle almost any serious disagreements with Washington, when they have them, in different ways. The French tend to go public, since open disagreement with Washington isn't a bad thing politically in France. The Germans criticize Washington in private talks with other governments, but they generally shrink from direct argument with the Americans. (Helmut Schmidt, the former Chancellor was an exception.) The British preference is for arguing out the divergent views directly but always privately. And that is what Mrs. Thatcher did at Camp David last December 22nd—six days after her meeting with Gorbachev. She is probably the only person who has told Reagan to his face what is wrong with Star Wars—from a European viewpoint, at least—and she may be the only one who could do so without creating friction, because their relationship is such a strong one. For about an hour and a half, she explained why a Star Wars defense might not be attainable. Thus it seemed to her unwise to go on saying that it was attainable, and nuclear weapons could be made obsolete, or that nuclear deterrence is immoral. It would be especially helpful, she said, if that part of the rhetoric could be dropped. Most of the ensuing discussion was on the first point—the feasibility of a Star Wars defense. First, Reagan addressed it, then Shultz, and then Robert C. McFarlane, Reagan's national-security adviser. Still, the Americans were reacting to what one of her advisers calls "a great Thatcher performance."

Before breaking for lunch, everyone agreed on the need for a public line, and a few minutes later a member of the Thatcher entourage produced a statement containing four points; it was accepted, and it has become, next to Reagan's speech, the best-known document in the Star Wars literature, and one that many European diplomats can quote verbatim. The first point disavows any aim on the Western side to achieve strategic superiority; the second says that the potential deployment of Star Wars-related systems would be a matter for negotiation; the third says that the goal is to "enhance, not undercut, deterrence;" and the fourth is a bow to the arms-control talks in Geneva. Mrs. Thatcher had arrived seeking to protect the principle of deterrence based on parity, or equivalence, in nuclear arms, and she also wanted a commitment that Star Wars would be negotiable with Moscow. The four points covered this ground. The meeting at Camp David was useful not just because the intensity of British feeling about Star Wars was borne in on Reagan directly but also because the depth of his commitment to the idea was borne in on the British. "He seemed to think that once she glimpsed the beauty of the concept she, too, would scramble aboard Star Wars," one of her advisers recalls. Weinberger wasn't there, and he lost no time in making clear to Reagan and others his aversion to the four points. His own point was, in effect, that you can't ask Congress for twenty-six billion dollars to develop a system you say you may never deploy. A few days later, the State Department drafted a telegram for American missions quoting the four points as policy guidance. The Defense Department refused to clear the telegram, even though it contained language approved by the President, and it wasn't sent.

In February, eyebrows shot up all over when Paul Nitze, who is now a special assistant to Shultz in these matters and a wielder of substantial power, said in a speech that "new defensive technologies" should be both "cost-effective" and "survivable." Not many people in Europe or in Washington think that Star Wars can meet those criteria. Then the ideas of March became the occasion for the hardest blow yet struck against Star Wars, and it came from an unlikely assailant: Sir Geoffrey Howe, Britain's discreet and widely respected Foreign Secretary. In a speech that raised many serious questions about the system, Howe asked whether it could be deployed "without generating dangerous uncertainty." He said, "There would be no advantage in creating a new Maginot Line of the twenty-first century, liable to be outflanked by relatively simpler and demonstrably cheaper countermeasures." Howe cited Nitze's criteria, and also worried aloud about whether political leaders would be able to control any such new system or would be yielding control to "computers and automatic decision-making." Richard Perle, who chanced to be in London a few days later, delivered a broadside against Howe's address in a speech of his own; it may have been the first time that a sub-Cabinet-level official of one government attacked a minister of another, and on the minister's turf. The State Department was annoyed, because Howe hadn't warned Shultz of what was coming, even though they had conferred two days before, at Chernenko's funeral, in Moscow. But if Howe had done that, Shultz would certainly have alerted Reagan, who would very probably have called Mrs. Thatcher and asked her to tell Howe to talk about something else. Howe's speech reverberated far wide, even giving a frisson of pleasure to the Quai d'Orsay and the Élysée Palace; he must be the only British minister in modern memory to have accomplished that. No. 10 Downing Street also felt a frisson, but not one of pleasure. Mrs. Thatcher had seen early drafts of the Howe speech, and must have approved its thrust. But, for reasons that no one fully understands, given the meticulous clearance procedures of the British system, she didn't see the final version, and seems to have been taken aback by the tone of certain passages, and by the "Maginot Line" reference in particular. Her relationship with Howe was not affected by the episode, but she wrote Reagan a letter expressing regret about the tone of the speech.

A few days later, Weinberger and Perle were in Luxembourg for a semiannual meeting of the Nuclear Planning Group—a body consisting of most of the Defense Ministers of the Western alliance. There Weinberger presented each of his colleagues with a letter inviting participation in the Star Wars research program and giving their governments sixty days to respond. (Japan, Australia, and Israel were also invited to participate.) Most capitals were suprised; they hadn't had any warning from their embassies in Washington about such an initiative, which would normally have been preceded by some diplomatic probing. The sixty-day deadline was more than a little surprising, as was Weinberger's signature on the letter. "That was a bungle," a European ambassador in Washington says. "Such a letter should have been signed by the President or the Secretary of State. Having it signed by the Secretary of Defense allowed governments to assume that this was more of a technical than a political matter." What he was unaware of is that no one in Washington outside the Weinberger circle had known about the letter; it hadn't been cleared by the normal interagency process. Weinberger was already en route to Luxembourg when the State Department was shown a copy and asked to clear it—a meaningless gesture in the circumstances. "That's how business is being done in this town," a State Department official said.

A few weeks later, a second letter went out to allied capitals; it withdrew the deadline and said, in effect, that Washington wanted only to see if there was any interest in participation in the research. At that point, teams of official people from the various capitals began visiting Washington and meeting with Lieutenant-General James Abrahamson, who is in charge of the Star Wars program, and with State and Defense Department officials, to find out what lay behind the letters. Some of them asked political and military questions, trying to see if the four points were intact and how they were being interpreted. All the teams wanted to learn what participation would mean—whether Washington envisioned government-to-government agreements or agreements with companies. These meetings haven't gone well. "We are telling them they don't have to sign on to the program's philosophy—the political part—but just to the technology itself," says an American who is closely involved in promoting the fortunes of Star Wars.

I asked an American diplomat who is also involved how much he could tell Europeans about what was in this for them.

"Very little," he said. "We aren't asking them to do anything. We say instead, 'What would you like to do? We'll discuss it.' We have no idea what we actually want them to do."

A senior British offical says, "No one is asking the really dirty question: How can you envision changing the rules without having the least idea of whether any of this can work? The Americans we see invite the participation question. But how can you talk about that if no one can say what is supposed to come of all this?"

I asked a British diplomat what the Americans said when he asked heard questions.

"The answer is always 'We don't have the answers now,'" he said. "They say the purpose of the research is to find the answers. 'Well, wouldn't the money be better spent on projects of a less uncertain nature?' we ask. There is usually no response to that. Sometimes they say that what may come out of all this is defense of hard targets"—missile silos. "But when we say, 'If it's hard targets you want to defend, why do it in space, where it won't work and where the systems will be vulnerable? Why not do it on the ground, where it might work?,' they say, 'We won't get the money unless we do it in space.' It's all circular. No one other than the President has made a clear statement, but no one among the Americans whom Europeans talk to thinks his concept is anything other than nonsense and fantasy."

I also put the question about American intentions to a French diplomat, who said that he got different answers to his questions on different sides of the Potomac.

"This is a gimmick," he said. "There is no dossier. We don't yet know whether it is to be a company-to-company or government-to-government agreement. We don't know whether the exotic technologies will be involved, or the pedestrian ones."

A senior Belgian official answered my question with a question: "What is S.D.I.? I don't know. I haven't the least idea.

According to some European officials, companies interested in Star Wars have been pushing for their governments' official endorsement of the project, reasoning that the Americans will offer very little without solid political support. But current signs are that the real situation isn't that simple. In some countries—Italy, for example—the commercial interest appears to be unambiguously strong. In others, the picture is mixed, with some companies beginning to question whether research in Star Wars will create business afterward and—more important—whether the expected spinoff will really be there. At a conference in Maastricht, in the Netherlands, on June 6th, Lewis Branscomb, vice-president and chief scientist of I.B.M., said he thought that Star Wars would be largely irrelevant for the civil side and that the supposed spinoff would more likely be "dripoff." Dieter von Sanden, until recently head of the communications division of Siemens, Germany's largest electronics company, said at the conference, "We agree with Branscomb."

The British have been sounding out the Japanese on the subject, and I was told—in both Britain's Foreign Office and its Ministry of Defense—that the attitude in Tokyo was mainly skeptical, not just at the official level but on the industrial side as well. "Their officials want benign neutrality on S.D.I.," a Whitehall diplomat says of the Japanese. "They are afraid their people will see it as Japan's being drawn into a major project leading to a war in space. Public opinion there wants no part of it." And Japanese industry, I was told in various Whitehall offices, has become very cautious about Star Wars and frankly skeptical about the commercial spinoff. Japan's commercial success in the high-technology sector has, of course, been tied to strictly nonmilitary research.

I asked a senior official in Whitehall what was going to happen.

"We have to live with S.D.I.," he said. "It isn't enough to say it's rubbish." And an American diplomat, replying to a question about the Europeans, said, "Their support can't be bought. Their acquiescence can be managed."

Acquiescence may not be enough for the Reagan people. They want an endorsement. They feel that they need it, if only because of the Soviet pressure on Europeans to resist Star Wars. Still, acquiescence may be as much as Washington can reasonably expect. Mrs. Thatcher won't go beyond the four points, which are confining. "Perle and Cap Weinberger think they can bully us into giving them a blank check," one of her people says, and he made it clear that they won't get it. Most of the other capitals have also anchored themselves to the four points, while in Bonn the struggle for the heart and mind of Helmut Kohl continues. When I was in Bonn, I tried to find out how much pressure the Soviets were putting on the Germans. I wondered whether they might have drawn a lesson from their unsuccessful campaign against the decision to deploy medium-range American missiles in Europe. By overplaying a hand that wasn't strong to begin with—putting extraordinary pressure on the Germans, and crudely, at that—the Soviets annoyed Western Europe and harmed their own cause. They loathe the prospect of an arms race in space at least as much as they do the new American missiles, partly because the effort to catch up or stay even would be depleting and perhaps all but impossible for them. Yet with the apparent conflict between Star Wars and arms control, plus other European concerns about it, the Soviets have a better hand now; Star Wars may actually be the best political weapons vis-a-vis the West they have ever had. It isn't clear that they have learned from the past, however. In talks with Kohl and his Foreign Minister, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, Soviet officials have intimated that support for Star Wars would mean a decline in economic relations. "They never said that during the missile dispute," a senior German diplomat said. He added, though, that F. Wilhelm Christians, a prominent German banker, had a two-hour conversation with Gorbachev during a recent visit to Moscow. At that time, Christians was the only German who had seen Gorbachev since Kohl met with him at the Chernenko funeral. According to Christians, Gorbachev was fairly relaxed about the possibility of German companies' taking part in Star Wars research. What he stressed was unyielding Soviet opposition to German political support—a German endorsement—of the program.

So far, the endorsement hasn't been within Washington's reach. Mitterrand took the lead in heading off American pressure to have something close to it emerge from the Bonn summit meeting; he succeeded. During the meeting, Mitterrand rejected the American invitation to participate, and his spokesman, Michel Vauzelle, described the offer as "a vague advertising circular." Besides lobbying against Star Wars, the French are pushing a research proposal of their own, called Eureka, which was unveiled a few weeks before was unveiled a few weeks before the summit and is aimed at attracting European countries that seek self-improvement in the high technology sector. So far, Eureka is more of a gleam in the eye than a fully formed proposal; what does seem clear is that while it would involve most of the same technologies as Star Wars, it would be mainly a civil program with some military spinoff—the opposite of Star Wars. If Eureka is to prosper, however, it must become a plausible and attractive program in its own right—not simply a contrived alternative to Star Wars. After a shaky start before a gallery of highly skeptical European capitals, Eureka is now being treated somewhat more seriously by most of them. The Germans have endorsed the idea, and a British official was recently quoted as saying, "We expect that Eureka will become a reality. But it will become a reality as its concrete nature evolves. Right now, it is a cluster of ideas focussing on the concept that industry in Britain, France, Germany, and other countries can do better if their cooperation is enhanced."

Diplomatic maneuvering during the month following the summit was even more intense than it had been before the meeting. Washington and, especially, Paris put Kohl under heavy pressure—heavier, probably, than any he had previously known. "Poor Kohl," said a German diplomat. "The French have the enviable position, because S.D.I. is so obviously undesirable and they have managed to maintain some distance from it."

Helmut Schmidt took the unusual step of sending Kohl a letter in which he warned about the impact of West Germany support of Star Wars. "Our close relationship with France has an extraordinarily high priority," he told his successor. "An isolated participation in the United States research-and-development program would endanger the inner cohesion of the European-alliance partners." A senior political figure in the German opposition says, "Bitburg—its price—is being equated with every move being made. The question being asked here in Bonn is: Who has more leverage with Kohl—Reagan or his own constituency? He is more committed to S.D.I. now than his government is, and after yesterday"—a reference to Kohl's political setback in North Rhine—Westphalia last May—"he may not be able to deliver his government." The three most directly concerned of his ministers are Genscher; Heinz Riesenhuber, Minister of Research and Technology; and Manfred Worner, Minister of Defense. All three are anti-Star Wars, Worner, who once said that Star Wars would lead "not to stability but just the opposite," has since moderated his public line—at times sounding like a quasi-advocate; but his private view continues to be negative.

A meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization was scheduled for early June in Estoril, near Lisbon, and Washington hoped to obtain there the pro-Star Wars language that it had been denied at Bonn. The resistance was already manifest, but Washington thought that in order to avoid an open dispute within the alliance on Star Wars the Europeans might agree among themselves to give something. They didn't. Again, it was the French who took the lead refusing to yield even an inch on Star Wars, and Shultz had to give up. Also, by then the situation had abruptly changed, and it was Shultz who was under pressure from the Europeans rather than the reverse. Europe's preoccupation with Star Wars had for a moment been displaced by a new issue: America's continued compliance with the provisions of the unratified SALT II treaty. It was clear when the Lisbon meeting began, on June 5th, that Reagan would be announcing a decision on the issue the following Monday, June 10th. Weinberger, Perle, and their ultra-right allies in the Senate were publicly urging Reagan to banish SALT II once and for all, on the ground that the Soviets were violating some of its provisions as well as some of those of the A.B.M. treaty.

In January of this year, shortly before coming to the White House as Reagan's director of communications, Patrick Buchanan wrote a newspaper column in which he said that to continue complying with SALT II would be "an act of strategic folly and appeasement that invites not Moscow's appreciation but Moscow's contempt." Leaks to the press had disclosed Reagan's options, which, boiled down, were: continued full compliance; selective, or partial, compliance; and scrubbing SALT II altogether. Neither in Washington nor in Europe was the President expected to decide in favor of continued full compliance, if only because he had called the SALT II treaty "fatally flawed." The choice was universally judged to lie between partial compliance—flouting various provisions in a kind of tit for tat with the Soviets—and gratifying the hardliners' strong preference for abolition.

On this issue, the British, not the French, had become the point of Europe's spear. London's position was no different from any other capital's, but it was more pronounced, partly because the British were better informed on the merits of the key issue—alleged Soviet violations of the agreements. British Intelligence works closely with America's; the two sides exchange information, and they often compare their assessments of a situation. In the case of supposed Soviet violations, there is a long list, which insiders do not take seriously, and there is a short list, which they do take seriously. It includes, most notably, a large radar station at Krasnoyarsk, in central Siberia, which Washington says is a violation because it is of a type that, according to the A.B.M. treaty, may be located only on the periphery, not inland, where it could be used to track incoming ballistic missiles. According to the Soviets, the radar is there only for tracking space vehicles—a function allowed by the treaty. Several American analysts also contend that the Soviets are developing two new land-based missile systems, although the SALT II treaty permits only one. Moscow says that one of the two—the SSX-25—isn't new but, rather, an improved version of an old system, and that the modification falls within limits set by the agreement.

The British do not regard either of these cases as a proved violation. The data, they say, do not decisively support the argument of either party to the dispute. The British are working with data supplied by the Americans. It isn't the first time the two governments have reached different interpretations of the same data, but no previous argument has attained the intensity of this one. At a meeting of NATO Defense Ministers in Luxembourg in late March, Michael Heseltine, a stalwart of the Thatcher Cabinet, simply told off Weinberger. Britain, he said, wouldn't be badgered into supporting America on the compliance issues; the evidence, he said, wasn't there. According to a British diplomat, he went on at some length, and "with great heat and passion." A senior colleague of Heseltine's now says, "Our concern is not so much compliance as whether there is an approach in Washington that is designed to justify retreat from the A.B.M. treaty. We need to find a solution to Krasnoyarsk. Everyone in Washington is more interested in using the issue than in resolving it."

At Estoril, it was clear that none of the European ministers would accept the American position on Soviet violations. They hoped Reagan would decide on a so-called middle option—continuing to comply with the essentials of SALT II while reserving the right to match the Soviets in going around some provisions. Everyone urged something of the kind on Shultz, who turned out to be a sympathetic ear and actually incorporated the allies' views in a message to Reagan. On his way back to Washington, Shultz had a private session on Friday evening, June 7th, with Mrs. Thatcher, and she thereupon sent a strong message to her good friend in the White House urging full compliance with the treaty. By then, Reagan was getting a number of messages, both private and public. On Wednesday, June 5th, the Senate voted ninety to five for a resolution urging Reagan to continue abiding by the treaty, although the language did allow him reciprocity in the event of alleged Soviet violations.

On June 10th, Reagan astonished everyone, including, with the exception of McFarlane, his most senior people. Neither Shultz, Weinberger, nor anyone else had expected him to favor full compliance. McFarlane knew because the decision memorandum, which is normally drafted by the President's own staff, was actually written at Camp David on Saturday, June 8th, two days before the Monday meeting. Reagan also knows what lay behind his decision. Pressure from allies—especially the Thatcher message—is assumed by diplomats to have had some effect. Yet he couldn't have seen that message before Saturday, when he made the decision, if, indeed, he hadn't made it even earlier. The moderate preferences of a bloc of Senate Republicans, twenty-two of whom must run for reelection next year, may have been a factor. My guess is that the Joint Chiefs of Staff were a key influence, and possibly the decisive one. On June 4th, six days before the National Security Council's meeting, they leaked word of a split between them and Weinberger on the compliance issue. At least three of the five, according to a page-one story in the Times, judged that without the limit of SALT II the Soviets would build many more strategic weapons that the United States, which would be held back by budgetary and perhaps political restraints. The Chiefs' well-known aversion to allowing funds for conventional weaponry—usable military power—to be funnelled instead into more nuclear weapons was also noted. In the meeting on June 10th, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, General John W. Vessey, Jr., didn't take a position for or against any of the options; he didn't have to. By declining to endorse the Weinberger line and—more important—displaying charts projecting a perverse effect on the strategic balance if the SALT II limits were shelved, Vessey was reflecting a viewpoint of which Reagan was already aware and that must have influenced his thinking. During the week before the meeting, some of the chiefs had met individually with McFarland, who would have reported the gist of what was said to Reagan.

Reagan's decision didn't exactly propel SALT II into open water. His announcement was somewhat hedged, by including a threat to do in the future what for the moment he was declining to do—take a "proportionate response" to Soviet violations. He asked the Defense Department to submit a report in mid-November recommending steps that the United States might take to modernize its strategic arsenal in response to Soviet delay violations. Disappointed hard-liners are saying that the decision has little meaning—that Reagan is only mollifying allies and other doves for a time, during which he will give the Soviets enough rope. Neither American nor most European diplomats are buying that line. Although wary, they think that Reagan probably made a historic decision and will stay with it, unless, of course, the Soviets do something foolishly provocative—a possibility that cannot be ruled out. For the first time in the Reagan era, the issue of arms control was posed on a yes-or-no basis. Until now, the President had been able to have it both ways; he could continue calling the treaty fatally flawed while infomally observing it provisions. But because it was due to expire this year and Congress had required a statement of his intentions Reagan had to choose. And he ruled clearly and unambiguously in favor of the moderates and against the nay-sayers of his Administration—another first. Those who think that he will reverse all this after the mid-November report from Weinberger are probably whistling in the dark. The congressional elections in 1986 will be that much nearer then. And Reagan will be on the eve of his meeting with Gorbachev, now scheduled for November 19th and 20th. The correspondence between the White House and the Kremlin has been livelier than it has been in at least a decade, according to one State Department official who sees it. Reagan isn't likely to do anything that would jeopardize a meeting to which he has devoted so much effort.

A British diplomat recently described the Star Wars project as "a Kabuki doll behind a glass that no one is allowed to touch." He was referring to Reagan's stout commitment to it. In May, however, Reagan signed a so-called decision memorandum, in which he instructed all government agencies to observe as formal policy the four points he had agreed to in his meeting with Mrs. Thatcher at Camp David last December. Until then, the Defense Department had continued to withhold its clearance on telegrams and other statements that sought to make that point. And Star Wars, quite evidently, has put the United States in what one experienced negotiator calls "the best negotiating position we've ever had." He and others say that in return for reaffirming the A.B.M. treaty and agreeing to a moratorium on testing space weapons the United States could, within reason, obtain just about everything it wanted from the Soviets in the Geneva arms talks. But unless there is a significant American concession on Star Wars the talks won't go anywhere. That, at least, is the opinion of most diplomats. Reagan, they reckon, has a choice: he can decide in favor of an agreement during his second term or he can hope that some distant President will bag the elusive birds in the bush—a perfect missile defense.

In the end, some people think, Reagan will listen to the Europeans—certainly to Mrs. Thatcher and the beleaguered Kohl, if only because he wants to see their hands strengthened, and dislikes the prospect of dealing with alternative British and German regimes, either of which would be to the left of its predecessor and much more adamant on Star Wars. Others doubt whether Reagan cares much about successor governments in Europe. (He wouldn't have long to deal with them, in any case.) If he is turned around on Star Wars, they say, it will be not because of external influences but, rather, because of domestic pressures. Congress is already paring his budgetary request for Star Wars in the coming fiscal year. "The S.D.I. budget is critical," a European diplomat says. "It is an objective fact, not an abstraction." The State Department would like to see S.D.I. put on the back burner, and is urging that view on the rest of the government. Whatever does or doesn't happen in the year or so ahead, Europeans are saying and, in some cases, hoping that Star Wars won't outlast the Reagan Presidency. In most capitals, the strategy will be to play for time.●

S. 1325—MEDICARE AND MEDICAID SECOND OPINION ACT OF 1985

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I am pleased to announce today that the Congressional Budget Office has officially confirmed what 10 major studies, hundreds of employers, the inspector general of HHS, and several State Medicaid Programs had already indicated—that is, that mandatory second opinion programs work.

On June 18, 1985, Senator GLENN and I introduced S. 1325, the "Medicare and Medicaid Second Opinion Act of 1985." That bill requires beneficiaries to obtain a second qualified medical opinion before undergoing certain elective surgical procedures as a condition of coverage. Federal, State, and private initiatives using mandatory second opinion programs have demonstrated that these programs enable beneficiaries to make informed decisions regarding the desirability of surgery and to protect themselves against unnecessary surgery. And CBO has confirmed that this increased protection for patients also translates into savings for the Medicare and Medicaid Programs—savings totalling $260 million for fiscal year 1986 through 1988, and $580 million through 1990. These savings are over and above the costs of operating the program, and are also over and above the amounts Peer Review Organizations [PRO's] are able to save.

These financial savings offer a way to avoid some of the proposed program changes which would adversely affect beneficiaries, such as increasing the Medicare part B premium or imposing a 1-month delay in eligibility. Further, these savings are matched by an even more important human savings in that they represent thousands of aged and poor individuals being spared the pain, disability, and death that results from unnecessary surgery.

The second opinion program presents a unique opportunity to achieve savings without affecting beneficiaries' access to quality health care. The Inspector General, the American Association of Retired Persons, and the Washington Business Group on Health are all urging the passage of this bill. Senators COHEN, DODD, and THURMOND have joined Senator GLENN and myself as cosponsors of the second opinion bill, and I am particularly pleased to see that my distinguised colleague, Senator DOMENICI, chairman of the Budget Committee, has become a cosponsor as well.

Representative BARBARA KENNELLY is moving steadily ahead with her champion bill, H.R. 2807. I hope that the Senate will look closely at this bill and recognize the unique opportunity we have here to save money and lives.●

STRATEGIC DEFENSE INITIATIVE

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, recently, I traveled abroad on official Senate business and picked up the Daily Telegraph of London which expresses British reservations about where we are going on the strategic defense initiative.

I am inserting their editorial of July 3 into the RECORD, and I particularly call the attention of my colleagues to the final sentence in the editorial suggesting that we should "extend from 6 months to 3 years the period of notice which one superpower must give the other before abrogating the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty."

It concerns our friends abroad, as well as serious Americans, that we are talking about the possibility of doing away with treaties that are important to the security of the United States and of the world.

I ask that the Daily Telegraph article be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

BUSH'S MISSION

With the release of the American hostages in Beirut and their safe transfer from Frankfurt to the United States, Vice-President George Bush is free to concentrate on the main purpose of his European visit during his short day in Britain—winning support for President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative. The British position on "Star Wars" is of particular importance to the Reagan Administration for a variety of reasons. In the first place, nobody, including American neo-conservatives, could describe the Thatcher Government as neutralist. Mrs. Thatcher may have earned the approbrium of the Wall Street Journal because of her alleged lack of ardour for supply-side economics, but the enthusiasm with which she embraced American cruise missiles, her determination to acquire the Trident system and her unflinching response to Argentine aggression in the South Atlantic have won her the right to be taken seriously in Washington.

Secondly, the British Government has been at the forefront of attempts to achieve a diplomatic formula designed to bridge the difference between perfectly natural European scepticism (and trepidation) about the wisdom of over-investing in a scheme which by any standards must be judged enormously ambitious, possibly destabilising and potentially revolutionary and the equally natural enthusiasm among American proponents for an idea whose time they believe has come. In this context, the four points on which Mrs. Thatcher secured President Reagan's agreement in February have real significance: that the purpose of SDI was to preserve balance with the Soviets rather than to gain superiority; that the deployment of SDI systems would have to take place under a negotiated transitional régime; that deterrence should be enhanced instead of undermined; that the ultimate objective should remain the reduction of offensive systems on both sides.

If Mr. Bush is to go further in the cause of building Alliance consensus than merely underwrite the four points which emerged from the Thatcher-Reagan meeting at Camp David he should in addition emphasise that any prospective defensive systems will be subjected to the most stringent survivability criteria and must be demonstrably cost-effective at the margin. He might also suggest an American willingness to extend from six months to three years the period of notice which one superpower must give the other before abrogating the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty.●

DOUBLE STANDARD TOWARD SOUTH AFRICA

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, pending congressional legislation to impose economic sanctions against South Africa offers new evidence of what is wrong with congressional attempts to direct foreign policy. Not only are the sanctions self-defeating and internally contradictory, with more harm than good likely to follow for American blacks, but the penalties are arbitrarily applied to a single government which is far from the worst offender of human rights violations in the world.

Congressional intervention into foreign relations is emotionally based and erratic.

It is not principled. It is political.

It is not evenhanded. It is minutely selective.

It is not foresighted. It is tied to the present moment without care or knowledge or what chain of events might be unleashed in future years.

Mr. President, when the South African sanctions bill was before us a few weeks ago I proposed that the same penalties put on economic dealings with South Africa be imposed on business activities and trade with the Soviet Union and Red China. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP] offered an amendment that would have required equality of treatment among all countries which are guilty of serious human rights denials, but a majority of Senators rejected it.

The ridiculous situation in which we have placed ourselves is evident to any thoughtful person. The savagism of Marxist-Leninist states, Russia, Red China, and others, is obvious. The abuses of human liberty in these police states far exceed anything occurring in South Africa. These Socialist societies are built and based on violence, on a practice of class struggle which is atheistic and a total denial of the individuality of each human person and the liberty and rights of each person. People are subordinated to the collective dictatorship. Personal human dignity is denounced and suppressed.

Mr. President, the irony of the legislation now before Congress is well described in an exceptional article written by political scientist Arnold Beichman. It appeared in the Washington Times of July 29. I hope all my colleagues will take the time to read it, if they have not already seen it, and I ask that the commentary appear in the RECORD.

The commentary follows:

[From the Washington Times, July 29, 1985]

CREATING AN INTERNATIONAL POLECAT

(By Arnold Beichman)

If you would understand what is happening in South Africa and why, then study this insightful passage by the great French political thinker, Alexis de Tocqueville. Discussing the French Revolution, de Tocqueville wrote a century and a half ago:

"It was precisely in those parts of France where there had been most improvement that popular discontent ran highest. This may seem illogical—but history is full of such paradoxes. For it is not always when things are going from bad to worse that revolution breaks out. On the contrary, it oftener happens that when a people which has put up with an oppressive rule over a long period without protest suddenly finds the government relaxing its pressure, it takes up arms against it."

To grasp the relevance of this analysis, ask yourself the following:

Suppose you picked up your newspaper one morning and read that the Soviet Union, under Mikhail Gorbachev, had announced that he was going to permit an opposition press to exist in the Soviet Union. Wow! That Mr. Gorbachev is really a reformer.

And then suppose you read a few days later that Mr. Gorbachev had announced:

That he would allow opposition parties in the U.S.S.R.;

That anybody who wanted to speak against the government and party could do so without interference;

That anybody, regardless of race or religion, who wanted to emigrate from the U.S.S.R. could do so forthwith;

That any group of people could not only form a trade union outside of the Soviet-controlled federation of unions, but also that such independent unions would be free to strike without reprisal and would be allowed to hold union meetings to denounce the government;

That foreign correspondents would be allowed to travel freely anywhere they wanted to in the Soviet Union, that U.S. television cameras would be allowed to cover rioting and even police brutality;

That any religion could be freely practiced;

That while there would still be restrictions on voting, nevertheless, some opposition parties would henceforth be allowed to seek election to Parliament;

That residence restrictions were to be lifted . . .

Need I go on? Everything I have listed in the foregoing paragraphs now exists in South Africa as an entrenched part—de facto or de jure—of its political system.

Yet South Africa is the international polecat while the U.S.S.R., a systematic, wholesale violator of human rights for some seven decades, is a respectable member of world society, so respectable that in some circles it is regarded as impermissible cold war propaganda to make issue of, say, Andrei Sakharov's imprisonment because to do so would offend Mr. Gorbachev and company and inhibit an invisible Soviet will to cut nuclear arms.

Were Mr. Gorbachev to announce even one of such reforms as in now the state of affairs in South Africa, the U.S. press and television and concerned "agents of influence" would be as ecstatic as if it represented the Second Coming.

Let's look at it another way: every time a new leader of the Soviet Communist Party is selected, learned debates occur in academic journals and in the prestige press and media about the new Soviet leader's reputed liberalism. No facts are offered, no evidence, nothing more than gossip, rumor, fantasy.

Today, it is Mr. Gorbachev, who inhabits the Soviet Camelot, praised by the likes of Dennis Healey, the British Laborite who has never recovered from the Stalinist toxin which infected him during his university career.

Yesterday it was Yuri Andropov who was the closet liberal, according to our best-informed journalists and media—Mr. Andropov, chairman of the KGB, from the standpoint of the welfare of the Soviet people, probably the worst of the lot because he was the cleverest. (There was even a time when Lavrenti Beria, Stalin's hatchet man and one of Mr. Andropov's predecessors, was regarded in the West as an intellectual because he wore pince-nez glasses.)

Now suppose that tomorrow a new prime minister or a new president were elected in South Africa. How much speculation would there be about his potential "liberal" credentials? Zero. He would be regarded as just as bad if not worse than his predecessor. Why? Because Western left-liberalism sees, with utterly no evidence, Soviet communism as reformable, as malleable, as willing to compromise, as rational, as always improving, even though in the almost seven decades of its existence it has gone consistently from bad to worse.

Whatever reform South Africa has or might introduce is only documentation for its unreformability, even though the foreign press would have the right to check the validity of the reform. But any "reform" introduced by the Soviet Politburo is automatically accepted at face value, as a sign of better times ahead for human rights in the U.S.S.R. Yet it would be impossible for the foreign media to have the privilege of checking to see if the new Soviet "reform" actually exists.

Now why the double standard in enlightened public opinion about these two countries, from both of which I might add I am barred entry? (The Soviet Union, which I have never visited, has twice refused me a visa. South Africa, which I did visit in 1965, thereafter refused to grant me a visa because of my writings.)

People who refuse to know anything about the Soviet KGB espionage apparatus know all about BOSS, South Africa's security apparatus. Is there some moral distinction between the two? How can one be for an economic boycott of South Africa and not seek a similar boycott of the Soviet Union? Why is the phrase, "constructive engagement," political scatology applied to South Africa while the phrase "quiet diplomacy" is an ideal approach to the ever-expanding Soviet empire?

If the State Department is perturbed by South Africa's state of emergency promulgated July 20 1985, how about the permanent state of emergency promulgated by V.I. Lenin in November 1917?

The answer to these questions lies in de Tocqueville's lapidry sentences. Perhaps they explain the passion about this apartheid system, disintegrating before our very eyes, among AFL-CIO leaders who court arrest before the South African embassy while they fail to maintain a similarly intensive vigil before the Soviet embassy.

I am not suggesting that the AFL-CIO is soft on communism; on the contrary, they are still among the toughest anti-communist constituencies in the country. What I would ask these labor leaders is this:

Where is there more hope for free and democratic trade unionism—in South Africa, where a genuine beginning has already been made among black workers, (white workers have had strong unions for decades) or in the Soviet Union, where the ideology of Marxism-Leninism forbids freedom of association?

Of course, Pretoria has abrogated these trade union privileges for blacks. But at least there is something to abrogate, to take away. There is nothing to take away from the Soviet working class because they haven't had a moment of freedom since Lenin enslaved them at the Tenth Communist Party Congress in 1921.

Anatoly Shcharansky and Andrei Sakharov are cloistered away, heaven knows where (or if they are even still alive). But Bishop Desmond Tutu says what he pleases in South Africa without fear of reprisal, gives interviews to anyone he pleases.

Helen Suzman, an opposition member of the South African Parliament, can denounce the government on behalf of the opposition Progressive Party and nothing happens to her and other members of the Progressive caucus. Is there a single opposition voice in the Soviet Union not in a punitive psychiatric ward or in a forced labor camp or plain simply dying of hunger? For them, there are no Dan Rather TV interviews, no Tom Brokaw interviews, no Peter Jennings interviews—no interviews with any Soviet dissident for the Seven O'Clock News.

If South Africa marches into Angola or Mozambique or Botswana, the House of Shame called the United Nations springs into action. But are such episodic South African incursions really worse than genocide by chemical and biological weapons in Afghanistan, or the Red Army seizure of the baltic countries which are now Soviet Bantustans?

American corporations are pressed to get out of South Africa, where it is easily proven that their presence benefits black workers, while other American corporations are encouraged to do business with the U.S.S.R., althought it is the Soviet war machine that benefits.

Yet which is more the "evil empire"—the U.S.S.R. or South Africa? In fact, which is the arrogant empire honored by bien pensant Western intellectuals and which is the beleaguered island surrounded by the world's contempt? The Soviet Union can say, as Tacitus once said," Let them hate us so long as they fear us." Who anymore fears the Botha regime?

I am not saying that because of the many reforms forced upon South Africa that it is the coming paradise. But is Afrikanerdom any worse than Mugabeism and what goes on in Zimbabwe because a few Shona tribesmen and a handful of whites won some seats in what is surely going to be a nonrepresentative parliament, like most other "representative" bodies in black Africa?

The bloody, inhumane idiocy of apartheid that I saw in practice in South Africa in 1965 is today far less onerous for blacks and therfore, by de Tocqueville's law, all the more intolerable. In that change for the better lies the reason why so much of the world is against South Africa while that same world willfully ignores the daily atrocities against human rights in the Soviet Union.

South Africa is burning; the day of African freedom nears, but the U.S.S.R. is an island of stability, its historic imperialism legitimized by the Helsinki maquillage and accepted by three U.S. administrations.

Yet will Namibia be a better place when Sam Nujoma takes over? I doubt it. Will the world be a better place when "majority rule"—Zulu versus Sotho versus Xhosa—comes to South Africa, as it inevitably will?

But the world would surely be a better place if the Soviet Union respected human rights, ceased to occupy territory not its own in Eastern Europe and on the Baltic and removed its SS-20s which threaten the people and civilization of Western Europe.

But all that's too logical. The reason why South Africa is the international polecat is that things in South Africa are not going from bad worse. Thus many people smell a cheap victory—cheap in the sense that, whatever you do to South Africa, it won't start World War III.

But who knows what you could start if you publicly raised questions about Mr. Gorbachev's sense of compassion toward the helpless people in the U.S.S.R., about the sincerity of his protestations for peace? After all, the U.S.S.R. does shoot down unarmed airliners loaded with helpless civilians.

Someday, we will look back at South Africa, as we now look back on Nicaragua—was Mr. Somoza worse than Mr. Ortega? And Iran—was the Shah worse than the Ayatollah Khomeini? And Cuba—was Mr. Batista worse than Fidel Castro? And Vietnam—was Mr. Diem worse than Ho Chi Minh? And Ethiopia—was Haile Selassie worse than Mr. Mengistu's Dergue?

And deep in our hearts, we will wonder about the 20th century tragedy of moral choice—the choice between bad and worse, between good and perfect, between half-life and half-death, between the ethical paradox of fractional truth—in a world dominated by immoral governing elites before whom so many moralists bow and scrape in the name of freedom.

Another Frenchman, Andre Malraux, once wrote that, "The path that leads from moral reasoning to political action is strewn with our dead selves." So, at least—just this once:

How about freedom for Andrei Sakharov—and Nelson Mandela?●

BARBARA R. MORGAN

● Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, last August President Reagan directed the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to select a teacher as the first private citizen to be launched into space aboard the space shuttle. After reviewing more than 10,000 applications from teachers throughout the United States vying for the honor of being the first teacher in space, the field was narrowed to 10 finalists from whom NASA selected a winner and back-up candidate to fill the role of space flight participant in a mission scheduled for next January.

A week ago last Friday, Vice President Bush announced the winner along with a back-up candidate, Barbara R. Morgan. Barbara is from the town of McCall, ID, where she teaches at McCall-Donnelly Elementary School.

In September, Barbara will begin approximately 120 hours of training over a 4-month period at NASA's Johnson Space Center in Houston and the Kennedy Space Center in Florida. In the event that the primary candidate—Sharon Christa McAuliffe of Concord, NH—will be unable to fulfill the requirements of the mission, Barbara will become the space flight participant.

Barbara will be taught how to operate the orbiter's systems, such as those involved with hatches, food, and hygiene, and will become proficient in normal and emergency procedures required for safe and efficient shuttle crew operations. In addition, she will be involved with demonstrations, simulations of life on the shuttle, Earth observations and selected photographic and filming activities. The talents of the other eight finalists, including those of David Marquart, a computer science teacher from Boise High School, will also be used to help design the lesson plans and actual demonstrations to be performed in flight in the mid-deck of the shuttle orbiter. These demonstrations will be broadcast live via satellite to thousands of classrooms across America.

NASA's intent with the "Teacher in Space Project" is to communicate to millions of young people throughout America the wonders and mysteries of space flight. It is hoped that the satellite broadcast will strengthen ties with the educational community, to ensure that this exciting adventure in space will continue to inspire young people to excellence. In addition to her training, Barbara will serve as a goodwill ambassador for NASA for approximately 1 year, during which she will consult and assist with its educational activities.

Barbara is a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Stanford University, and did her postgraduate work at the College of Notre Dame. In addition to her teaching duties, she conducts a Red Cross summer swim program and has organized participation in the Idaho Special Olympics.

Aside from our famous potatoes, Idaho is well-known for its gems. I think NASA certainly found one in Barbara. This evening, in McCall, hundreds of her friends, neighbors, fellow teachers and students are holding a celebration to honor her accomplishment. I hope my colleagues will join with me today in extending to her congratulations and best wishes. I am proud of her, the Nation is proud of her, and, most importantly, the students and teachers and all of the citizens of Idaho are proud to have her represent them in this exciting space adventure.●

RELIGION IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the magazine Liberty, in its May/June issue, contains an article by Pat Arnow, a freelance writer living in Johnson City, TN, on the issue of religion in public schools.

Pat Arnow happens to be Jewish by background, but many other backgrounds could be cited, as well, for the problems inherent in our schools being used as a source to promote religion.

As the son of a Lutheran minister, I applaud religious endeavors. But as someone with a sense of history, I believe that Pat Arnow's message is one my colleagues in this body should be listening to as we face a proposal for a constitutional amendment to inject religion into our public schools.

Our homes and our churches and our synagogues are the places to promote religion. Government has no business in such activity unless such involvement is free to all across the board without prejudice. We do that with tax deductibility. That encourages Lutherans and Catholics and Jews, but it also can encourage atheists or Buddhists or Muslims. I ask that the Pat Arnow piece be printed in the RECORD.

THE YEAR WE HID OUR RELIGION

(By Pat Arnow)

To my sister and me, transferring to a Virginia high school spelled adventure. We were early teens who had never strayed far from Chicago. In our North Side melting-pot neighborhood we had walked to school or taken city buses on cold days. On our way to Prince George County High School we rode the school bus through a countryside of rolling hills. Classmates and teachers seemed friendlier and more helpful than their Chicago counterparts—though their Southern accents sometimes needed an interpreter. With the innocence of youth we didn't see ourselves as the "foreigners."

There was a darker side to our new world, however—one that has shaped my appreciation for separation of church and state—especially in the classroom. Every morning the principal, after reading announcements over the loudspeaker, said a prayer while students dutifully bowed their heads over their desks. The prayer wasn't long. I don't remember the themes. I do remember how the daily ordeal ended. The principal always said, "In the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, Amen."

I didn't know what to do. As a Jew, I prayed straight to God, not in anyone else's name. To accept the prayer as mine was more of a sin, according to what I had been taught, than not praying at all.

My sister and I talked it over. She was as upset about the prayers as I was. But we didn't see a solution. We would have jumped in front of our school bus sooner than ask to be excused. We wouldn't have considered asking that the final phrase be changed to encompass a God that was ours as well as theirs. We could do nothing.

We had gone from a public school in Chicago, where more than half the students were Jewish and no religion was the least bit odd, to a school where we were the only non-Christians. We agreed to keep our religion to ourselves. During that year neither of us told a single person that we were Jewish.

I don't think we were cowardly. We were simply children. "Jesus Christ our Lord" coming over the loudspeaker every morning didn't leave room for any other belief being normal. It built a wall, with my sister and me standing on the outside.

The problem, ultimately, with prayer in public schools is that it excludes some of us. When an authority figure recites prayers the minority become freaks. Parents may argue that their freedom to practice their religion is thus enhanced. But prayer can't be put in the school without restraining the religious freedom of others. Freedom of religion is most important when we find ourselves in the minority, not when we are a confident majority.

I didn't know, in 1962, that those daily prayers were part of a national controversy. I thought of school prayer as my personal problem, an unchangeable institution I could do nothing about. By the time the Supreme Court ruled against the practice, my sister and I were back in prayerless Chicago. But I remember hearing about the decision and feeling relieved. No other children would be subjected to the embarrassment and humiliation that my sister and I had endured.●

STUDY INDICATES COCAINE MORE HARMFUL THAN HEROIN

● Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, a recently released study by Concordia University in Montreal has revealed that prolonged use of cocaine may be more deadly than heroin. Medical researchers added that mortality figures in the United States are reflecting that fact.

The American Medical Association Journal, reporting on the study done on laboratory rats, said that there was a 90 percent mortality rate in animals given cocaine for 1 month compared with a 36 percent death rate among those given heroin.

The Concordia University study also said that cocaine has toxic effects, may depress brain function, and has been underestimated as a killer.

Dr. William Pollin, Director of the National Institute on Drug Abuse, indicated that:

Whether or not there has been a recent increase in the number of cocaine users in this country, it is clear that more intensive and destructive patterns of use—including freebasing, intravenous administration, and the use of cocaine in combination with other drugs—have occurred among the existing population of users.

This has resulted in a 91 percent increase in cocaine-related deaths in the United States from 1980 to 1983. One of the main reasons for the increase in popular use of this so-called "recreational" drug is that heavier production in South America offers the possibility of a greater supply and lower prices. Dr. Pollin completed his commentary on this remarkable study by making this statement:

Cocaine is now becoming widely recognized as one of the most dangerous illicit drugs in common use.

The results of this study came from exhaustive scientific research involving administering both heroin and cocaine to rats. In the study, 23 rats were divided into two groups with each group having access to either cocaine or heroin in a self-administered solution. During the study the general health of the animals became markedly different. Those self-administering heroin maintained good grooming behavior, pretesting body weight, and a good state of general health. Those rats self-administering cocaine tended to cease grooming behavior, to lose up to 47 percent of their pretesting weight and to show a pronounced deterioration in general health.

The study concluded that as greater quantities of cocaine are administered and the concentration of this compound increases, the number of fatalities associated with cocaine abuse will tend to rise.

Mr. President, Americans are more and more aware that cocaine is one of the most dangerous illicit drugs in use today. I commend the very detailed study compiled by Concordia University in Montreal and hope that the conclusions of this report will be used to continue to educate and inform the public as to the increasingly recognized destructive effects of cocaine.●

TARGETED JOBS TAX CREDIT PROGRAM

● Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, today I join with my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. HEINZ] in cosponsoring S. 1250. Introduced by Senator HEINZ on June 6, 1985, this bill extends the targeted jobs tax credit [TJTC] for 5 more years. Presently, this important program is scheduled to expire at the end of December 1985.

The TJTC was implemented in 1978 to encourage employers to hire disadvantaged individuals from targeted groups who may otherwise not obtain productive employment. These persons typically have limited work experience and chronically low incomes. Often they are dependent on Federal and/or State government income assistance. The following is a list of targeted groups eligible for a TJTC:

First. Vocational rehabilitation referrals.

Second. Economically disadvantaged students (ages 18–24).

Third. Economically disadvantaged Vietnam-era veterans.

Fourth. Supplemental Security Income [SSI] recipients.

Fifth. General assistance (welfare) recipients.

Sixth. Economically disadvantaged former convicts.

Seventh. Economically disadvantaged cooperative education students (ages 16–29).

Eighth. Aid to Families with Dependent Children [AFDC] recipients and Work Incentive [WIN] registrants.

Ninth. Economically disadvantaged summer youth employees.

Under the TJTC program, an employer who hires a person certified as a member of a targeted group receives a tax credit equal to one-half of the first $6,000 of the first year's wages and one quarter of the first $6,000 of the second year. No employer is compelled to hire a person from an eligible group. No Government staff is needed to run the program. There is simply a tax credit available to employers who hire persons from the specified groups.

Mr. President, while it is true that our Nation's economy has improved over the last year, there are many communities and industries across our country who have experienced no recovery at all. In my State, serious unemployment and economic stagnation continue to be present. Oregon is still suffering the effects of the past recession which were brought about by national economic problems that were not of its own making. Currently, 23 of the 27 Oregon counties have unemployment rates of over 10 percent.

Extension of the TJTC is critical to providing jobs for these disadvantaged persons, particularly for those in communities which are still struggling to recover from the recession as well as adapt to changes in employment opportunities. Extension also will help reduce the numbers of individuals on Government welfare rolls and enable these individuals to become productive, taxpaying members of our society.

While the TJTC program has been in existence since 1978, it has never been fully utilized. This appears to be due, at least in part, to the fact that over the last 2 years the program has received single year extensions. S. 1250 extends the TJTC for 5 years in an effort to give the program continuity and permanence. This will allow more businesses to become aware of the TJTC and will enable employers to incorporate the TJTC into their long-range plans.

Mr. President, I have supported the targeted jobs tax credit in the past, and I will continue to support it. The Senate must not allow this program to die. During a time when it is imperative that Congress reduce the level of Federal spending, the TJTC program is a means of providing some hope to those individuals who because of a lack of skills, experience, or money, have been unable to find employment. I commend the Senator from Pennsylvania for introducing this measure and urge its positive consideration by the Senate.●

NORTH KOREA

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, in Newsweek magazine recently, Prof. Parris H. Chang, professor of political science at Pennsylvania State University, had a column about North Korea that made a good deal of sense.

He says, among other things, that the U.S. Government "should give serious consideration to allowing people-to-people contacts between the United States and North Korea. The time would also be ripe for Americans to open up cultural, scientific and economic exchanges with North Korea."

We seem to shoot ourselves in the foot so easily.

In the case of North Korea, in the case of Vietnam, and in the case of Cuba, our policy drives these countries into the arms of and into dependence on countries where such dependence is not healthy, either for the countries involved or for our own future.

It seems clear to me that the more we can encourage independence on the part of all countries of the world—independence of the Soviet Union, independence of China, and yes, even independence of the United States—that is in the best interest of everyone.

I ask that Professor Chang's article be inserted in the RECORD at this point, and I urge my colleagues to read it and to reexamine whether our policies toward these three countries are serving the national interest or they're serving our own emotional needs.

The national interest clearly is to encourage greater independence on the part of these countries.

The article follows:

NORTH KOREA'S WIND OF CHANGE

(Opinion/Parris H. Chang)

North Korea is approaching the end of an era, and a new stage in its political and economic development lies immediately ahead. The end of President Kim Il Sung's four decades of highly personalized, autocratic rule is in sight. At the age of 73, Kim is transferring political power to Kim Jong Il, his 43-year-old son, and to a younger generation of cadres. In the process, North Korea, a rigidly xenophobic nation, is now adopting several measures to encourage foreign investment and to expand trade with the West. North Korea's conciliatory moves include a proposal for a tripartite (North Korea-U.S.-South Korea) talk to seek a permanent Korean peace treaty and to discuss reunification, the delivery of Red Cross relief goods to flood victims and further meetings to spur the inter-Korea dialogue on unification. Each of them represents a departure from Pyongyang's militant hardline policy of the recent past.

These are some of the distinct impressions I got during a recent visit to North Korea. Ever since the emergence of Kim Jong Il as his father's political heir in 1980, he has solidified control of the country's ruling party, the Korean Workers' Party. As a member of the Polituro Presidium, the highest decision-making body in North Korea, and of the KWP Secretariat, Kim Jong Il is handling the day-to-day administration of party and government affairs. Cambodian Prince Norodom Sihanouk, a close friend of President Kim and Kim Jong Il, told me that "the process of power transfer is virtually over." Sihanouk credited the younger Kim with initiating the ideas of an economic open-door policy and of inter-Korean parliamentary discussion.

LIMITED EXPOSURED

However, it may be too early to judge whether Kim Jong Il possesses the necessary political acumen as well as sufficient leadership skills and experience to command support and to govern North Korea. He has only limited exposure outside North Korea—his travel abroad in the past two decades has been only in China—and his ability to handle world affairs is untested. Most important, Kim Jong Il, unlike his father, never served in the military. Thus he could encounter resistance, if not outright opposition, among veteran officers when he seeks to assert his leadership over military matters.

Meanwhile a younger technocratic elite is emerging. Kang Song San, an economist in his mid-50s, was named prime minister in 1984. In 1983 the government appointed a young, urbane foreign minister, Kim Yong Nam, and it has since sent abroad more than a score of new envoys who, as a rule, are young and fluent in several languages.

Pyongyang is now pursuing a policy that calls for improved economic and technical ties with all nations, including capitalist countries that have no diplomatic ties with North Korea. To justify such an important change, Kim Jong Il is quoted to have said: "Building an independent national economy on the principle of self-reliance does not mean building an economy in isolation. An independent economy is opposed to foreign economic domination and subjugation; but it does not rule out international economic cooperation." In September 1984 North Korea's Supreme People's Assembly enacted a joint-venture law to boost foreign investments in "industry, construction, transportation, science and technology, and tourism." The new law stipulates that the property and profits of joint-venture firms would be protected and that a joint company "may export its products" and "may be exempted from income tax for a certain period from the start of production."

Peking's influence seems evident in Pyongyang's current effort to make way for foreign investment and technology. When Kim Jong Il visited China in June 1983, he inspected several factories, including the Baoshan Steel complex—a Sino-Japanese joint venture outside Shanghai. When Prime Minister Kang Song San paid an official visit to China in August 1984, he signed a joint-venture agreement with Peking.

But North Korea will need much more than the passage of a joint-venture law to attract foreign investment. Because of the West's continuing mistrust of North Korea, and Pyongyang's failure to service its foreign debt in the 1970s, foreign businessmen may remain cautious for some time to come about dealing with Pyongyang. However, the important point is that North Korea has adopted the beginnings of outward-looking policy. Cadres in North Korea seem still largely ignorant of the outside world, but if the are humble and willing to learn, they, like their counterparts in China or South Korea, can become familiar with the ways of the capitalist world.

STABILITY

There is no question that the creation of a North Korean "economic miracle" would greatly boost the prospects of peace and stability in East Asia. South Korea, Japan and the United States should do what they can to help Pyongyang on the road to greater economic involvement with other nations. This, however, is more easily said than done. The view that North Korea is aggressive, irrational and ready to invade the south at any time is still widespread in the West. On the other hand, a visitor who has seen North Korea on a close-up basis may question the total accuracy of these images. In the past three decades Kim Il Sung has reconstructed North Korea from the debris of war and built a standard of living comparable to Eastern Europe's. North Koreans are not so irrational that they would casually risk its destruction. And they do have a major stake in the preservation of peace in the Korean peninsula.

North Korea is not an easy country to deal with. And the lack of firsthand knowledge in the West of that self-enclosed country and its society has compounded the problem. As the initial step of coping with such a problem, the U.S. government should give serious consideration to allowing people-to-people contacts between the United States and North Korea. The time would also be ripe for Americans to open up cultural, scientific and economic exchanges with North Korea.●

EXPANDED CAPITAL OWNERSHIP AND THE IDEOLOGICAL HIGH GROUND

● Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, today I want to add my voice to those of Congressmen CRANE and BARNES regarding expanded capital ownership as a new bipartisan thrust in America's ideological counteroffensive against Marxism-Leninism in the Western Hemisphere.

Great courage and visionary statesmanship were demonstrated by Mr. BARNES and Mr. CRANE when they joined in introducing House Concurrent Resolution 31, which calls upon the President to form a private sector task force to develop a strategy for encouraging employee stock ownership plans [ESOP's] as a major element in our Caribbean Basin Initiative. Appropriately, they call this effort, project economic justice. From this seed, both the Senate and House versions of the foreign aid authorization bills, as approved in each Chamber, contained provisions to implement this new concept in Central America and the Caribbean. President Reagan, a long-time advocate of the ESOP approach, and top officials of the administration have already demonstrated in word and deed that they will lend their support to this innovative project for combining free enterprise development with a growing piece of the action for workers in the region.

To reinforce this effort and to educate the American people about the underlying philosophy and technology of expanded capital ownership, Mr. BARNES and Mr. CRANE have introduced a series of articles by leading thinkers on this most important subject.

It is not good enough, however, to know the evils of marxism as a threat to justice, as discussed in earlier articles, nor the good of free enterprise in general, as discussed in other articles. Equally important are the means and technologies best suited for achieving this good. As my contribution to this noble cause, I am introducing three additional articles on the practical techniques and case-tested methodologies for providing workers with access to ownership. Today's insertion is from selected comments by Senator RUSSELL B. LONG, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee for over a decade and Capitol Hill's leading champion of the ESOP technique. For the benefit of my colleagues, the following article has been extracted from the floor statement of November 17, 1983, when with 46 Senate cosponsors, Senator LONG introduced the Employee Stock Ownership Act of 1983.

The article follows:

EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLANS: A POWERFUL TECHNOLOGY FOR EXPANDED CAPITAL OWNERSHIP

(By Hon. Russell B. Long)

The primary purpose of an Employee Stock Ownership Plan (ESOP), as I have been privileged to develop this financing tool during the past decade, is to serve as an incentive for corporations to structure their financing in such a way that employees can gain an ownership stake in the company for which they work.

What the Congress sanctioned with the ESOP is a socially improved technique of corporate finance that also serves as a new type of employee benefit. Thus, as a tax-qualified plan for providing employee benefits, in the form of employer stock, an ESOP is subject to many of the same standards imposed on other types of employee benefit plans but interpreted in light of the special purposes for which ESOP's are intended.

The term "technique of corporate finance" refers primarily to the "leveraged" ESOP, an ESOP that uses borrowed funds to acquire employer stock, with the employer, or a related party, guaranteeing repayment of the loan. It is this guarantee, plus the underlying security provided for the loan, that puts the logic of corporate finance to work for a company's employees.

In a 1953 revenue ruling, the Internal Revenue Service sanctioned this type of leveraging by a defined contribution plan, thus laying the legal groundwork for the leveraged ESOP. The first known use of ESOP-type financing, pioneered by attorney Louis Kelso, involved a 1956 employee buy out of a chain of California newspapers that was threatened with a takeover by a major chain. But only in the last few years has the business world at large become aware of this innovation.

Suppose, for example, that corporation X wants to build a new plant costing $10 million. With traditional debt financing, the company would borrow the $10 million, provide adequate collateral and guarantee of repayment to satisfy the lender, use the borrowed funds to build the plant, and then utilize the income generated by the new plant to repay the loan.

The ESOP adds a third element to this transaction—an employee stock ownership trust. The trust borrows the funds based on the sponsoring corporation's guarantee that it will made periodic payments to the trust sufficient to repay the loan. As with traditional financing, the corporation may be required to secure this guarantee with collateral.

The ESOP trust then uses the borrowed funds to acquire newly issued employer securities, and the corporation applies the funds to build its new plant. As the new plant generates income, corporation X makes payments to the trust with are used to pay its obligation to the lender.

The primary difference is that with conventional debt financing, only interest payments are deductible for income tax purposes; amounts used to repay loan principal are not. The employer's contributions to the ESOP, however, are fully deductible, as employer contributions to an employee benefit plan, including those applied by the trust to repay loan principal.

Consequently, where corporation X uses the ESOP as its financing vehicle, it may repay its indebtedness, both principal and interest, with tax-deductible dollars. The Internal Revenue Code limits to 25 percent of payroll the amount that can be deducted each year for principal payments; interest payments are deductible without limit.

Thus, assuming, for example, a 50-percent tax rate and conventional debt financing, corporation X would need to generate $20 million in revenues to repay the $10 million in loan principal. With ESOP financing, however, the corporation would need to generate only $10 million to repay the loan principal through tax-deductible contributions to its ESOP.

By enabling a company to expense its capital investment, the ESOP lowers the sponsor company's taxable income and increases its available capital for other purposes; and the same dollar that finances the company's capital requirements also finances an employee benefit in the form of employer stock.

After purchase, the stock is held in an escrow account for allocation to employees' individual ESOP accounts as the loan is repaid. In no sense is this a "gift" to employees; rather, the capital is paid for out of the future flow of earnings that the new capital itself generates. As the already-rich know so well, the new capital's productiveness generally pays for itself.

The ESOP participants, however, also "earn" their ownership interest in the company through the ESOP's requirement that employees work for the company for a prescribed period of time before the stock in their ESOP accounts becomes nonforfeitable, that is, vested. An appropriate analogy can be drawn to the Homestead Act of 1862 under which the potential owner earned his or her acreage by homesteading the land for at least 5 years.

The employee stock ownership plan (ESOP) first received congressional approval in 1974 with passage of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA). ERISA made it clear that the ESOP is a technique of corporate finance that utilizes the advantages of a tax-exempt employee benefit trust to encourage the financing of corporate transactions in such a way that employees will have an opportunity to earn an ownership stake in their employer.

Federal encouragement of ESOP's has also included loans and loan guarantees from a variety of Federal agencies, including the Economic Development Administration of the Commerce Department, the Farmer's Home Administration, and the Department of Housing and Urban Development. In addition, as part of the trade adjustment assistance provided under the Trade Act of 1974, and as amended in 1983, ESOP companies are granted preferred status for Federal loan guarantees.

More recently, the Small Business Development Act of 1980 included a provision encouraging the Small Business Administration to provide financing both for ESOP companies and for employee organizations seeking to acquire an ownership interest in their employer. ESOP's were also made a condition of Federal financial assistance to the Chrysler Corp., Conrail, and others.

State legislatures have also demonstrated a growing interest in ESOP's. California, Delaware, Illinois, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New Jersey, New York, and West Virginia now have laws favorable to ESOP financing. Maryland's "Broadened Owernship Act," for example, establishes support for ESOP's as official State economic policy, and requires several State agencies to report annually on their progress in implementing this policy. Since 1974, Minnesota has had several ESOP-related tax incentives on its books.

Several of these States have additional legislation under consideration and legislation is pending in other States as well. Financial and other assistance has also been provided for ESOP buyouts by California, Georgia, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, New Jersey, New York, and Pennsylvania.

This increased use of ESOP's for development financing reflects a return to incentive economics. The coupling of development programs with employee ownership programs results in a more production-oriented work force. That, in turn, helps to insure that scarce economic development dollars are invested so as to get the most "bank for the buck."

ESOP's are a healthy step in that direction. In addition to insuring that the benefits of development financing are more widely dispersed than through traditional means, the ESOP also helps to create the circumstances in which assisted companies are more likely to survive, and in which taxpayer-provided development loans are more likely to be repaid.

In terms of motivation, the merit of an ESOP-targeted economic development policy can be easily summarized: ownership counts. It summons up a common determination to succeed and insures that the company's success is shared with those on whom that success will largely depend.

Researchers at the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations at Cornell University and at the National Center for Employee Ownership cite these reasons and others for the fact that, to the knowledge of researchers in the field, more than 90 percent of employee buyouts are still in operation.

ESOP-type financing is not intended for losers.

It is intended, however, for those losers and for those marginally profitable firms who, with employee ownership, can become winners. It is intended for those employee groups willing to tie some portion of their future wages and benefits to their company's performance. On that point, it is encouraging to note that a 1981 Louis Harris survey of employee attitudes indicates that 63 percent of those surveyed would be willing to link their salaries to higher personal productivity.

It is also intended for those companies and those employee groups who feel that a climate of cooperation and compromise may now be better suited to their purposes than continued confrontation. That 1981 Harris survey also found that one in four Americans thinks better relations between management and labor is one of the changes that would do the most to improve productivity in the workplace. Only financial rewards for productivity gains, 30 percent, are thought to be more effective. A well-designed employee stock ownership arrangement can, of course, address both of those concerns.

Business executives surveyed—44 percent—likewise think that better labor-management relations are one of the changes that would best contribute to increased productivity. Only the use of better equipment or tools—65 percent—is viewed by them as more important.

Employee stock ownership provides a healthy new dimension to the economic development process. It enables those affected to examine the issue in a different frame of reference, one in which the effect on them becomes much more real, and one in which they can realize how important their productive efforts are to that process.

Employee stock ownership is for those who believe in the worth of the individual employee, and for those who see the rank and file as the root source of quality, creativity, and productivity.●

NOTICE OF DETERMINATIONS BY THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON ETHICS

● Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, it is required by paragraph 4 of rule 35 that I place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this notice of a Senate employee who proposes to participate in a program, the principal objective of which is educational, sponsored by a foreign government or a foreign educational or charitable organization involving travel to a foreign country paid for by that foreign government or organization.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit Ms. Jade West, a member of the staff of Senator JAMES A. MCCLURE, to participate in a program in South Africa, sponsored by the South Africa Foundation, a nongovernmental institution, from August 17–29, 1985.

The committee has determined that participation by Ms. West in the program in South Africa, Zimbabwe, and Mozambique, at the expense of the South Africa Foundation, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35, which would permit Mr. Wayne Abernathy, economist with the Subcommittee on International Finance and Monetary Policy, and Steven B. Harris, minority counsel to the subcommittee, to participate in a program in South Africa, Zimbabwe, and Mozambique from August 17–30, 1985, sponsored by the South Africa Foundation.

The committee has determined that their participation in the program in South Africa, Zimbabwe, and Mozambique at the expense of the South Africa Foundation, to confer with business and government leaders, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit Mr. Robert Waters of the staff of Senator TOM HARKIN to participate in a program in Taipei, Taiwan, sponsored by Soochow University, from August 2–10, 1985.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Waters in the program in Taipei, Taiwan, at the expense of Soochow University, to discuss United States-Taiwan relations, is in the interests of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit Mr. Peter Knight, of the staff of Senator ALBERT GORE, JR., to participate in a program in Taipei, Taiwan, sponsored by Soochow University, from August 2–10, 1985.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Knight in the program in Taiwan, at the expense of Soochow University, to discuss United States-Taiwan issues, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit Ms. Ryan Conroy of the staff of Senator ALAN CRANSTON to participate in a program in the People's Republic of China, sponsored by the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs in conjunction with the United States-Asia Institute, from August 18–31, 1985.

The committee has determined that participation by Ms. Conroy in the program in the People's Republic of China, at the expense of the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs in conjunction with the United States-Asia Institute, to discuss United States-Chinese relations, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.●

DEBUNKING TEEN PREGNANCY MYTHS

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, one of the people who has been most articulate on the problems of the disadvantaged in our society has been Marian Wright Edelman.

She is not only articulate, she is forceful.

She has written about the problems of teen pregnancy in an article which appeared in the Chicago Defender.

Her comments about the myths of pregnancy are right on target.

And beyond these myths, we should face the reality that one of the ways we are going to discourage teenage pregnancies is to encourage more quality education in our schools. We also need to attack the massive problem of adult illiteracy.

While all teenage girls are not illiterate, a disproportionately high percentage are school drop-outs who have gone to schools that did not give them the kind of opportunities they should have had.

I ask that Marian Wright Edelman's article be printed in the RECORD at this point, and I encourage my colleagues to read it.

The article follows:

DEBUNKING TEEN PREGNANCY MYTHS

(By Marian Wright Edelman)

Teenagers pass around a lot of misinformation about pregnancy. They tell each other such myths as: "You can't get pregnant the first time" or "you can't get pregnant if you have sex standing up." The effect is to compound the adolescent pregnancy problem.

But teens are not the only ones spreading misinformation. Many adults also cling to outmoded theories about who gets pregnant and why—theories that can be just as damaging as the teen myths. Before we can tackle the teen pregnancy problem effectively, we must examine and debunk some of these adult myths:

Myth 1: "Most pregnant teens are 'bad girls' who had no future anyway." The fact is that half of all teens today are sexually active—teens of all different races and incomes. Pregnant teens are just the ones who "got caught"—the sexually active teens who did not practice contraception early enough or consistently enough to avoid pregnancy. Teen parents are more likely to have dim futures ahead than those who manage to avoid pregnancy, but this is a consequence of their being poor, not of their being "bad."

Myth 2: "Sex education and birth control encourage teens to be sexually active." Lifematuration, television, R-rated movies, peers all encourage teens to be sexually active. Discussions that put sex in the context of the family life and personal decisionmaking can help teens make sense out of their feelings and the message they pick up from peers and adults and the media. In the meantime, family planning and sex education can play an effective role in making teens more sexually responsible.

Myth 3: "Contraception is the answer to the teen pregnancy problem." Contraception is an important part of teen pregnancy prevention. But alone, it only gives teens the capacity to delay parenthood. Teens also need some reason to believe that parenthood is inappropriate at this time in their lives. They need hope and a sense of positive options.

Myth 4: "There is no longer any reason for girls to avoid getting pregnant, since now they can stay and finish school." The lamentable fact is that they do not. Only 55 percent of the 18 and 19-year olds who gave birth in 1982 had completed high school. Eighty-three percent of the 17-year old mothers were without high school diplomas.

Myth 5: "Most teenage mothers get married right before or after the birth." This is no longer true. In 1982, fully half of all teen births were to single mothers. Few got married shortly after having their babies. The reasons that many young mothers are deciding to forego marriage are complicated. In the Black community especially, teen mothers are not marrying because there are not enough available men and because their children's fathers are unable to support a family—only two Black teenage males in 10 hold a job.

If you recognize any of your own beliefs or those of neighbors and friends among the myths I have just listed, take the time to do some myth-debunking of your own.

And if you want to help us to prevent teen pregnancy, join the Children's Defense Fund's Adolescent Pregnancy Clearinghouse and receive the information we have available. Write Karen Pittman, CDF Clearinghouse, 122 C Street, N.W., Washington, DC 20001.●

THE PHILIPPINES

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I would like to comment on remarks made July 15 on the floor by the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. MELCHER], regarding the current situation in the Philippines. My distinguished colleague made a number of valuable observations on that subject. However, with regard to the specific issue of wheat sales by U.S. suppliers to the Philippines, I would like to make certain there is no misimpression in the minds of the Members of this body that the Department of State is somehow working at cross-purposes to administration policy with regard to the Philippines. I would like to set the record straight today with the following observations.

Mr. President, let me respond first to the claim that the Department of State has sought to promote economic reforms in the Philippines at the expense of U.S. rice and wheat markets in that country. This is a complete misreading of the recent negotiations leading to the conclusion of a Public Law 480 title I agreement with the Philippine Government and incorrectly portrays the current status of U.S. wheat exports to the Philippines. The facts of the case are as follows:

First, the administration, with strong bipartisan support from Congress, has undertaken a substantial program of assistance for the Philippines aimed at promoting fundamental political, economic, and military reforms needed to preserve stability and restore economic health to a key allied nation.

Second, as part of the ongoing dialog with the Philippine Government for reform, the Department of State concluded on July 8 a Public Law 480 title I agreement for $40 million in U.S. rice sales. Under the terms of the self-help measures associated with this agreement, the Philippine private sector is provided the opportunity to engage in the rice and wheat trade along with the Philippine Government's National Food Authority [NFA] which heretofore had enjoyed a total monopoly over such trade.

Third, the reforms launched by the Public Law 480 accord are aimed at expanding the Philippine wheat market by revitalizing the economy and restoring private enterprise participation in the importation and distribution of wheat and flour on a free-market basis. Under the previous situation, the National Food Authority is estimated to have added as much as one-third on to the price the Philippine consumer must pay for bread. Moreover, there is no public accounting or auditing of the profits the monopoly has derived from its control of wheat imports and flour distribution. Additionally, deregulating agricultural production and trade and restricting Government intervention in agriculture also means that the Philippine farmers will get a better price for his production as well.

Trade statistics refute the charge that wheat sales to the Philippines have been harmed or delayed by negotiations for the accord. In the agricultural marketing year which ended May 30, the United States exported 795,000 tons of wheat to the Philippines in 1984-85, compared with 699,000 the previous year. Wheat sales to the Philippines in the first 6 weeks of the present—1985-86—marketing year are recurring at a rate comparable to the previous 2 years.

Fourth, vested Government monopoly interests in the Philippines opposed to reform mounted a major campaign in the United States to force the administration to back down on reform measures. Rice interests in the United States were told that the reform would make a Public Law 480 agreement unacceptable and the United States would lose the rice sales; wheat growers were threatened with the loss of the Philippine market by veiled warnings that the National Food Authority would shift its purchases to other sources in retaliation for the proposed reform—both obviously false in the light of the succeeding events.

Fifth, fortunately, the administration stayed the course and successfully negotiated the Public Law 480 agreement in just over 3 months which is the average length of time necessary to conclude an agreement of this type. The timely conclusion of the agreement was an impressive achievement in the face of the lobbying tactics of vested Government monopoly interests in the Philippines who sought to undermine the U.S. policy for the reform by attempting to delay signing the agreement.

Finally, contrary to the assertion of the vested interests, President Marcos had already given his approval of privatization of wheat imports as well as flour and fertilizer distribution in a reform announcement in April.

In sum, Mr. President, the Public Law 480 agreement signed with the Philippine Government is an encouraging development that effectively serves United States and Philippine interests. It will stimulate the Philippine Government to apply the principles—and successes—of a free market approach to help ensure farmers of a fairer price for their products by deregulating agricultural production and trade and restricting monoply Government intervention in the market to a reduced rule more consistent with the essential public interest. It will also provide new opportunities for U.S. rice and wheat producers to bolster their markets in the Philippines. The Public Law 480 agreement is not only a success for U.S. policy to foster constructive change in the Philippines, it is also a success for U.S. business. Colleagues in this body, particularly those who have been most vocal in urging the administration to press reforms on the Marcos government, should find this development most pleasing and may wish to focus on helping to set the record straight on our goals and objectives regarding the Philippines.●

AMOS DEINARD—A GREAT MAN IN A GREAT PROFESSION

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, recently, I had the privilege of attending the 25th year reunion of my law school class at the University of Minnesota. While I renewed many old acquaintances and saw many longtime friends, I was also reminded of the numerous contributions made by the legal profession in Minnesota which often go unnoticed by the general public.

The contributions of the legal profession in Minnesota, or course, represent the sum total of the thousands of attorneys who practice in the State. One of the best known, and most widely respected Minnesota attorneys—Amos S. Deinard—died on June 12 after practicing law for more than 60 years.

Amos Deinard's many contributions to the legal profession—and to a large number of community and religious activities—were made despite a lifelong visual handicap which might have severely inhibited many of us under similar circumstances.

Among his many interests, Amos Deinard and his firm were strong supporters of efforts to provide legal services to the poor in Minnesota.

Those efforts recently include the presentation of a $1 million check to a coalition of organizations providing legal assistance to the poor in Minnesota raised through a program that diverts interest paid on lawyer trust accounts. These funds are then made available to legal aid, better administration of justice, and law-related educational programs in the State.

Because of the outstanding contributions made over a lifetime of service by Amos S. Deinard, and because of the continuing commitment to the provision of legal services by Minnesota attorneys to make legal services available to all the citizens of the State, I ask that the following two articles be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The articles follow:

A. DEINARD, BLIND LAWYER, DEAD AT 87

(By Wayne Wangstad)

Amos S. Deinard, who overcame a severe vision handicap to become a successful Minneapolis attorney and a community and religious activist, died Wednesday in his home at 510 Groveland Ave., Minneapolis. He was 87.

Deinard practiced law for more than 60 years and was senior partner of the Minneapolis firm Leonard, Street & Deinard.

He also was a founder of the Minnesota Society for the Prevention of Blindness and Preservation of Hearing and had served on its board since 1939.

"He would not want to be remembered as a sightless person. . . . That it didn't hamper him was more to his credit," said Deinard's son, Minneapolis pediatrician Dr. Amos Deinard.

Born in Terre Haute, Ind., Deinard was a toddler when his family moved to Minneapolis, where his father served as rabbi of Temple Israel Synagogue.

Deinard's vision problem was attributed to a childhood eye infection, leaving him able to discern little but light and dark, according to his son. At 13, he learned Braille at the Faribault State School for the Blind.

From that time on, Deinard attended classes with his brother Benedict, who was 18 months younger. "Benedict read to my father. He was really my father's eyes, scholastically and professionally. They went all through high school, college, law school and a doctorate in law at Harvard in 1922 together," Deinard's son said.

After the brothers entered law practice together, Benedict Deinard's reading was supplemented by secretaries and law partners. "And God knows I read contracts at home to him in the evening," Deinard's son said. "He never used Braille for his law practice or law school."

Benedict Deinard died in the 1960s.

Amos Deinard's knowledge and experience "allowed him to be more than just a lawyer to his clients," said George Reilly, managing partner of Leonard Street & Deinard. "He had a marvelous memory and was without peer when it came to drafting documents. We never felt he had any handicap."

Deinard's involvement in community organizations was motivated by "deep concern for the people on whose behalf he was working," his son said.

He was a member of Brandeis University's Board of Fellows, a governor of the Mount Sinai Hospital Association, a board member of the North Central Region of the National Conference of Christians and Jews and a director of the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee.

He also was a founder and board member of the Minneapolis Federation for Jewish Service and a director of the Jewish Family & Children's Service of Minneapolis and the Jewish Community Relations Council of Minnesota. He served on the Minneapolis Fair Employment Practices Commission and was its chairman for several years. From 1969 through 1975, he was a director of the National Society for Prevention of Blindness.

Deinard was awarded the Distinguished Service Award of the Minneapolis Mayor's Commission of Human Relations, and several founders awards, including one from the Minnesota Society for Prevention of Blindness.

"He never talked about his sight and its influence on his life," his son said. "He was always very self-sufficient and liked to conduct himself as though he had sight."

Besides his son, Deinard is survived by his wife, Hortense; a daughter, Miriam Kelen, and six grandchildren.

Services will be at 12:30 p.m. Friday at Temple Israel Synagogue in Minneapolis, with burial in the synagogue cemetery. A one-day shiva will begin at 7 p.m. Saturday at the Deinard residence.

Memorials can be made to the Deinard Memorial Research and Lecture Fund, the University of Minnesota Department of Pediatrics or the Minnesota Society for the Prevention of Blindness and Preservation of Hearing.

CONTINUING A LEGAL-AID TRADITION

(By Leonard Inskip)

The scene could have come from the old TV series "The Millionaire," in which an eccentric philanthropist gave million-dollar checks to deserving strangers. It didn't. This scene involved $1 million, but it took place last week at a special session of the Minnesota Supreme Court.

Allen Saeks handed fellow lawyer Jeremy Lane a notice that a legal-services coalition will get $1 million for legal aid to poor people. Lane represented six legal-aid agencies that blanket Minnesota. Saeks represented a program that diverts interest paid on lawyer trust accounts to legal aid, better justice administration and law-related education.

Seven robed justices attended. Chief Justice Douglas Amdahl cited Minnesota's long tradition of legal assistance to the indigent. The first formal effort, he said, occurred in 1869 when the state created a public-defender program ($10 a day while in court). More than 70 years ago, a legal-aid program began in Minneapolis. In the 1960s and 1970s federal funds made such legal aid possible throughout the state.

Before losing $1.3 million to 1981 federal budget cuts, legal-services agencies in Minnesota handled 33,000 cases a year, Amdahl said. After the cutback, cases fell to 24,000.

Minnesota had two responses. One was a filing-fee surcharge, adopted in 1981, which produces about $1 million yearly for legal aid, and which the Legislature appears ready to continue. The second was collecting the interest paid on lawyers' trust accounts, which receive deposits of clients' money that are too small or too short-term to justify separate accounts in clients' names.

As a committee chairman for the Minnesota State Bar Association, Saeks helped design the interest program. On the bar association's recommendation, the Supreme Court made the program mandatory for Minnesota's 8,400 lawyers in private practice and provided a small staff. Last week, the Lawyer Trust Account Board, composed of lawyers and nonlawyers, with Saeks as chairman, announced $1.4 million in grants for the year beginning July 1.

In addition to the six federally supported agencies which will share $1 million, 21 other groups also received grants. The smallest grant was $1,700 to KUOM for law-related education. A consortium of mediation programs got $35,000 to improve justice administration. The Legal Rights Center, which mainly serves minorities, got $63,000.

The interest program became possible when banks began paying interest on checking accounts. The Federal Reserve System, which does not permit interest for business checking accounts, made an exception for lawyer trust accounts when the interest goes to programs like the one Saeks heads.

Florida, drawing on experience in Canada, was first to adopt an interest program, but only a voluntary one. California followed with a mandatory program, as did Minnesota. Since July 1983, the Minnesota program has collected $2.5 million. Initial awards totalling $335,000 were made in March 1984. A second round last December granted $770,000.

Saeks say 38 states have approved programs, although a smaller number have actually begun them. In terms of lawyer support and participation, as well as funds granted, he says, Minnesota is in the forefront. Financial-institution cooperation has been important, he adds. Amdahl also notes that more than 2,000 Minnesota lawyers volunteer time for legal aid. Overall, Amdahl says, "There's no state that can approach what Minnesota is doing."

It's too soon to evaluate fully the results of individual grants. But Saeks notes that a grant to the Neighborhood Justice Center in St. Paul helped train 40 translators for court cases involving Asian refugees. Another grant led to increased cooperation among three agencies—the attorney general's office, the Minnesota Public Interest Research Group and the St. Paul Tenants Union—and to the production of a booklet on tenant-landlord rights. To win their grant last week, four Minneapolis-area mediation organizations had to collaborate. A grant to the Minnesota Justice Foundation will help law students provide legal research for lawyers working without pay—thereby, Saeks says, "making legal aid to the poor more effective."

Saeks clearly prefers awards to stimulate innovation. But, he says, cutbacks in basic legal services leave the trust board no choice but to offset the cutbacks. He says the legal-aid programs can't handle poor people's needs adequately now; without the trust-account money, the agencies would serve fewer people.

Roger Cobb, administrator of Mid-Minnesota Legal Assistance, an umbrella legal-services agency that includes the Minneapolis Legal Aid Society, says the filing fees, interest income and foundation help have enabled the six legal-services groups to restore their annual caseload to 30,000 or 32,000—nearly what it was before 1981. But, he says, that represents only 20 percent of the estimated legal problems of the poor. The groups' budgets yearly total about $8 million. Each year, President Reagan proposes to eliminate the program, but Congress continues it.

Chief Justice Amdahl says Minnesota's efforts to support legal help for the poor should be continued "not only for the indigent but for ourselves as well." He was referring to lawyers as representatives of society, but also to the kind of humane society Minnesota should be.●

PROPOSED ARMS SALES

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act requires that Congress receive advance notification of proposed arms sales under that act in excess of $50 million or, in the case of major defense equipment as defined in the act, those in excess of $14 million. Upon such notification, the Congress has 30 calendar days during which the sale may be reviewed. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of proposed sales shall be sent to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

In keeping with the committee's intention to see that such information is immediately available to the full Senate, I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point the notification which has been received. The classified annex referred to in the covering letter is available to Senators in the office of the Foreign Relations Committee, room SD-423.

The notification follows:

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, DC, July 26, 1985.
In reply refer to: I-04152/85ct.

Hon. RICHARD C. LUGAR,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to the reporting requirements of Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act, we are forwarding under separate cover Transmittal No. 85-46, concerning the Department of the Navy's proposed Letter of Offer to Japan for defense articles and services estimated to cost $14 million or more. Since most of the essential elements of this proposed sale are to remain classified, we will not notify the news media.

Sincerely,

PHILIP C. GAST,
Director.

TRANSMITTAL NO. 85-46

Notice of Proposed Issuance of Letter of Offer Pursuant to Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act

(i) (U) Prospective purchaser: Japan.
(ii) Total estimated value:

Major defense equipment
Other
Total

(iii) Description of articles or services offered:
(iv) (U) Military department: Navy (SAU Amendment 1).
(v) (U) Sales commission, fee, etc., paid, offered, or agreed to be paid: None.
(vi) (U) Sensitivity of technology contained in the defense articles or defense services proposed to be sold: See Annex under separate cover.
(vii) (U) Section 28 report: Case not included in section 28 report.
(viii) (U) Date report delivered to Congress: July 26, 1985.

POLICY JUSTIFICATION

(U) Japan is one of the major political and economic powers in East Asia and the Western Pacific and a key partner of the United States in ensuring the peace and stability of that region. It is vital to the U.S. national interests to assist Japan in developing and maintaining a strong and ready self-defense capability which will contribute to an acceptable military balance in the area. This sale is consistent with these U.S. objectives and with the 1960 U.S.-Japan Treaty of Mutual Cooperation and Security.

(U) The prime contractor will be the Lockheed California Company of Burbank, California.

(U) Implementation of this sale will not require the assignment of any additional U.S. Government personnel or contractor representatives in Japan.

(U) There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.●

EMERGENCY VETERANS' JOB TRAINING PROGRAM

● Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, yesterday, Senator MURKOWSKI, Senator CRANSTON, and I worked out an agreement to extend the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act through March 1, 1986, and to hold hearings on the EVJTA with the view to considering further authorizations for the act.

Before this agreement was worked out, I was prepared to offer an amendment to the Veterans' Health Care Act today. That amendment was a simple amendment, consisting of three parts.

The first part extends the Emergency Veterans' Training Act of 1983 for 1 more year. The second part allows unemployed veterans to enroll in the program after 5 weeks, instead of the 15 weeks now required. The third part authorizes $75 million to extend the program through fiscal year 1986.

Each of these provisions was passed in substantially similar form by the House on May 20 without opposition.

Two years ago, when Congress enacted this legislation, it made a commitment of $300 million to make this program a reality. There were delays in implementing the program—only $150 million was ever appropriated for the program—more than 30,000 veterans were placed in the program—but hundreds of thousands more enrolled and never found jobs even with the program.

Mr. President, the House recognized that Congress made a commitment to our unemployed veterans to provide this help. Because the program was delayed in implementation and the full funds were never appropriated, that commitment cannot be fulfilled without the extension of the program for another year.

My office has received a number of calls from all over the country over the past 2 weeks about this program—calls from Albuquerque, NM, as well as from Boston, MA, from field workers who know what the program can mean to unemployed veterans, asking if there was anything they could do to let the people in Washington know that the program was working, that it was making a difference.

The Nation's veterans, and particular the veterans of the Vietnam era, sacrificed much for this country. This program is a small program in cost, but it has made a difference. Today, with new evidence of the fact that Vietnam veterans are still suffering from the effects of their service, we must not fall back from our commitment to them.

Just last week, the American Legion revealed the initial results of a just-completed study of Vietnam veterans which revealed that those who experienced intense combat continue to pay a price for their service—literally.

The results, announced July 23, showed that veterans with intense combat experience annually earn $3,000 to $4,000 less than their comrades who served at the same time, but not in Southeast Asia.

The general happiness and marriages of these heavy combat veterans were also significantly lower than for other veterans. As the scientists who conducted the study determined, there is a "clear and consistent adverse social effect of exposure to combat. Specifically, we find that as the mean level of traumatic combat experiences rises, so does the divorce rate. Conversely, annual family income declines as do the reported levels of general happiness."

As the scientists said:

> These men appear to be literally paying a financial cost, as well as emotional cost, for their combat experiences. . . . This information is a confirmation both of the stressful effects of the combat experience and of the particular effect it had on the men who were born in the period of 1944-1949. These men clearly bore the brunt of the war and its aftermath.

This problem is clearly recognized by veterans' organizations and veterans' service professionals, who feel that the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act is an appropriate mechanism for responding to it. The act subsidizes job training programs for unemployed veterans. That subsidy helps put those veterans in the position to find jobs and develop skills enabling them to retain them.

Mr. President, I want to draw your attention to a second study, released last August by the California Employment Development Department, which studied veterans' employment and training, and found that many Vietnam veterans have experienced prolonged periods of unemployment and have not been able to pursue their career goals.

Other findings are that Vietnam veterans have a taxable family income that is 40-percent lower than other veterans who served in the Vietnam era, and that three quarters of those surveyed desired to participate in programs that would upgrade their skills.

The study therefore concluded that Congress should extend the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act for an additional 3 years, through 1988, warning that unless extended the program would "terminate before a majority of veterans ideally suited for EVJTA job openings will be ready to participate."

The Vietnam Veterans of America has taken a strong stand in support of extending this program for this very reason. And I would like to quote from a letter they sent to me explaining why it is so important that this program continue:

In the present budget climate, the VVA letter states, "smaller initiatives such as EVJTA often become lost in the shuffle. As you are well aware, unemployment among Vietnam veterans has not really abated in fifteen years. On any given day during the last decade and a half, nearly half a million such veterans have been jobless. In addition, there have been at least four occasions during the same period in which unemployment for the group has reached alarming proportions. If there were no underlying structural problem, then these cyclical rises should not be recurring. It is certain true that they recur amongst the general population. Since there is a close correlation between age and unemployment, one would expect that the problem would have vanished by now, with most Vietnam veterans approaching middle age. The fact is, the problem has not gone away as it did with World War II and Korean veterans. If we are ever to come to terms with unemployment among Vietnam veterans, we must tailor our remedies to address structural job problems. VVA believes that EVJTA does just that."

The VVA letter then discusses the budgetary implications of the program, pointing out that each time a veteran is hired under EVJTA, he or she becomes a taxpayer. A veteran entering a $16,000 per year job will pay at least $1,600 in Federal taxes during the first year. Since the cost of the program for that veteran would be approximately $4,000, this means that 40 percent of the cost of the training is returned to the Federal Treasury during the first year of employment alone.

This offset does not include the other budgetary and economic considerations involved—from unemployment insurance to food stamps and AFDC and other costs which are eliminated when you put a veteran back to work.

And we should also recognize the long-term economic benefit to this country occasioned by offering training to veterans that provides them with skills that keep them employed.

As the American Legion has concluded the EVJTA "continues to be working successfully to assist unemployed veterans in job training programs offering the acquisition of meaningful skills leading to moderate income employment."

In the view of the American Legion, "this important program deserves to be allowed to continue assisting veterans in need of the kind of training that leads to lasting employment."

The Legion points out that the Emergency Veterans Job Training Program is not a public sector, makework kind of program, but a program that has relied upon a partnership between the public and private sectors.

Unlike so many other job training programs . . . this program relies on the private sector to create both the training programs and the jobs for which veterans may apply. On balance, the cost of many of those failed [public sector] programs has never been recouped by the government in the form of revenues received by permanently employed individuals. On the other hand, this program was designed to do just that and in the absence of any evidence to suggest it is failing to make taxpayers out of unemployed veterans, this program is justified as a fiscally prudent investment.

As a distinguished leader of this body has said:

We find ourselves perhaps differing on the Vietnam War itself . . . We find ourselves in total agreement on adequate treatment of veterans who returned from Vietnam whether they be handicapped or not.

If they honorably served their country, then I think our commitment should be clear . . . If it costs extra money, it costs extra money. If we have to appropriate more money, we have to appropriate more money, but I believe in the long run that is a net gain for the government of the United States.

I ask that the letter from the American Legion and the letter from the Vietnam Veterans of America be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. President, I am not offering this amendment today because I believe that the extension of the program until March, even without new authority, is a reasonable compromise position so long as hearings take place very soon on the EVJTA.

Senator MURKOWSKI and Senator CRANSTON have agreed to schedule such hearings as soon as possible after the August recess in September. At that time, I anticipate that representatives of veterans organizations and specialists on the problem of Vietnam veteran unemployment will testify to the need for EVJTA, and for possible modifications of the program, such as the job bank proposed in my bill.

Following that testimony, it is my hope that the Veterans Committee will decide to recommend the authorization of further money for this program, in an amount of at least $75 million for fiscal year 1986.

The letters referred to follows:

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
Washington, DC, July 24, 1985.

Hon. JOHN F. KERRY,
U.S. Senate,
Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KERRY: The American Legion applauds your efforts to offer an amendment to S. 876 for the purpose of extending the Emergency Veterans Job Training Program. Even though this modest program was originally tailored to address the emergency needs of veterans displaced by this nation's most recent deep recession, it continues to be working successfully to assist unemployed veterans in job training programs offering the acquisition of meaningful skills leading to moderate income employment. In our view, this important program deserves to be allowed to continue assisting veterans in need of the kind of training that leads to lasting employment.

In that regard, The American Legion in conjunction with Columbia University have just released the first findings of a major study being undertaken to asess the special problems of Vietnam veterans. The finding released to the public on July 23, 1985 strongly suggest that Vietnam combat veterans are still in need of readjustment assistance. For example, these combat veterans are economically poorer, less adjusted from service, more suspicious of the VA and have greater divorce rates than similarly aged and similarly trained or educated noncombat veterans. While continuing the Emergency Veterans Jobs Training Program cannot be considered a panacea guaranteeing a total solution to the problems of Vietnam era veterans, it must be understood as still needed in the interest of providing many of these veterans with the personal and economic stability that solid employment provides.

In conclusion, one final aspect of this program should be clearly recognized as a contributor to its overall success. Unlike so many other job training programs having used the public sector in the past as the supplier of training and jobs, this program relies on the private sector to create both the training programs and the jobs for which veterans may apply. On balance, the cost of many of those failed programs has never been recouped by the government in the form of revenues received by permanently employed individuals. On the other hand, this program was designed to do just that and in the absence of any evidence to suggest it is failing to make taxpayers out of unemployed veterans, this program is justified as a fiscally prudent investment.

As always your attention to the views of The American Legion is appreciated.

Sincerely,

E. PHILIP RIGGIN,
Director.

VIETNAM VETERANS OF AMERICA, INC.,
Washington, DC, July 29, 1985.

Hon. JOHN F. KERRY,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KERRY: On behalf of Vietnam Veterans of America, I want to express our deep appreciation and strong support for your efforts to extend the Emergency Veterans Job Training Act (EVJTA). In the present budget climate, where decisions are being made about billion dollar programs, smaller initiatives such as EVJTA often become lost in the shuffle. As a Vietnam veteran, you are well aware of how central the issue of employment is to a readjustment process that has already taken far too long for many of the men and women who served in our nation's longest war. Your leadership in familiarizing your colleagues with this problem, as well as with the program designed to remedy it, comes at a critical hour.

As you are well aware, unemployment among Vietnam veterans has not really abated in fifteen years. On any given day during the last decade and a half, nearly half a million such veterans have been jobless. In addition, there have been at least four occasions during the same period in which unemployment for the group has reached alarming proportions. If there were no underlying structural problem, then these cyclical rises should not be recurring. It is certainly true that they recur amonst the general population. The Vietnam veteran group, however, is an aging population. Since there is a close correlation between age and unemployment, one would expect that the problem would have vanished by now, with most Vietnam veterans approaching middle age. The fact is, the problem has not gone away as it did with World War II and Korean veterans. If we are ever to come to terms with unemployment among Vietnam veterans, we must tailor our remedies to address structural job problems. VVA believes that EVJTA does just that.

VVA recognizes that hard choices need to be made to reduce the budget deficit. We believe, however, that EVJTA is just as vital to the interests of Vietnam veterans as many as the programs that the Senate has chosen to sustain are to our fellow citizens. Fortunately, the cost of the progrm is relatively small. We believe the program not only assists the veteran but also ultimately benefits the taxpayers of the United States in two ways. First, over the short term, EVJTA immediately makes the veteran a taxpayer, since he or she is employed during the training period. A veteran entering a $16,000 per year job will pay at least $1,600 in federal taxes during the first year. Since the cost of the program for that veteran will be approximately $4,000, this means that 40% percent of the cost of training is returned to the Federal Treasury during the first year of employment alone. This offset does not include other considerations such as unemployment insurance, AFDC, food stamps and other costs in taxpayer dollars which are obviated by the veteran's employment. Second, there is a long term benefit to taxpayers in this program. Many Vietnam veterans have suffered recurrent periods of unemployment which are directly attributable to lack of skills, and consequent vulnerability to being last hired and first fired. Skill training under EVJTA should go a long way toward assuring that the cycle of employment and unemployment is finally ended for veterans trained under this program.

For Vietnam Veterans of America, the extension and health of the Emergency Veterans Job Training Act is a top legislative priority. We are gratified by our work on the program. We are confident that a majority of the members of the Senate will recognize, through your work, how important this modest program is to our Nation's ultimate economic health.

Sincerely,

DENNIS K. RHOADES,
Executive Director.●

CALL TO CONSCIENCE ON SOVIET JEWRY

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, as part of the 1985 Congressional Call to Conscience, I should like to draw my colleagues' attention to the plight of Abe Stolar and his family in the Soviet Union.

Mr. Stolar's story is an uncommon one. An American citizen, he has lived in the Soviet Union since 1931, when he was brought there by his parents at the age of 19. After building a life there, in 1975 he applied and received permission for himself, his Russian-born wife, and his son to emigrate to Israel. Their exit visas were rescinded after they had boarded a plane for departure, and they were removed from the plane. For the last 10 years, they have done everything in their power to obtain exit visas.

I had the good fortune to spend some time with Mr. Stolar during one of my recent trips to the Soviet Union. In fact, we spent an evening together with Andrei Sakharov and other refuseniks—with Abe Stolar acting as my interpreter. His family's situation has since become desperate.

Two and a half years ago, Mr. Stolar's son Michael married a Russian woman, Julia. Although the marriage was performed by a rabbi, the marriage bureau has refused to recognize its validity, ostensibly because the family had given up its Soviet citizenship in exchange for their illusory exit visas 7 years earlier. Those exit visas registered them "stateless," and for all practical purposes, that is what they are. Their American citizenship is ignored, but they are without the documents needed to participate as ordinary citizens in Soviet society; they live in that twilight zone so familiar to other refuseniks.

Earlier this year, the Soviet emigration agency, OVIR, granted exit visas to Mr. Stolar, his wife, and his son. But the agency has refused to grant an exit visa to Michael's wife, Julia. A stalemate has ensued. The Stolars refuse to leave unless Julia is allowed to accompany them, and the Soviets have repeatedly refused to permit Michael Stolar's wife to leave with him.

Mr. President, I know that all Members of the Senate share my concern over the tragic choice the Stolars refuse to make, and would join me in urging the authorities in the Soviet Union to allow all the members of the Stolar family to emigrate to Israel.●

BORG-WARNER AUTOMOTIVE TRANSMISSION SYSTEM OF MUNCIE, IN

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, today, I would like to honor the Borg-Warner Automotive Transmission System of Muncie, IN, as my selection to receive the U.S. Senate Productivity Award. In 1984, I established a special committee of 11 Indiana executives to seek out nominees for the Productivity Award for Indiana. This year, there were 18 entries received by the committee which nominated three companies to undergo the final selection process which I personally steered. The committee visited each of these three companies and made recommendations based on the nomination and company visit.

Borg-Warner-ATS displayed an impressive set of credentials; it was practically devastated by the recession, and staged a somewhat remarkable recovery restoring the firm's profitability. It implemented innovations which led to over a 100-percent in sales from 1982 to 1984. Even more impressive, over 80 percent of this company's sales consist of products developed and launched in the last 4 years. They have overcome a stifling series of labor disputes and poor labor relations to establish a very constructive and profitable environment. These favorable income statements indeed reflect this profitable environment as the company has devised a new profitsharing program that will bear fruit for its employees in the very near future.

Not only is the Borg-Warner Automotive Transmission System now enjoying the fruits of its labor, it is also taking steps to secure its future profitability. It has recently initiated a new employee training program that has shown a net increase in productivity, proving its efficiency. Its safety incident rate is only half those of comparable firms in the industry.

With all of these facts in mind, I would again like to give the highest praise to the Borg-Warner Automotive Transmission System and commend its efforts to increase its productivity as well as take a critical role in enhancing the Indiana and United States economies.

Mr. President, I ask that the editorial in the Muncie Star on Sunday, March 4, 1984, regarding Borg-Warner Automotive Transmission System be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

[From the Muncie (IN) Star, Mar. 4, 1984]

WARNER GEAR'S SUCCESS

It would be hard to find a more important day in Warner Gear's history than Sunday, March 4, 1984.

For today marks the culmination of a program unique in the annals of labor-management relations in Muncie—a day set aside to salute a profit sharing program that has enriched not only Warner Gear employees but the entie Muncie community.

This afternoon in Ball State's University Gym more than $5 million will be distributed as a result of the company's profit sharing program. Employees are receiving $1.01 of profit sharing for each hour they worked in 1983. There are 2,761 employees receiving the dividends. As an example of what they might expect a person who worked 40 hours a week for 52 weeks would receive $2,100.

Last year, Warner Gear became the first Borg-Warner company to institute profit sharing, although others have since adopted similar programs.

The success of the program extends far beyond the monetary sense. Charles Michael, president of United Auto Workers Local 287 at the local plant, decribes it this way:

"I think it's very good for all employees. The workers feel like it's fair, and we get a fair share of the profits."

Michael points out that the plant has recovered from two horrendous years in 1981 and '82. "To get into this much profit is quite amazing," he says. "A lot of people never thought it would happen, but it did."

"Our people wouldn't have gotten the money if we hadn't improved our product and quality," he says.

Kenneth Thorpe, Warner Gear vice president and general manager, also appreciates quality and knows that the profit sharing results would have been impossible without an improvement in all aspects of the plant's operation.

"Quality involves everybody," Thorpe says, "When people are involved, you get increases in production."

Dean Boyle. Warner Gear's vice president for human resources has called the profit sharing plan "the most important people-oriented event in the history of the company which dates to the earlier 1900s.

Boyle says the quality of work life programs begun in 1980 "on a handshake" between management and union officials are responsible in great measure for the company's recent success. The programs involve employees at every level in decisions about their work and work places and allows each person to develop to the fullest extent.

Finally, the Warner Gear success story is having a most postitive impact on the local community. Employment at the plant is aproximately 2,700, up significantly from the early 1983 figure of 1,850. And the dollars generated by the profit sharing plan benefit the local community many times over in terms of their purchasing power and investment potential.

It is for these reasons that The Star is pleased to salute Warner Gear for being a consistently good neighbor in the community and establishing itself as a business of excellence.●

CORPORATE AVERAGE FUEL ECONOMY STANDARDS

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, may I say a few words about the Senate's vote yesterday on Senator EVANS' amendment (No. 552) to the Conservation Service Reform Act of 1985. This amendment expressed the sense of this body that the Administrator of the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration [NHTSA] should maintain the corporate average fuel economy standard [CAFE] for passenger automobiles.

The Senate voted to table that amendment, and, in my view, erred in so doing.

Ten years ago, Congress approved the Energy Policy and Conservation Act to encourage energy conservation, by requiring U.S. automakers to develop more fuel-efficient cars. That statute established requirements for minimum average fuel economy standards for the fleets of cars produced by U.S. firms, to be phased in gradually. In 1985, the CAFE standard is to reach 27.5 miles per gallon.

Now the Environmental Protection Agency and the Department of Transportation have decided to grant the General Motors Corp. and the Ford Motor Co. extra credits for fuel economy performance over the past 5 years. These credits are designed to enable companies to meet the 1985 CAFE standard.

NHTSA also has proposed a rule that if finalized, would lower the congressionally set fuel economy standards from 27.5 to 26 miles per gallon. The public comment period for this rule ends on August 21, and I could think of no better comment in opposition than Senator EVANS' amendment.

I oppose these actions. Conservation of natural resources, particularly oil and gas, is vital to our very economic survival. Although oil imports have recently been decreasing, we ought not relax our efforts to conserve.●

TOBACCO PRICE SUPPORTS

● Mr. GORE. Mr. President, there has been a great deal of discussion in Congress and the news media concerning the future of the tobacco price support program. I have introduced legislation, S. 1205, to provide a mechanism for reforming the tobacco program and disposing of existing surplus tobacco in a fair and fiscally responsible manner. S. 1205 would earmark revenue from the Federal excise tax on cigarettes to compensate for the enormous loss facing the Government. Recently, the Ways and Means Committee in the House of Representatives agreed to this proposal.

S. 1205 is not a sellout to the tobacco companies. Rather, it is a compromise measure that helps individuals who need to be helped, the small tobacco growers in Tennessee and other States. This bill will preserve the tobacco program in a form beneficial to growers, without leaving them at the mercy of large manufacturers, and in a way that will not burden the general taxpayer.

I commend to the attention of my colleagues an excellent editorial on this issue which appeared in the Knoxville Journal on July 29. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

TAX SMOKERS, NOT GROWERS

The federal government's tobacco support program, the taxes tobacco generates and health issues attendant to tobacco use are sure to provoke arguments whether they are brought up across the nation's farm fences, on courthouse benches and coffee counter stools or in the halls of Congress.

They are resounding in congressional committee rooms right now, and there will be no settlement of any of the questions that pleases everyone.

But the House Ways & Means Committee has advanced one suggestion that is hard to assail. In recommending retention of the cigarette tax of 16 cents per pack—raised from eight cents in 1982, but scheduled to go back to that level in September—the committee earmarked a penny a pack for defraying the federal governments costs in storing surplus tobacco.

That 16-cent a pack cigarette tax should be retained or even raised rather than be allowed to fall. And at least a penny, perhaps two, should go to the federal price support program. Tobacco farmers are currently assessed for storage costs, but the assessments have fallen short as huge surpluses have amassed. The farmers are threatened with another large increase in assessments this fall. And those billings are the result of the failure of federal efforts, which hold prices up and allot tobacco acreages, to keep in some semblance of line with the market.

Farmers shouldn't have to pay the price for the program's absurdities. They are correct in calling attention to the fact that $9 billion in federal revenues from taxes on tobacco products gives the general taxpaying public a return that far exceeds any subsidy costs. If a smokers' tax can be used to take the whole load directly from the rest of the public, it should be instituted.●

PEANUT PRICE SUPPORTS

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, an excellent article in the Wall Street Journal reveals that the present peanut price support system is indeed a feudal program. It benefits a very restricted class of landowners who have inherited or purchased the right to sell peanuts to his fellow U.S. citizens. Unless you are 1 of 55,632 individuals and corporations that have been blessed with a Government-controlled poundage quota, you are prohibited from selling peanuts in the United States, Canada, and Mexico.

Most owners of this privilege are not active in peanut farming and are unfamiliar with the daily perils of growing peanuts; 50 percent of the peanut farmers in this country must rent the right to sell peanuts in the United States from their more fortunate neighbors. Rental values account for over 25 percent of the total cost of producing peanuts.

While this scheme of marketing rights is particularly unfair to new and less fortunate growers, another protective layer of the program provides some restitution for them as well. The support level for peanuts continues to be dictated by a cost of production formula that includes quota rental values. Each time the quota rents increase, the price support levels are adjusted accordingly. As the quota price support level rises, the value of the quota increases—thus creating an inflationary spiral that thwarts all hope of market expansion.

The bottom line is simply that consumers are ultimately responsible for paying the enormous costs associated with the Peanut Price Support Program. Defenders of the status quo assert that it is a model farm program because it has operated without much cost to the U.S. Treasury. The tremendous cost of the peanut program, however, has been charged directly to the consumer. The U.S. Department of Agriculture estimates that it adds an additional 13.5 percent to the cost of a jar of peanut butter. I continue to reject the rationale of transferring these enormous costs to all U.S. consumers, regardless of their level of income, while we are selling peanuts far more cheaply to consumers in other nations.

I will offer an amendment to the 1985 farm bill to reform this feudal program by phasing out the quota system over a 4-year period. Peanut farmers and U.S. consumers have suffered with this program long enough and reform simply cannot be delayed another 4 years.

I ask that the text of this article be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, July 29, 1985]

WE SHELL OUT A PECK FOR THIS NUTTY PROGRAM

(By James Bovard)

Amazingly, consumers may soon get a break on the 1985 farm bill. When the Senate considers the agricultural bill this week, Sen. Richard Lugar (R., Ind.) intends to offer an amendment to terminate the current peanut program. If Sen. Lugar's amendment passes, the farm lobby's phalanx will be broken, and other farm programs might be defeated.

Sen. Lugar is targeting perhaps the most obnoxious farm program around. It slashes productivity, boosts costs, inflates prices, and sacrifices some farmers to other farmers. If consumers are ever to make a stand in the farm bill fight, the peanut program is a good place to begin.

Farmers cannot grow peanuts for their fellow citizens without a federal license. Thirty-six years ago, to reduce budget outlays under a generous price-support program, Congress closed off the peanut industry, distributing licenses to grow peanuts to existing farmers and prohibiting anyone else from entering the business. Feudalism still reigns, and the farmer who violates the peanut proscription is subject to heavy fines and ensnarement in the Agriculture Department bureaucracy.

The peanut program is particularly perverse because Congress has piled on one restriction after another over the years. In 1977, Congress, in an attempt to reduce budget outlays caused by peanut surpluses, began restricting the amount of peanuts to be sold in the U.S. The domestic peanut supply has been nearly halved since 1975. This has created an artificial shortage and shifted the cost of the peanut program from the government to consumers.

The peanut program is replete with the usual ag policy flim-flams. By law, peanut support prices must be based on cost of production (COP). The Agriculture Department gets this "fair price" by averaging costs of the most productive and least competent farmers. The implicit premise is that no matter how badly a farmer bungles his business, he is entitled to be reimbursed (in part) for his efforts.

In 1980, peanuts were hit by drought, which sharply reduced yields and thereby temporarily boosted per-pound production costs. Congress based its 1981 COP calculation on the 1980 drought year—which conveniently justified a 21% hike in price supports, from $440 to $555 a ton.

The COP figure is also a joke because the peanut program itself adds as much as 50% to a farmer's cost of production. Approximately half of all growers rent licenses to grow (called quota allotments) from outsiders, paying a tribute of up to $120 a ton for the right to grow goobers. The cost of renting allotments is added to the COP formula, which results in higher price support, which drives up the rents for the privilege to grow peanuts, which results in higher COP . . . ad infinitum.

The quota system is also responsible for exhausting the soil and driving down peanut yields in many places. Quota allotments cannot be rented outside of the county they were originally allocated to in 1949. Peanut yields in parts of Texas have long been declining. While many acres with yields below 1,000 pounds have quotas, over a million acres with potential yields of 2,500 pounds or more are banned from producing for the domestic market.

The one good thing about the peanut program is also the element that proves that the whole shebang is unnecessary. As of 1981, any farmer could grow peanuts for export (called Additional Peanuts)—but with no real price guarantees from Uncle Sam. Peanut export sales are now far above mid-1970s levels. Georgia farmers are growing peanuts for export at $325 a ton—at the same time that Congress insists on paying farmers $555 a ton to produce for domestic consumption. Foreigners can buy U.S. peanuts much more cheaply than Americans can.

Though it is good that more farmers have finally been allowed to grow peanuts, the two-tier system sacrifices the new-comers to the old guard. By strictly limiting the domestic quota, the Agriculture Department reduces U.S. peanut consumption and there-by dumps a few hundred million tons of extra peanuts on the world market. This depresses prices received by American farmers growing peanuts for export.

The two-tier system is absurd. Peanut butter made from quota peanuts can be exported to Canada and Mexico, but peanut butter made from additional peanuts cannot. (The Agriculture Department fears the cheaper peanut butter made from additional peanuts could be reimported.) The additional peanuts themselves can be exported to Canada, and American peanut butter manufacturers are paranoid that Canadian companies may be using cheap peanuts to make peanut butter and then sending it back across the border.

Congress gives peanut growers a far better deal than other farmers receive. An American Peanut Product Manufacturers Institute study estimated that peanut price supports "have been set 80% above USDA-defined production costs . . . when land costs are excluded, and 60% above when the inflated costs of land are included." The Institute differs with the Agriculture Department's method of calculating peanut production costs. APPMI estimates that net returns to peanut farmers are four to 10 times higher than returns from competing crops.

Consumers are, as usual, the victims of this farm program. The Agriculture Department estimates that the peanut program boosts peanut butter prices 13.5%. Public Voice for Food and Health Policy, a Washington consumer group, estimates that the peanut program mulcts consumers for $250 million to $300 million a year.

There is hope for reform. The peanut program was almost knocked off in 1981. That year, Rep. Stan Lundine (D., N.Y.) proposed terminating the program, and the House approved 250–159. Sen. Lugar proposed phasing it out, and the Senate initially approved, 56–42. (The Senate later reversed itself, 51–47, and Rep. Lundine's bill vanished in conference.) Now both Rep. Lundine and Sen. Lugar will try again. APPMI, other peanut-product manufacturers, and Public Voice are vigorously lobbying to persuade Congress to end the goober madness. The peanut program's opposition is stronger and better organized this year and appears to have a good chance of success. And if the peanut program can be knocked down, a domino effect could occur with the rapid demise of the honey, wool and sugar programs.

The peanut program artfully combines the worst traits of feudalism and central economic planning. Congress has a chance to end this program that makes a mockery of efficiency, fairness and property rights.●

SECTION 226 OF S. 410

● Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to express my understanding of one provision in the new section 226, which S. 410 would add to the National Energy Conservation Policy Act. Basically, section 226 sets up a system by which the Secretary of Energy can authorize a utility to undertake an Alternative Residential Energy Conservation Program if the program will result in equal or greater energy savings than that provided by a standard utility program. I think this is a good provision and will add a valuable flexibility to NECPA.

Among the prerequisites to the Secretary's authorizing an alternative utility program under the new section 226 is that certain State officials, including the Governor, must make certain findings, take certain actions, and conduct certain State proceedings. I understand that this provision is not intended to change the role of the Tennessee Valley Authority with respect to its cooperative and municipal distributors under NECPA.

TVA was one of the earliest supporters of NECPA, having begun its own residential conservation program before NECPA was even introduced in Congress. Under the NECPA System enacted in 1978, TVA is treated as a "State" with respect to its distributors and it is defined as a "State regulatory authority." It is also treated as a "Governor" and "State agency" for the purposes of section 212, and it submits its own "State plan" to DOE with respect to its distributors. I understand that TVA would continue this same role under section 226 by acting as the "Governor" and the "appropriate State officials" for the purpose of carrying out that section.

The TVA power system is a unified system with distributors in seven different States. It is appropriate that it continue its same role it has served under NECPA for the last 7 years and function as the "Governor" and "appropriate State official" under section 226 with respect to its distributors.●

ORDERS FOR WEDNESDAY

RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until the hour of 10 a.m. on Wednesday, July 31, 1985.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF CERTAIN SENATORS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, there be special orders in favor of the following Senators for not to exceed 15 minutes each: Senators PROXMIRE, KERRY, and HEINZ.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following the special orders, there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 11 a.m., with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, following the conclusion of routine morning business, it is the intention of the majority leader to turn to the conference report to accompany supplemental appropriations as well as any other legislative or executive calendar items which have been cleared for action.

I would guess there would be rollcall votes throughout Wednesday's session, and it may be the first thing that will be called up tomorrow is S. 63, In-Flight Medical Emergencies Act. I understand it is rather important legislation. We hope that if someone has a real problem with it, they can be in touch with staff on either side. It was near resolution at one point, but apparently some problem has developed. I am not certain where it is. If we can clear that for action tomorrow morning, we will call it up. So that might be the first legislative item tomorrow.

There are others that we will continue to work on tomorrow, the Mentally Ill Persons Act of 1985, S. 974; teaching hospitals, S. 1210; the International Air Transportation Protection Act, S. 1218. I understand there may be some difficulty with that, but the other two should be cleared. Then the energy and water appropriations bill and legislative appropriations bill. The budget resolution will not be around tomorrow. Compact of Free Association I am advised is now in some difficulty because of a difference of opinion within the administration; different agencies have different views on what should happen, and I am advised by Senator MCCLURE, chairman of the committee, that we probably will not be able to take that up at this time.

The Japan trade bill has been objected to. South African conference report, the conferees meet tomorrow and I hope they can reach an agreement. We might be able to dispose of that. The Genocide Treaty, only if we can do it rather quickly.

RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, there being no further business to come before the Senate, I move the Senate now stand in recess until 10 a.m. Wednesday, July 31.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, at 7:32 p.m., recessed until Wednesday, July 31, 1985, at 10 a.m.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate July 30, 1985:

Postal Rate Commission

Patti Birge Tyson, of Texas, to be a commissioner of the Postal Rate Commission for the term expiring November 22, 1990.

Environmental Protection Agency

J. Winston Porter, of Virginia, to be Assistant Administrator, Office of Solid Waste, of the Environmental Protection Agency.

The above nominations were approved subject to the nominees' commitment to respond to requests to appear and testify before any duly constituted committee of the Senate.

The Judiciary

Curtis E. von Kann, of the District of Columbia, to be an associate judge of the Superior Court of the District of Columbia for a term of 15 years.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Tuesday, July 30, 1985

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Reverend Kermit Johnson, former Chief of Chaplains, U.S. Army, Washington, DC, offered the following prayer:

Gracious God, whose strong presence is with us, strengthen us for the work of this day.

God of Justice, who puts down the mighty and exalts the lowly, help us to actively respond to Your voice in the voiceless who cry out for justice.

God of Hope, heal our cynicism. May we not support what we condemn and may we support even imperfect instruments for human hope.

God of Peace, in whose outstretched arms we all find welcome, may we not fear to reach across barriers of distrust.

God of Grace, who has specially blessed our land, may we both conserve and share Your gifts.

So, may we do justice, and love mercy, and walk humbly with You, our God, our Strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1128) "An act to amend the Clean Water Act, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. SIMPSON, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. BENTSEN, Mr. MITCHELL, and Mr. MOYNIHAN to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1078. An act to amend the Federal Trade Commission Act to provide authorization of appropriations, and for other purposes; and

S.J. Res. 180. Joint resolution commemorating the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Private Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first individual bill on the Private Calendar.

CERTAIN FORMER FLIGHT ENGINEERS OF WESTERN AIRLINES

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 484) for the relief of certain former flight engineers of Western Airlines.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

MEALS ON WHEELS OF THE MONTEREY PENINSULA, INC.

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 1095) for the relief of Meals on Wheels of the Monterey Peninsula, Inc.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H.R. 1095

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Meals on Wheels of the Monterey Peninsula, Incorporated, and any individual who performed service in its employ after 1975 and before 1983 are relieved of all liability to the United States for the payment of unpaid taxes imposed by chapter 21 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (and any interest or penalty assessed or accrued on such taxes) with respect to service performed in the employ of Meals on Wheels of the Monterey Peninsula, Incorporated, during such period.

SEC. 2. For purposes of title II of the Social Security Act, service performed in the employ of Meals on Wheels of Monterey Peninsula, Incorporated, after 1975 and before 1983 shall be treated (for purposes of benefits for months beginning after the month in which this Act is enacted) as employment, if and to the extent that a detailed record of such service is transmitted to the Secretary of Health and Human Services within twelve months after the date of enactment of this Act.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. PANETTA

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PANETTA: Page 1, strike out lines 3 through 11 and insert in lieu thereof the following (and redesignate section 2 as section 3):

That, except as provided in section 2, Meals on Wheels of the Monterey Peninsula, Incorporated (hereinafter referred to as "Meals on Wheels"), and any individual who performed service in its employ after 1975 and before 1983 are relieved of all liability to the United States for the payment of any interest or penalty assessed or accrued on unpaid taxes imposed by chapter 21 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 with respect to service performed in the employ of Meals on Wheels during such period.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury shall take no action before the end of the 90-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act with respect to the collection of any unpaid taxes imposed by chapter 21 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 for which Meals on Wheels and any individual who performed service in its employ after 1975 and before 1983 are liable with respect to service performed in the employ of Meals on Wheels during such period. Section 1 shall not apply for purposes of relieving Meals on Wheels of any liability arising after the end of such 90-day period for the payment of any interest or penalty on any amount of such taxes which remain unpaid after the end of such 90-day period.

Mr. PANETTA (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. This concludes the call of the Private Calendar.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 2068, DEPARTMENT OF STATE, U.S. INFORMATION AGENCY, AND BOARD FOR INTERNATIONAL BROADCASTING AUTHORIZATIONS FOR FISCAL YEARS 1986 AND 1987

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Affairs may have until midnight tonight to file the conference report on the bill (H.R. 2068) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for the Department of State, the U.S. Information Agency, the Board for International Broadcasting, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. BARTLETT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would inquire of the gentleman, under my reservation, has that been cleared with this side?

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. FASCELL. Yes, it has. The ranking member, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD], is right here.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

LAST MONTH'S TRADE DEFICIT A RECORD-BREAKER

(Ms. KAPTUR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, it's official! The Commerce Department announced today that last month's trade deficit was a record-breaker again, tipping the scales at $13.4 billion more imports coming onto our shores than exports going out, again the loss of thousands more jobs in America. Not only must we reassess this trade gap and its relation to jobs but also in the context of our solemn oath to provide for the common defense.

When the Revolutionary War broke out two centuries ago, our Continental Army found itself desperately in need of military equipment and clothing. The scene of soldiers with rags for boots at Valley Forge still stirs the hearts of all Americans. We were a group of colonies, dependent on another country for our manufactured goods. Now, when I look out and see that 77 percent of all footwear in this country is imported, I wonder just what country American soldiers of the future will have to rely on? And how about for uniforms and parachutes, with what's happening in our textile industry?

What kind of strategic situation are we in when we import 77 percent of our footwear, 95 percent of our motorcycles, 40 percent of our machine tools, 30 percent of motor oil fuel, and when we've given up most of the shipbuilding capacity in America and have lost our steel and metals development capacity to other nations? The accelerating decline of our manufacturing base is really a matter of national security. But, how can we expect progress on these fronts when we have a Pentagon that spends tens of thousands of dollars each year giving away watches made in Hong Kong and hats made in Taiwan to recruit the GI's of tomorrow?

SOVIET'S CALL FOR A 5-MONTH FREEZE ON NUCLEAR TESTING ANOTHER EXERCISE IN SOVIET DISHONESTY

(Mr. BROOMFIELD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the new Soviet leadership's call for a 5-month freeze on nuclear testing smells like leftover borscht.

Coming just a week after the Soviet's set off three nuclear explosions, it makes you wonder if there really is anything new in Moscow other than the smiling face of Gorbachev.

Ironically, it comes as the world observes the 10th anniversary of another exercise in Soviet dishonesty—the signing of the Helsinki accords designed to promote human rights in the Soviet bloc nations.

Ten years later, Soviet prisons and labor camps are full; emigration has slowed to a trickle; and names such as Sakharov and Shcharansky have become worldwide symbols of Soviet oppression.

If the Soviets were serious about reducing the nuclear threat, they would agree to onsite inspection.

Mr. Speaker, how could anyone take seriously this proposal from the same nation that shot down an unarmed civilian airliner, crushed freedom in Poland, and which continues to slaughter Afghan freedom fighters?

Mr. Gorbachev, you've got to be kidding.

THE PHYSICIAN'S EDUCATION LOAN COLLECTION ACT OF 1985

(Mr. ANDREWS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced legislation which will correct a serious defect in the National Health Service Corps scholarship program. This bill requires that physicians who are in default on loans made under that program shall be forced to repay the Government through deductions from amounts due to them under the Medicare and Medicaid Programs. This legislation would strengthen debt collection procedures available to the Department of Health and Human Services.

Millions of dollars are owed the Government due to these defaulting doctors, and further millions are being paid currently to these same doctors in reimbursement for services provided through Medicare and Medicaid. A check of 80 doctors who defaulted on $2.3 million of medical school loans disclosed that the same doctors received $3.5 million in Medicare and Medicaid reimbursements over a 2-year period. This illogical practice should not be allowed to continue. This Student Loan Program is important to improved health care in this country and to the education of deserving students; it should not be abused. These delinquent doctors should pay their debts.

THE AMERICAN PEOPLE ARE DEMANDING DEFICIT REDUCTION

(Mr. PURSELL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Speaker, for some time now in 1-minute speeches, I have been reading letters on the budget from my constituents in Michigan's second district.

An overwhelming majority of my constituents are demanding deficit reduction, as are the great majority of the American people.

Here we are, 4 days away from recess, and still—no budget resolution.

Unfortunately, the conferees don't seem to be listening to the American people. If they had been, we'd have a budget resolution.

It's interesting how the American people have seen the writing on the wall. Daniel L. Quint of Northville, MI writes:

> Please stop playing politics, Democrats versus Republicans, with the future of our economy and the future opportunities of our children.

And Lynn and David Booth of Dexter, MI write:

> Prolonged bickering * * * will directly lead to total disharmony, deficient budget reductions, and certain inaction. A flawed lean budget is far preferable at this time * * *.

Thank you, Mr. Quint and Mr. and Mrs. Booth.

Let's report out a budget resolution and move this country toward continued economic growth by reducing Federal spending.

THE ALUMINUM INDUSTRY

(Mr. McCLOSKEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my support for efforts being made by the U.S. aluminum industry to gain greater access to the markets of our trading partners in Japan, Canada, and the European Community.

Today, our colleagues on the House Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Investigations and Oversight, are hearing from the Aluminum Co. of America [Alcoa] on efforts to get the Japanese to open more of their markets to American aluminum. American aluminum presents the Japanese with an excellent opportunity to increase purchases of products made in the U.S.A. They can begin by reducing tariffs on aluminum sheet and plate. Currently, Japan plans to reduce duties on this product by 20 percent beginning April 1, 1986. But this action will still leave Japanese aluminum tariffs three times higher than the U.S. tariff on similar commodities.

As a Representative of a district where a major aluminum production facility is located—Alcoa's Warrick operations in Newburgh, IN—I am vitally concerned we insist on fair play in the international aluminum market. Fair trade can benefit both countries.

SHUSTER ENDORSES CONRAIL PUBLIC SALE

(Mr. SHUSTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, after several months of evaluation, last week I reached my decision to support the public sale of Conrail, rather than the administration's proposed sale to Norfolk Southern Railroad.

I urge my colleagues to carefully consider the proposed public sale for several reasons:

The public sale will provide more income to the Federal Government; it will preserve competition; give better service to shippers; create more opportunities for employees; and preserve an independent railroad to serve the Northeast and Midwest.

There is indeed a risk involved in supporting an independent Conrail. If you believe that the Northeast is doomed to stagnation and decline, then an independent Conrail is likewise doomed. But if you believe in the future of the region, then an independent Conrail can surely survive and prosper. As it now is doing.

The bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is that I choose to believe in the future of our region of America, so I choose to support an independent Conrail.

ARMS CONTROL

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, 22 years ago President Kennedy broke the arms control deadlock of his day by challenging the Soviet Union to a moratorium on atmospheric nuclear testing. His initiative led 8 weeks later to the agreement and signing of the atmospheric test ban treaty. Yesterday Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev followed President Kennedy's courageous example by announcing that the Soviet Union will unilaterally stop conducting nuclear tests from August 6 until January 1, and will not be the first to conduct another nuclear test. This could be the opportunity of a lifetime for a lifetime of peace.

The Soviets have given a mile and President Reagan has taken an inch. He flatly rejected the offer and invited the Soviets to witness an American test. He has conceded the moral and political high ground to Gorbachev.

Mr. Speaker, this is no way to break through the barriers to arms control. Progress requires a show of good faith as well as strength. Refraining from nuclear testing and resuming negotiations on a CTB shows good faith without jeopardizing our national security. It goes far toward reaching an agreement to reduce the nuclear threat and head off an economically crushing arms race. We in Congress must go the full mile for arms control and meet the Soviet challenge. I invite my colleagues to urge the President to reconsider the Soviet offer; join with me on H.R. 1834, the simultaneous nuclear test ban; and stand up for economic, military, and common sense.

COMPARABLE WORTH

(Mr. DAUB asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to extend his remarks.)

Mr. DAUB. When, my colleagues, is a study not a study? When it is a comparable worth study.

H.R. 3008 will be before the House this week. This legislation sets up a so-called study that would in fact make substantial change in the antidiscrimination laws, laws that are applicable to both the public and the private sector.

Never before has title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 been interpreted to mean that equal pay must be paid to different jobs when someone deems them to be comparable.

Equal opportunity and nondiscrimination are the law. Equal pay for equal work is the law. Comparable worth is not the law.

The study that would be mandated by H.R. 3008 actually defines job evaluation as objective. This objectivity of comparable worth schemes can clearly be illustrated by comparing the job ratings of different comparable worth studies that have been performed in different States. When converted to a common scale, a nurse was rated 79 points in Minnesota, 124 points in Iowa, 108 points in Washington, and 150 points in Wisconsin. This kind of comparison showed that 3 States believed that nurses should be paid more than electricians, but in Minnesota it proved that they thought nurses should be paid less than electricians. Nevertheless, comparable worth proponents claim these studies to be bias free and totally objective. They can determine the intrinsic worth of jobs, we are told.

My bottom line is, there is no universal standard for job worth. H.R. 3008 asks Congress to endorse the fundamentally flawed concept of comparable worth through the guise of claiming it is only a study.

My colleagues, do not be deceived.

OUR POLICY IN NICARAGUA

(Mr. BONIOR of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, today's Washington Post carries and article about a new series of Contra attacks inside Nicaragua. Among those killed in a Contra ambush were eight mothers going to visit their sons in the military service.

Many of the Members of this body believe that our aid to the Contras is in the interest of democracy in Central America; that is a method of pressuring the Sandinistas toward internal reforms. In the most recent votes on this issue, supporters called new aid to the Contras "humanitarian."

I know these are the genuine goals of every Member of this body. But, as the death of these eight mothers reminds us, our goals are not always matched by reality. We are backing a war in Nicaragua, a war that is causing immeasurable suffering to the civilian population of that country.

I hope my colleagues will continue to evaluate the consequences of our policy in Nicaragua, and will not close their eyes to the human costs of this war. For today in Nicaragua, there are eight more families without mothers, and an entire generation of children, who cannot forget what a policy that claims to support democracy has done to their lives.

CERTAIN FORMER FLIGHT ENGINEERS OF WESTERN AIRLINES

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H.R. 484) for the relief of certain former flight engineers of Western Airlines.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H.R. 484

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to each of the former flight engineers of Western Airlines named in subsection (b) (or if a named individual is deceased, to his estate) the sum of $25,000.

(b)(1) The individuals referred to in subsection (a) are the following: Carlos Acuna, Fidel Aguirre, Arne Anderson, John Araiza, A. J. Baker, Joseph Baniecki, Arthur Bankers (deceased), Leland Bartleson (deceased), Frederick Beneze, William Blagdon, Jerry Blakeley, Hugo Boisett, Richard Bolton, Richard Bongard, Donald Boyd (deceased), Frank Brasmer (deceased), Wayne Brewer, Lowell Bright, James Brott, Owrie Brown, Harold Camp, Emmett Carroll (deceased), James Carroll, Joseph Carter, A. J. Christensen, Glenn Collins, Ronald Crachy, Dick Crampton (deceased), Pierre Du Bois, Frank Crites, Louis Dauthtry, Sam Diehl, Donald Farrell (deceased), Thomas Farrell, Lyndon Fellows, Dorrence Fincher, Dewey Foster, Edward Franzen, Robert Fredrickson, William Gaedtke, Donald Gage, Daniel Galligan, Edward Gerlits, Wendell Goldsmith, John Hamilton, Harold Hayen, Fred Hazlett (deceased), William Hegemann, George Heinz, Robert Hicks, Eugene Hodgins, Duncan Hughes, Joseph Irvine, Albert Johnson, Harold Johnson (deceased), Jack Johnston, Stanley Klescewski, Dale Kluckman (deceased), John Kosmicki, Stanley Koltvett, Al Krueger (deceased), Glenn Kvendru, William Lagler, Donald Lensing, Paul Litjen, Robert Longworth, Loren Lorenzen, Bert Martens, Charles Martin, James McMahon, Antonio Mendiola, Gerald Moe, James Middleton (deceased) Jake Morlock, I. Newman, George Norris, L. O'Conner, Virgil Paulsen, James Potts, Dwight Preston, Robert Pugh (now known as Robert Gould), Peter Raymen, George Richter, Stanley Rober, Merle Russell, William Rodger, Walter Sabol, William Sawvell, Robert Sawyer, John Schroeder, Kenneth Schultz, Kenneth Severson, Donald Shannon, Kenneth Sherman, Edward Sherwood, Earl Shiveley, William Short, Eugene Siebern, Chifford Smith, Eldred Steffens, Raymond Tanis, Eli Tarin, Eli Tavarez, Paul Theod, Richard Thomas, Glenn Tidwell, Henry Tomberg, John Trank, William Tyler, Earl Troutner, Andrew Vagenas, Manuel Vargas, Alfred Vereb, Torgeir Vik, Martin Wahne (deceased), Rodney Waite, John Walik, Gillis Walsh, Herman Weinstein, John Willey, Fred Wolf, and David Wright (deceased).

(2) The individuals referred to in paragraph (1) are individuals who are former flight engineers of Western Airlines and who were plaintiffs in the matter referred to the chief commissioner of the Court of Claims by H. Res. 83, Ninety-fifty Congress, pursuant to section 1492 of title 28, United States Code (congressional reference case numbered 1-78).

SEC. 2. No part of each amount provided for in the first section of this Act in excess of 10 per centum thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with the claim of any individual named in subsection (b) of the first section and the payment of receipt in excess of 10 per centum of each amount provided for in the first section shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Violation of the provisions of this section is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not to exceed $1,000.

With the following committee amendment: page 2, line 2, strike out "25,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$20,000".

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

COMPARABLE WORTH

(Mr. ARMEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, not only do the proponents of comparable worth claim that it is only a study, but they further make the fallacious claim that no study of this subject has been done in the last 67 years, the last 57 years, the last 30 years, as previously reported.

Mr. Speaker, I have before me a summary entitled, "Equal Worth, Comparable Worth, and, Market Worth of Federal Jobs. A study of the Federal Government Pay Classification and Qualification System for Employment," by the U.S. Office of Personnel Management.

□ 1220

This is the study that is summarized in that report. The fact of the matter is that it has been studied not only by the Office of Personnel Management, but also by the U.S. Civil Rights Commission. The study, in both cases, rejected the concept.

If I may quote from the Office of Personnel Management:

Comparable worth simply is a recipe for conflict. Any nonmarket assignment of worth to different jobs would be arbitrary and therefore unjust. Such a system would promote class conflict. Notice we have not even referred to the cost of such a system which would be very substantial in the hundreds of billions of dollars, but only of comparable worth's illogic, imprudence, and injustice.

The fact is the studies have been made, the conclusions have been drawn, and there is no need to further study such an alternative.

THE CONCEPT OF PAY EQUITY

(Mrs. BURTON of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mrs. BURTON of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 3008, and for the concept of pay equity in general.

We all know that discriminatory wage practices exist. We know that they exist within the Federal wage classification system.

The Federal Government, which is the single largest employer, cannot continue to perpetuate a wage structure that systematically discriminates against a majority of its female employees.

Many of the States are already studying and collecting data on their wage structures. In California, three agencies collect data annually on comparable worth activities in the workplace.

In 1981, our legislature passed an amendment to the State civil service law establishing "a State policy on setting salaries for female-dominated jobs on the basis of comparability of the value of work."

In my city of San Francisco, the board of supervisors overwhelmingly passed a resolution declaring the city's intention to eliminate pay inequity based on race or sex-based wage classification.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to realize that we are calling for a study, an important one. What we will end up with is knowledge—upon which we can plan.

THE NEVADA WILDERNESS BILL

(Mr. REID asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. REID. Mr. Speaker, when working on bills it's as important to define the legislation in terms of what the issues are not as it is for what the issues are. That has become especially true for a Nevada wilderness bill.

Earlier this week, I discussed what wilderness is, what it includes. Now, in order to dispel myths and confusion, I'd like to discuss what wilderness legislation is not.

For ranchers the Wilderness Act of 1964 does not preclude existing grazing uses in wilderness from continuing. In fact, ranchers are given more protection under wilderness than in nonwilderness forest lands.

For Nevada miners, even if all land recommended by conservationists becomes wilderness, over 70 percent of the national forest land would remain available for exploration and development. But until a Nevada wilderness bill is passed the entire 3.6 million acres of this roadless land remains in limbo as de facto wilderness.

These two examples demonstrate why it's important for us to take special care in drafting a Nevada wilderness bill that not only meets the needs of the State and the Nation, but also is understood in terms of purpose and possibility.

FATHER LAWRENCE JENKO HELD HOSTAGE IN LEBANON

(Mr. O'BRIEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, at 7:30 a.m., January 8, 1985, Father Lawrence Martin Jenco was kidnaped at gunpoint on his way to work as the director of Catholic Relief Services in Lebanon.

Father Jenco has served for 25 years in places like Thailand, North Yemen, India, and Australia. He was assigned to Lebanon in October 1984.

Father Jenco never wore a cleric's collar. He didn't want people to misunderstand his role. His job was to rebuild hospitals and schools and help refugees, not to evangelize.

Today is the 203d day since Father Jenco was kidnaped in Lebanon.

Today is the 501st day William Buckley has been held hostage in Lebanon.

Reverend Benjamin Weir has been held hostage in Lebanon for 448 days.

Today is the 136th day of captivity for Terry Anderson, the Associated Press bureau chief in Beirut.

David Jacobsen, director of the American University Hospital in Beirut, has been held hostage for 63 days.

Today is the 50th day of captivity for Thomas Sutherland, the dean of agriculture at the American University, Beirut.

Today also marks the 238th day since the disappearance of Peter Kilburn, the American University librarian.

Mr. Speaker, the Lebanese hostage crisis is more than 500 days long. At night, as they sleep restlessly—wonder if they fear we have forsaken them.

CATCH-22 AFDC RULES

(Mr. LEHMAN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which will address a serious flaw in the Aid to Families with Dependent Children Unemployed Parent Program [AFDC-U]. The flaw is commonly known as the 100-hour rule.

This rule terminates eligibility for the AFDC-U program for a primary wage earner as soon as he or she is employed over 100 hours a month. It was originally intended to get able bodied wage earners off welfare, yet instead it discourages these parents from accepting employment and encourages welfare dependency. This is because the unemployed parent can legitimately and with good cause turn down employment if the resulting income would be less than the public assistance benefits for which the family is eligible. With the 100-hour rule, the father of a family of four on AFDC would have to work at least 140 hours a month at minimum wages to match the national average AFDC payment. The Federal Government, however, takes away all his benefits if he works just 100 hours.

It is time to address this unfortunate flaw in the AFDC program and to eliminate the work disincentive that has evolved. The bill I am introducing today will do precisely that. My legislation will encourage participation in the job market by establishing demonstration projects nationwide where the 100-hour rule would be waived. Wage earners would be allowed to work in excess of 100 hours a month without the threat of the family losing all AFDC benefits. Families, instead of becoming ineligible for assistance would see their grants reduced. As a result, there would be a reduced expenditure of AFDC program funds for each family receiving earned income.

It is clear that the 100-hour rule is not working when dependence on public assistance is increasing—not decreasing. The time has come to try something new. We need to break the cycle of welfare dependency passed on from generation to generation of welfare families. Working parents set role models, restore dignity and provide hope in families caught in the welfare trap.

WE MUST NOT FAIL THOSE WHO HAVE PLACED THEIR TRUST IN US

(Mrs. JOHNSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, today I am announcing that I plan to vote against any motion to adjourn until a budget resolution is agreed to by the House and Senate, and urge each of my colleagues to join me.

We all know the seriousness of the challenge we face. We have sought the responsibility of the position we hold, and now we must not fail those who have placed their trust in us. The American people, your constituents and mine, are beginning to wonder whether Congress can responsibly address the Federal deficit; whether elected Representatives are capable of making the difficult decisions necessary to govern this country and to save us from almost certain financial ruin.

As one who has fought out the tough decisions that must be made to shave $50 billion from our deficit, and whose 92 group budget proposal was confirmed by CBO as at least doable and accurate, I know it can be done.

Mr. Speaker, I implore my colleagues, Democrats and Republicans alike, to inform their leadership that they will vote no against any summer vacation recess resolution unless a budget resolution has passed this House and the Senate. We must exhibit the will, the guts, and the intestinal fortitude to address the Federal deficit with strong action. The jobs of people we represent are at stake. The quality of life in America is at stake. Rome is burning. Can we, will we stop the music and fight the fire?

Vote no against the adjournment resolution.

UNITED STATES, SOVIET NUCLEAR TEST BAN PROPOSALS SHOW PROMISE

(Mr. DOWNEY of New York asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of the nuclear age both the Soviet Union and the United States have dismissed each others' arms control initiatives as propaganda. Many in the Congress believe that whatever the U.S.S.R. proposes is bad for the United States. I'm sure they have their counterparts in the Soviet Union. Those of use who believe that arms control is good for national security have searched for ideas that fall between "Perle" and "prayer."

Yesterday, the U.S.S.R. offered the United States a 5-month moratorium on nuclear weapons tests. Maybe this is just more propaganda, maybe not. The 40th anniversary of Hiroshima is the time to break the vicious cycle of nuclear oneupmanship. We should carefully consider the Soviet offer and make a counterproposal that requires protocols for intrusive inspection of both sides. The United States should lead the way to make permanent the testing ban. The President's offer to the Soviets to inspect our nuclear tests is an excellent start. We are moving in the right direction whether we realize it or not. With more than 50,000 nuclear weapons on this planet now is the time to say enough is enough.

NEED FOR A BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT

(Mr. LAGOMARSINO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, if we are truly serious about bringing the Federal budget under control, we need to consider new ways to restrain spending. One proven method that is already used in 36 States, including my home State of California, is the constitutional requirement of a balanced budget. Congress clearly needs to bring spending under control. Deficits have resulted from congressional spending which has doubled from 1960 to 1970, and tripled from 1970 to 1980. Since the balanced budget amendment would bring fiscal responsibility through the limitation of Federal spending and taxes, it would foster economic growth and establish congressional accountability. With more money available to private markets, interest rates would go down. Lower long-term interest rates would lead to greater investment and higher employment. Seventy-five percent of the American people favor a balanced budget amendment and 32 States have called for a national constitutional convention on this issue. The breakdown in the budget conference illustrates the need for a balanced budget amendment. It becomes even more necessary. I urge my colleagues to support the balanced budget/tax limitation amendment.

HELSINKI ACCORDS

(Mrs. KENNELLY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, this Thursday, August 1, marks the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act. In this document, the United States, the Soviet Union, and over 30 other countries pledged themselves to greater cooperation in military, economic, scientific, educational, and humanitarian matters. Perhaps most important, the Final Act committed the participating States to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms.

For 10 years, the Soviet Union and other eastern European nations have failed to adhere to the pledges made at Helsinki. In particular, there have been massive violations of section 7, which commits the signatory nations to respecting the fundamental rights and freedoms of human beings, including freedom of thought, conscience, and belief. The plight of Soviet Jews is well known. But Catholics, Pentecostals, and Baptists as well have all too often found that their religion can be exercised only at the cost of imprisonment, economic reprisals, and abuse.

Despite these widespread violations, the Helsinki accords remain a symbol of hope to the oppressed people of eastern Europe. On this 10th anniversary of their signing, we in the United States can let them know that we share their hope of a world in which human rights are honored. With Congressman GILMAN, I am today introducing a resolution reaffirming our commitment to these fundamental freedoms and calling on the President to urge Soviet leader Gorbachev to do the same when they meet this fall. I hope my colleagues will join us.

SPECIAL ORDER TODAY TO BEGIN NEW MOVE TOWARD VOLUNTARY SCHOOL PRAYER AMENDMENT

(Mr. BARTON of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, last evening I had the high privilege to host the second annual prayer vigil here in the House of Representatives. We had students from all over the United States gather in room H-227 to engage in an evening of prayer, special music, individual meditation, and a religious ceremony to try to determine what we can do to allow voluntary—and I emphasize "voluntary"—prayer back in our public school systems.

This evening I am going to have a special order with many other Members of this body in which we will discuss the issue in more detail and announce that we are going to begin the signature drive for discharge petition No. 1, which is for House Resolution 279 that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KINDNESS] has in the Committee on the Judiciary. H.R. 279 is a constitutional amendment to allow voluntary prayer in the public school system.

Mr. Speaker, I urge you and all the other Members of this body to participate with me in the special order this evening and to sign the discharge petition so we can get the amendment out of committee and out on the full floor where it can be debated.

FULL FUNDING OF U.S. CUSTOMS SERVICE URGED

(Mr. KOLTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KOLTER. Mr. Speaker, today we are scheduled to conclude consideration of the Treasury and Postal appropriations bill for fiscal year 1986.

There is an amendment pending in the committee of the whole that would cut $192 million from the bill by reducing each appropriation in the bill for discretionary spending by 2.65 percent. While the amendment may have merit, I want to call attention to the fact that such a reduction in spending would hinder the U.S. Customs Service from properly enforcing this Nation's trade laws and agreements.

Mr. Speaker, in 1984 alone, over 160,000 different shipments of steel and steel products entered the United States. Despite this high volume of steel and thousands of other types of imported goods, the U.S. Customs Service has done a good job of enforcing the laws, but Customs needs additional resources to ensure that our trading partners are complying with recently negotiated steel trade agreements.

Cutting funds from the U.S. Customs Service would only make their difficult job tougher. I urge my colleagues to exempt the Customs Service from this funding cut.

PAY EQUITY

(Mr. MRAZEK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to reinforce the current need for a pay-equity study of the Federal pay and job classification systems.

I believe it is essential that we determine why women and minorities are clustered in the lower end of the Federal pay scale. The existence of a wage gap in the Federal civil service is undeniable. Whereas 80 percent of the women employed by the Federal Government are concentrated in civil servcie grades 7 and below, 85 percent of federally employed men are classified in grades 10 and above. On the average, women in the Federal Government earn 63 percent of what men earn. The question is: Why?

Representative OAKAR's bill, H.R. 3008, would mandate a study of the Federal pay and classification systems to determine whether there is any evidence of discrimination based on sex, race, or Hispanic origin. Most corporations study and reevaluate their wage-classification systems on a regular basis. We need a national approach to civil service pay equity that can serve as a guide for each of our States.

If there is evidence of discrimination, it is surely our responsibility to redress the inequities. I therefore urge my colleagues to support this bill.

RATIONAL CRITERIA NEEDED FOR CAPITAL PUNISHMENT LEGISLATION

(Mr. VALENTINE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to request that my colleagues sign discharge petition No. 2 for the release of H.R. 343 from the Judiciary Committee.

H.R. 343 demands our immediate attention. It is a bill designed to establish rational criteria for the imposition of the death penalty. It would apply to cases involving homicide, treason, and espionage. It would fulfill the requirements laid down by the Supreme Court in a series of cases involving capital punishment.

Our Nation's adversaries have enlisted the treasonous support of American citizens in their unending drive to acquire American technology for military use. Recent studies have shown that the Soviet Union has narrowed the Soviet-American technology gap to 3 years—from its previous level of 10 years—by stealing American defense technology. As many as 150 of their weapons systems make use of technology stolen from sources in the West.

We must do all we can to deter treasonous activity. We need the death penalty to help us in this effort.

I commend my colleague, GEORGE GEKAS, for his leadership in drafting and introducing this important legislation.

Although I recognize that some of my colleagues have serious doubts about the death penalty, I hope every Member would agree that it is imperative for us to address the problem of espionage in full and free debate. The American people deserve no less.

For all of these reasons, I urge my colleagues to bring this bill to the floor by adding their names to discharge petition No. 2.

COKE—THE REAL THING IS BACK

(Mr. DARDEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, as we discuss and debate the weighty issues of the budget, national defense, tax reform, and international terrorism, we must not overlook a truly significant event.

Coke—the real thing is back. At the behest of a loyal and passionate consumer demand, the Coca-Cola Co. has returned the original formula, now called Classic Coke, to the grocery shelves and the vending machines.

Yesterday, throughout the Atlanta area, Coke came back. The return of Coke is like being reunited with an old love. It is better now than ever before. We Georgians are justly proud of our largest corporate constituent, the Coca-Cola Co.

All Georgia Members will have the Classic Coke available in our offices in the next few weeks. We invite all Members to come by our offices and sample the old pause that still refreshes.

U.S. TRADE DEFICIT GOES UP—INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION GOES DOWN

(Mr. BONKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, today the Secretary of Commerce will announce the trade deficit for the preceding month and it is expected to be another record-setter as we work our way toward the $150 billion trade deficit in 1985.

This is a chilling reminder that the U.S. trade position is being seriously threatened and our industrial base is being undermined by a flood of unwelcomed imports. The statistics bear out this regrettable fact. As the U.S. trade deficit goes up, our industrial goes down.

Time is running out for Government to deal effectively with this problem. So far, the President shows no sign that there is a trade problem. He continues to ignore the need to deal with the strong dollar which is a plague upon our exporters. He has not used the authority the Congress has given him to confront unfair trade practices, and there is a growing realization that the administration really has no trade policy. It may well be the best explanation why the United States is becoming a punching bag in world trade.

Apparently President Reagan lacks the commitment, or at least the political will, to deal effectively with either of our deficits. But if the Secretary of Commerce continues to announce high trade deficits month after month and the President refuses to act, Congress has no choice than to go down the path of protectionism. If that happens we will start a trade war that no one can win.

BOY SCOUTS SHOULD LEARN TO TOLERATE RELIGIOUS VIEWS OF OTHERS

(Mr. ACKERMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, among all the things that I have been able to achieve with the help of God, nothing has made me prouder that my association with the Boy Scouts of America.

As a Cub Scout, Boy Scout, Explorer, Scout leader, camp director, and as an Eagle Scout for 25 years, I worked for and believed in the same things I thought they believed in.

That is why it is so painful to me, as I now renounce my affiliation with the Boy Scouts of America. The Boy Scouts that I belonged to taught respect and tolerance for everyone else's religious views, and had no room for bigotry or intolerance.

In expelling 15-year-old Paul Trout because his beliefs differ from theirs, because his definition of religion and God does not fit their definition, the Boy Scouts of America raises questions about its tax-exempt status, and, more importantly, is in and of itself an act callousness and intolerance, and is not the Boy Scouts that I loved and belonged to.

I pray that God gives them the wisdom to reverse their decision and to tolerate the religious views of others.

(Mr. FOGLIETTA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FOGLIETTA. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Soviet Union formally proposed the creation of a comprehensive test ban treaty on nuclear explosions. Such a test ban has long been held to be a vital step in halting the arms race. A test ban prevents the United States and the Soviet Union from confirming increases in capability and accuracy of new warheads. It serves to freeze testing of silo-killing warheads, the kind of warheads which place our nuclear deterrent at risk of new MIRV's and of new exotic nuclear technology.

Creation of a test ban has been under study for 20 years. Questions certainly remain about how verifiable a test ban can be without on-site inspections. But with proper safeguards and guarantees for verification a comprehensive test ban can be both workable and wise.

Despite the promise of a comprehensive test ban, the administration immediately rejected the Soviet proposal. If the administration is truly serious about arms control, then it must investigate the Soviet initiative. Slamming the door on a comprehensive test ban may eliminate a major opportunity for stabilizing the arms race. The administration needs to reevaluate its decision and pursue further the Soviet offer.

NO GUTS, NO GLORY

(Mr. GLICKMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is quite disconcerting to see what is happening to the budget process. While the two Houses of Congress no doubt deserve some of the blame for the current breakdown of the process, the President has unbelievably pulled the rug from any responsible way to get the deficit down. And let us be honest, the deficit problem is far worse than anyone currently can vision. The economy is flat, revenues will not go magically up, and even the deficit reduction plan passed by the House will probably not reduce the deficit very much.

In addition, the appropriations process is not totally what it is cooked up to be. It appears that some of the bills coming to the floor may be understated in their effort to stay within the budget allocations, and then we will be faced with an enormous supplemental appropriations bill later this year. There is an expression, "No guts, no glory." Let us face it, the issue is political will and guts. If we do not have it, the country will face disaster. If we do, the country could have a glorious future.

BUDGET DEFICITS AND THE FARM ECONOMY

(Mr. McCURDY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Speaker, for many months now, my farm State colleagues and I have approached the well to describe the worsening farm economy. Yet today we remain frustrated because the No. 1 enemy of the farmer, the budget deficit, remains at large.

U.S. fiscal policy in the 1980's has taken an industry that was relatively healthy in 1981 and brought it to the brink of collapse. No sector of the economy has been damaged by the Federal budget deficit more than agriculture. The strong dollar, high interest rates and declining land value are direct results of the budget deficit. Our farmers have come to expect that if it is news from Washington, then it must be bad news.

As we near the August recess when many of us will be traveling home to our districts, it is time we begin to consider what we will tell our constituents.

Shall we say, "I'm sorry Mr. Farmer, Mr. Smalltown Banker or Mr. Small Businessman, Congress and the administration just do not possess the courage to reduce the budget deficit. I know we got you into this mess but you will just have to get by as best you can."

That is the hard truth as it stands today. Our leaders are not willing to put farmers, small businesses, workers, our children, and other deficit victims, ahead of their own personal agenda.

Mr. Speaker, Americans are tired of rhetoric and finger-pointing in Washington. They want action from this body, the other body and the President. Let's act now and tell our constituents that political courage does exist in Washington.

TRADE POLICY

(Mr. LEVIN of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, some observers believe the Democratic Party interest in trade is mainly the result of reading recent political polls and tea leaves. This is a misreading of the reality in today's America.

Trade is a good issue politically only because our Nation's basic economic strength is being sapped, and our economic structure eroded, not just in the Midwest, but everywhere in this country. As announced today, the U.S. trade deficit last month was the second highest in history.

In the face of such a deficit, we do not run for cover just because someone utters the word "Smoot-Hawley."

In our eyes, protecting the United States, our country, is not protectionism. The U.S. trade policy under this administration has been no policy at all. Laissez-faire in trade is not fair to America. We are indeed facing today a red threat, the red ink in trade. It is time for this administration to get smart, to get serious, and to get tough in the area of international trade.

ARMS CONTROL

(Mr. MARKEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, the Soviet Government yesterday offered to stop all nuclear explosions and the United States is ahead in nuclear warhead technology.

The White House, unfortunately, rejected it out of hand. They said that such Soviet proposals are invariably self-serving and designed to lock in areas of Soviet advantage. Just the opposite is the case here.

The message this sends is this: If the Soviets propose it, the United States will oppose it. That is no way to achieve arms control.

President Reagan offered them on-site inspection of American nuclear tests. I welcome that. On-site inspection is good and long overdue.

But the point is not to monitor nuclear explosions, but to end them. These proposals make it seem that President Reagan believes in verification, but not in arms control.

This is the classic historic opportunity. We can stop all nuclear tests now. All we have to do is say "yes."

President Eisenhower was not afraid to say yes in 1958 to 1961. We had no tests on either side during those years.

Why are we now still afraid? Let us verify a comprehensive test ban treaty, not verify the arms race.

Mr. President, do not turn your back on this opportunity. You and President Gorbachev have the opportunity of going down in history as the two greatest men who have ever lived in the history of this planet.

BUDGET AGREEMENT

(Mr. SCHUMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, as we sit here this afternoon, the budget process hangs in the balance. If we do not have a budget this week, one thing is clear, we will probably not have a budget at all.

The shame of it is that the Senate and the House are so close, and yet they seem to be so far. They are so close because over $50 billion of cuts, the very number that Paul Volcker, the Chairman of the Federal Reserve, told us was a necessity, and important in terms of reducing the deficit, are agreed upon. The Senate conferees, the House conferees could sit down in 10 minutes and agree on $50 billion in cuts.

It is any number higher than $50 billion that gives us trouble. Maybe we should include a COLA freeze. Maybe we should not. What should be the attitude toward new revenues?

But on the things that we cannot agree upon, we ought to once and for all agree to disagree. And on the things we do agree upon, we ought to sit down and have a budget. The financial markets, the country as a whole and even the international trade situation all depend on us coming through with a budget. And it would be a darn shame, Mr. Speaker, if for a disagreement over a few billion dollars, a $50-billion agreement were thrown down the drain.

PRESIDENTIAL TORPEDO OF BUDGET COMPROMISE

(Mr. AuCOIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, the President's incredible decision to torpedo the budget compromise is a shattering mistake. While the compromise, as I understand it, was in no sense perfect, we had the prospect, at least fleetingly, for a budget that would slash $80 billion off the deficit next year, and more than $300 billion off the deficit over the next 3 years.

Mr. Speaker, $80 billion, is dramatically better than the deficit reduction numbers agreed to by the House and agreed to by the other body. The $80 billion would send an unmistakable message to the financial markets and to the world that the Government of the United States is, indeed, serious about solving the deficit crisis. And make no mistake about it, a crisis it is.

All it took was some leadership. It was being shown in fledgling terms for a few precious moments. But from the White House instead we got a torpedo.

Let the people of this country know what has transpired over the last few days, and let them understand the White House's own failure to come to grips with the No. 1 economic problem facing this country.

ARMS CONTROL AND A COMPREHENSIVE TEST BAN

(Mr. FASCELL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I applaud the President for his proposal to the Soviet Union with regard to unilateral inspection of nuclear explosions in the United States. This is certainly a positive step toward reducing tension between the superpowers.

I would, however, hope that the administration would reassess its position with respect to the Soviet proposal for a moratorium on all nuclear testing. We should not turn down the Soviet offer outright simply because it is deemed to be political posturing on either side, or because it is a difficult issue.

The truth of the matter is that this is an opportunity that ought to be seized upon seriously. We have been on record for a long time in support of a renegotiated comprehensive test ban treaty with proper verification. Here is an opportunity to see if we act positively to stop the escalation which seems to be before us and to move toward a comprehensive test ban treaty.

It would be extremely useful, it seems to me, if the Congress would go on record in support of the administration's offer and also in support of the Soviet offer for a mutual moratorium or nuclear treaty. These efforts would move us toward the suspension of all nucler testing.

House Joint Resolution 3, recently approved by the Foreign Affairs Committee, moves us along this road by urging the President to seek ratification of two testing treaties and by urging the President to propose to the Soviet Union the immediate resumption of negotiation on a comprehensive test ban treaty. The measure is now pending before the floor where its approval is more urgent than ever. We should seize the opportunities before us and bring an end to nuclear testing.

THE COMPARABLE WORTH DEFICIT

(Mr. RITTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, comparable worth is like a gift-wrapped bomb. It looks nice on the surface, but what is inside is lethal.

This week, the House will take up legislation to perform a study on sex-based salary discrimination in the Federal Government.

The problem with the legislation, Mr. Speaker, is that it assumes from the outset that the comparable worth theory is valid. Most economists; indeed, the great weight of economic opinion, would violently disagree with that.

We have serious problems in putting this Nation's financial house in order. We have a significant budget deficit; we have a record trade deficit. The last thing this country needs, Mr. Speaker, is a brand new, massive self-imposed deficit that is ideologically induced: The comparable worth deficit.

THE BUDGET BUCK STOPS HERE

(Mr. FRENZEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, there has been a procession of orators today castigating the President for, as one of them suggested, "torpedoing a budget compromise."

I think the record would be fair if it indicated that the compromise that he torpedoed was one that had already been torpedoed by House budget managers and by the Speaker of the House.

The House has made it quite clear what it prefers for a budget. He wants as little saving as possible, a paper saving of $57 billion which translates to an acutal savings of perhaps less than a third of that.

I do not think any amount of 1-minute speaking can change the responsibility that lies in this House and our counterpart on the other side of the Capitol.

The President gave us a budget that called for some reductions. We rejected that. It is our responsibility, then, to find one of our own. We have not done it.

To add insult to injury, the House has voted for appropriations that even exceed our feeble budget. This House ought to accept the blame. The buck stops right here.

TENTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE SIGNING OF THE HELSINKI FINAL ACT

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 180) commemorating the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so to allow the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER] an opportunity to explain the resolution.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, as the co-chairman of the U.S. (Helsinki) Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, I rise today in support of a resolution commemorating the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act. On August 1, 1975, the leaders of 33 nations of Western and Eastern Europe, Canada, and the United States signed the Helsinki Final Act. Seen as the capstone of détente policy, the Final Act placed respect for fundamental human freedoms squarely within the East-West framework as a basic element of government-to-government relations. Through good faith observance of the Final Act's standards for responsible and humane international conduct, signatory states were to advance along the difficult road toward mutual trust and cooperation.

As President Ford said upon signing the accords in 1975:

> History will judge this Conference not by what we say here today, but by what we do tomorrow—not by the promises we make, but by the promises we keep.

From the beginning, the West has acknowledged that full implementation of the Helsinki accords' human rights provisions realistically cannot be accomplished overnight but would necessarily be a long-term process.

The lack of significant progress in the area of human rights such as we find in the Soviet Union is not and should not be viewed as testimony on the credibility and utility of the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe process. This process has legitimized human rights as a matter of diplomatic discourse among nations and has placed it on the agenda of our allies.

By signing the Helsinki accords, the Western democracies in essence pledged to keep faith with the persecuted in the East.

It is telling to recall that the West failed to anticipate the impact that the human rights provision of the Helsinki accords would have on East bloc citizens. Western human rights advocates and politicians were not the first to act upon the accords as a means to expose human rights violations in the East. East bloc citizens seized upon the Helsinki provision as a program for human rights advocacy.

Despite continued repression, Helsinki monitors in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe persevere in their perilous and selfless work to this day. Less than a week ago, Charter '77 issued a statement in commemoration of the 10th anniversary. It is a statement of hope, of urging not to give up and of reaffirmation of the ideals of the Final Act. For these courageous men and women, the Helsinki process remains a source of inspiration and of hope. It is also a lifeline, however thin a thread. It is not for us to sever that thread.

Mr. Speaker, 10 short years ago, the Helsinki Final Act helped to usher in a new era in international relations based on the precept that a states' humane treatment of its citizens is as significant as respect for a neighbors' frontiers or willingness to settle disputes peacefully. Because of Helsinki, Western governments now take it for granted that it is their right and responsibility to speak out when human rights violations occur in another participating state.

Mr. Speaker, this commemoration is a solemn moment, a time for reckoning, for coming to terms with our hopes and with our expectations. The foundation of the Helsinki process was painstakingly built in Geneva. It has developed slowly and has suffered setbacks. Frustration is great and justified.

But we should not lose sight of our ultimate aim, perhaps put most eloquently by Physicist Yuri Orlov, founder of the Moscow Helsinki group and a prisoner of conscience since 1977:

> By our efforts, we increase the probability that in the end we shall be successful.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD], the ranking member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, for yielding and for his leadership in this area, and I express my appreciation as well to the former chairman of the Helsinki Commission and the present chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL].

Mr. BROOMFIELD. I thank the gentleman.

Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

● Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of Senate Joint Resolution 180 and urge its unanimous adoption by the House of Representatives.

On August 1, 1975, representatives of 35 governments in Europe and North America concluded the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe by placing the signatures of their governments on a solemn covenant now known as the Helsinki Final Act. This covenant established the primacy of human rights as the foundation that underlies political and economic cooperation between the countries of Europe. This resolution commemorates the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act. In a commemoration of this kind, it is incumbent on us, as representatives of the people of the United States, to take stock of what has been accomplished in the last 10 years.

Unfortunately, there is little cause for rejoicing on this occasion. Even a casual reading of the Helsinki Final Act is enough to convince any objective person that the lofty ideals and declarations of purpose to which signatory countries have committed themselves have been ignored, even reviled, by the Soviet Union and its satellite countries.

When the Helsinki Final Act was signed 10 years ago, many of us were skeptical. However much we may believe in the principles of freedom and human dignity that are enunciated in the Helsinki Final Act, the act also served to legalize or ratify the Soviet Union's conquest of Eastern Europe—a conquest that has subjugated many peoples and cultures, a conquest that was begun by force of arms and completed by political deceit and treachery that have no parallel in this century.

It was the hope of some people that perhaps this recognition of Soviet hegemony in Eastern Europe would be enough to induce concessions by the Kremlin in the area of human rights. But such has not been the case. And I am led to no other conclusion than that the Soviet Union and its puppets in Eastern Europe placed their signatures on the Helsinski Final Act in a cynical and hypocritical attempt to gain an advantage in the propaganda warfare that has divided Europe since World War II.

If the Soviet Union and its satellites have any intention of living up to the human rights standards that are enshrined in the Helsinki Final Act, they have yet to give any indication of it. The tyranny, the repression, and the human degradation have continued unabated behind the Iron Curtain during these past 10 years.

Mr. Speaker, the implication is clear: The war against totalitarianism did not end with the defeat of fascism in 1945. The war continues today. It is not a shooting war in Europe—unless, of course, we consider the case of Major Nicholson and other American victims of Soviet violence—but it is a war just as real as World War II. And the stakes are just as high, too. What is ultimately at stake is the survival of freedom and human dignity on the European Continent—the very place where these great ideas first originated many centuries ago.

The record of the past 10 years is bad. The Helsinki Final Act has not proven to be a restraint on Soviet belligerence. But the Helsinki Final Act does have symbolic importance. Moreover, it provides us with a tool to use in dealing with the Soviet Union and its cronies. Let us take advantage of this 10-year commemoration to rededicate ourselves to the principles the act contains. Let us strive to turn the act—a piece of paper—into a living reality. I call upon our present administration and all subsequent administrations to make this solemn covenant the centerpiece of the East/West dialog and of our policy in Europe.

Let us keep faith with the many millions of people who suffer under the yoke of Soviet communism in Europe. Their cries should not go unheard. Nor should we be hesitant in demanding Soviet compliance with the principles the Kremlin pledged to uphold when the Helsinki Final Act was signed.

Over the next 10 years and beyond, let us strive to make the Helsinki Final Act a living expression of the faith that animates and sustains a free society and a free people. The Helsinki Final Act should be more than a monument to good intentions, it should be held forth as a beacon of hope to those people who are oppressed in Eastern Europe.●

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITTER].

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of Senate Joint Resolution 180, commemorating the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki accords.

My colleagues, we in this House have to understand that the 10 years of those Helsinki accords have seen some achievement, particularly in putting human rights in the forefront of international affairs. But those 10 years have also shown many disappointments. Those disappointments are mirrored in the minds and in the memories of millions of people who saw in the Helsinki accords a chance to rise up out of repression and to seek new avenues to achieve basic human rights goals.

I think we would be dishonest with ourselves and with all those people if we did not recognize the facts as they are; and the facts as they are indicate that the Soviet Union has cynically used the Helsinki accords to solidify its post-World War II boundaries in Eastern and Central Europe, while giving extraordinarily little on the human rights front.

This House of Representatives has a body entitled the Joint Commission—along with the Senate—on Security and Cooperation in Europe; normally known as the Helsinki Commission. It is a bipartisan body and until recently under the leadership of Chairman FASCELL, the gentleman from Florida. This body met over the years to consider the performance and the adherence of the signatory nations to the Helsinki accords.

While the record of Soviet and East bloc conformity with the Helsinki accords is not good, the body nevertheless allowed people to come forward with their experiences, with their ideas, and with their proposals to open up the channels of consideration of human rights in the U.S.S.R. and East bloc countries.

□ 1310

The Helsinki watch group inside the U.S.S.R. was a direct outgrowth of the signing of the accords and the establishment of the Joint Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

The same is true of Charter '77 in Czechoslovakia. It should be recognized, however, that these groups, while still in existence today, are barely operative. And it should be recognized that a major contingent of Helsinki "monitors," those who are still alive, who have not perished in Soviet labor camps, who are not living in Soviet labor camps, if one calls that life, who are not in forcible internal exile, that a sizable and prestigious number of Helsinki monitors have called for the abolition of the Helsinki accords.

I think we should very seriously consider what these people are telling us, and I think as we go forward with the work of the Joint Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, the House and the Senate body; we should investigate whether or not these accords have been abused and misused to the point where those to be served by opening channels for human rights achievements and new human rights goals have been cyncially shunted aside in exchange for Soviet lip service to human rights while in pursuit of the historical solidification of post World War II borders.

I personally feel that it is a worthwhile effort to keep the accords, at least in the near term. We should not rule out the consideration of the overall effectiveness of our accords, what they have provided to the people whom they were intended to serve, and what they have provided to the people who continue to repress them.

To the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD] I thank him for his leadership on issues of this kind in the Foreign Affairs Committee, and to the new House-side cochairman of the Commission, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER], I wish him well in his new leadership role. I would also like to thank personally the extensive bipartisan and creative efforts of the gentleman from Florida over the period of years that I was honored to be a member of the Helsinki Commission.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I am very happy to yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. FASCELL. I thank my colleague from Michigan for yielding, and I want to commend him for helping to bring this resolution to the floor, as well as the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN], and, of course, the cochairman of the Committee on Security and Cooperation in Europe, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER], who is the cochairman on the House side, and I would like to say to my colleagues that this is not just another resolution. It is a very important resolution for us to consider and to pass, for many reasons. I would just like to highlight some of them.

First of all, we reaffirm our commitment to the Helsinki accords. The Helsinki accords lay down principles of conduct between nations and between nations and their peoples, an historic document which was signed by the heads of states of 35 nations. Ten years later, they meet to commemorate that event in Helsinki. This resolution, therefore, supports the Secretary of State in his statement at Helsinki and the policy of the United States as we view the Helsinki accords 10 years later.

We do not ignore it all and we all pay attention in this resolution to the fact that the implementation of the Helsinki accords in the field of human rights has been less than desirable and that the Soviet Union has been egregious in its violations and intransigent in its implementation. An important fact in calling attention to that is that we must continue to do that because as all of the witnesses before the Commission have told us in the last 8 years, it is the one little hope that they have, that is, that the outside world will never forget and allow that these violations of principles formally agreed to by all of the nations continue to be violated in the most inhuman manner by the Soviet Union and other signatories and that this is the hope that must be kept alive and that we must continue, therefore, the process which gives us the opportunity to keep human rights at a very high level in international discussion, in all forums, so that people will have at least that glimer of hope that it will not be brushed aside, it will not be covered over as imperfect as the Helsinki accords themselves might be in their implementation, because it has no enforcement process, it is not a treaty, the only thing that all of the people can look forward to is the fact that in Vienna in 1986 we will have one more review conference to again point out the fact that man's inhumanity to man continues but that we in the United States, as one of the moral leaders of the world, have not forgetten the treatment, the mistreatment, of people who live under the yoke.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN], who is the ranking minority member on the Europe and Middle East Subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of Senate Joint Resolution 180, which is a companion bill to House Joint Resolution 361, introduced by our colleague and the distinguished vice chairman of the Helsinki Commission, Mr. HOYER, and I want to thank our distinguished chairman of our Foreign Affairs Committee, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], for his continued efforts in monitoring the Helsinki accords, both as chairman of that Commission and as chairman of our Foreign Affairs Committee, and also the ranking minority member of our committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD], for helping to bring this measure to the floor at this time. This legislation, which I am pleased to cosponsor, commemorates the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Act on August 1, 1975. Although the climate for commemoration could most certainly be far better, it is important, nonetheless, to recognize that such an important document as the Helsinki final accords is still alive and kicking. These first 10 years give us much to review, and I anticipate discussing the progress of human rights under the accords in far more detail later on today in a special order.

This legislation summarizes the concerns of the Congress and the American people with respect to the several "baskets" which comprise the Helsinki Final Act. However, our primary interest today centers on the disregard of the Soviet Union, as a signatory nation, to adhere to the Lofty principles of Fundamental Freedoms set forth in this document. Although some progress was made in the first few years following implementation, the last 6 years have seen an unprecedented decline in the respect for human rights generally and for the provisions in principle seven specifically, which center on freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief, and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms.

As we review the history of the Helsinki accords, it is reassuring that the American people continue to demonstrate strong support for the Helsinki Final Act, the Madrid concluding document, the United Nations Charter and the Universal Declaration on Human Rights. While there is alleged support for these acts in the Soviet Union, the many Helsinki Watch Monitoring Groups which sprang up 10 years ago to monitor Soviet compliance have now been all but disbanded, and many Helsinki monitors has been confined to labor camps, incaracreated in harsh prisons, and sent to lonely places of internal exile.

This resolution (S.J. Res. 180) strongly reaffirms the support of the Congress for the humanitarian principles set forth in the above mentioned accords, and urges our President to convey this deep and abiding concern to the U.S.S.R. At all future meetings of the Helsinki signatory states, this resolution calls on our Nation to raise the issue of ongoing human rights violations with the Soviet Union and its allies, and to work with the governments of other Western democracies in promoting human rights progress in the Eastern signatory states. It is incumbent upon all of us concerned about the dignity of man to exploit every avenue in stressing the inherent link between human rights for all and the achievement of lasting peace. Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I urge our colleagues to join in adopting this important resolution.

□ 1320

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], a senior member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. HYDE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, we celebrate today a triumph of our capacity for self-deception and naivete over reality. Why anybody had any right in the name of common sense to expect the Soviet Union to live up to the undertakings that it became a signatory to in the Helsinki accords, I do not know. It would be a total repudiation of history.

Andrei Sakharov, Anatoly Schranski cannot leave the country, along with a long and depressing list of people who seek to emigrate from the Soviet Union. Yet, the Soviets undertook in this accord to free up immigration. We have just finished imposing in both bodies, sanctions on the Republic of South Africa. But Bishop Tutu can leave the country. Chief Buthelezi can leave the country. They do not hold people under house arrest over there remotely approaching what the Soviet Union does. And yet here we are celebrating 10 years of adject failure to provide the slightest respect for any practice of human rights in the Soviet Union.

Oh, yes, we have got a document that they have signed and we can show to the world, to the Court of Public Opinion, I do not know where that is, maybe the United Nations, or the World Court where virtually nobody ever votes with us, that the Soviet Union does not live up to its undertakings.

A treaty, an understanding, an accord is as good as the intention of its signatories to live up to it. Once more the Soviet Union has shown that words do not mean anything. Solemn undertakings do not mean anything to its leaders and to its government.

I hope the lesson of 10 years of failure in the field of human rights vis-a-vis the Soviet Union, as celebrated today upon the celebration of the Helsinki accords will teach us as we try to negotiate treaties at Geneva for arms control that we need a clear-eyed, unsentimental view of the Soviet Union, its philosophy, its history, and its goals. I hope for that, but nothing in what we memorialize today gives me cause for optimism.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and of the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, 10 years after the signing of the Helsinki accords I believe this is an excellent time for this House to commemorate the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe the Helsinki Commission. I am proud to serve as a commissioner on this important commission. As the joint resolution before us today clearly states, there is an inherent relationship between the quest for international human rights, and the quest for a lasting peace. As a matter of fact, the two are inseparable.

Three years ago, President Reagan declared to the British Parliament that "we must be staunch in our conviction that freedom is not the sole prerogative of a lucky few, but the inalienable and universal right of all human beings. "Mr. Speaker, we in this Congress and indeed the whole Western World, look on in disbelief and frustration at the flagrant Soviet violations of their solemn commitment to observe human rights. I would remind my colleagues that these commitments were explicitly stated in the Helsinki Final Act of 1975, and restated again in the Madrid concluding document.

Clearly the Soviets and their allies talk a good game, but their record in badly tarnished with pervasive repression, torture, the use of psychiatric prisons and mind altering drugs to terrorize dissendents, the use of forced labor and institutionalized anti-Semitism.

Mr. Speaker, I believe nevertheless that the Helsinki process is worthwhile and provides hope to the victims of Soviet and East bloc repression. The Helsinki process provides hope for believers in God, a group who are often singled out for very harsh treatment.

As one Jewish refusenik remarked to me when I was in the Soviet Union a few years ago, and I quote:

You in the West are our only real hope; the Helsinki accords are leverage.

Implementation of the Helsinki accords hasn't been perfect, but they have been a constructive influence. They do provide leverage.

Just last month, Mr. Speaker, I traveled through Romania to investigate allegations of severe religious repression in that country. In meetings and conversations throughout Romania I was told by individual believers who put themselves at great risk simply by talking to a Westerner, that Western efforts on their behalf gave them genuine hope and that an appeals process like Helsinki was necessary in order for at least some of them to obtain freedom—or at least a diminution of repression.

Furthermore, I would suggest that absent the Helsinki accords, things might otherwise be worse. I believe it can be argued that the Helsinki accords have a chilling effect to some degree on the abuses in the Soviet Union and the Eastern bloc.

Mr. Speaker finally, let me just say that we in the West must seriously acknowledge that barring a miracle of profound proportions, reform in the current status of individual freedoms in the Soviet Union and the Eastern bloc promise to be incremental at best. But the alternative, to do nothing, is wrong.

Mr. Speaker, by their repressive policies, I would point out to my colleagues that the Soviet Union and the Eastern bloc have turned millions of ordinary people into spiritual giants—martyrs—in the eyes of the West and in the eyes of God.

Although the tenacity, the courage, and the abiding faith of these individuals may not be fully applauded or recognized in this world, the stories of their bravery will certainly be the grist of legends in the world to come. Mr. Speaker, I urge all of my colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER].

Mr. PORTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the gentleman from Maryland, the cochairman of the Helsinki Commission and the cosponsors—of which I am proud to be one—for offering this resolution marking the 10th anniversary of the Helsinki Final Act.

As founder and cochairman of the Congressional Human Rights Caucus and a founding member of the International Parliamentary Group on Human Rights in the Soviet Union, I believe very strongly that this is a document of hope, not only for the people of the West, but for the imprisoned millions behind the Iron Curtain of Communist oppression in the East.

As a new member of the Helsinki Commission, I went with my colleagues to Ottawa to the Helsinki Human Rights Review Conference about 2 months ago, and while our delegation sat across the table from that of the Soviet Union and talked of Andrei Sakharov, of Anatoly Shcharanski, of Ida Nudel, Joseph Begun, Zachar Zunshine, and others, they talked of unemployment and of the American Indians. As we talked of the substance of human rights—the fate of individuals—they talked of propaganda.

Mr. Speaker, 10 years after the signing of the Helsinki Final Act we find in the Soviet Union the state-sponsored Anti-Zionist Committee, official anti-Semitism that is rampant, the Helsinki monitor groups disbanded, their members imprisoned on trumped-up charges, or held in psychiatric institutions or in internal exile, final refusals given to those seeking to emigrate, and repression of human rights greater than ever before.

In the Soviet satellite countries, Mr. Speaker, we find in Bulgaria, the Turkish minority trampeled; in Poland, the Solidarity Union movement, and the cause of free labor, in a shambles; and in the German Democratic Republic, Romania, Hungary, and Czechoslovakia, the story is, with some small variations, much the same.

So today we have to celebrate, Mr. Speaker, in sadness, and we have to resolve that the next 10 years will see true, real progress on human rights. We have to send the message to our Soviet adversaries that without such real progress the Soviets and their satellites will get from us no cooperation, no agreements, no meaningful dialog, nothing for which they sought the Helsinki Final Act.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN].

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the resolution.

□ 1330

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I support the joint resolution before us which marks the anniversary of the Helsinki Final Act. The resolution condemns the ongoing Eastern bloc violations of the Helsinki accords. It direct our Government to convey our deep concern about the flagrant human rights violations in the Soviet Union.

Ten years ago, President Ford and other leaders signed that solemn accord concerning human rights and related matters. This anniversary should be a joyous occasion. Today, all of us should be able to praise the great strides made in human rights in the past 10 years in the Soviet Union and bloc nations.

But the opposite is true. The anniversary of that signing ceremory is an occasion of great sadness. It is a grim human tragedy that little progress has been made in improving human rights conditions in the Eastern bloc, and the Soviet Union. In reality, the human rights situation in those countries hasn't improved.

While the accord commits the signers to respect human rights, the Soviets and Eastern bloc nations have ignored their promises. To them, this agreement was a joke.

After the pact was signed, a group of Soviet citizens formed the Moscow Helsinki Watch Group to monitor the Kremlin's compliance with the accord. Most members of that group are now in labor camps, or in harsh exile. Many of them are in poor health and some are being denied proper treatment outside the U.S.S.R. because of their involvement with that group.

The free flow of information and ideas between the East and the West has never really started. In 1984, for example, only 900 Soviet Jews were allowed to leave the Soviet Union.

The real value of the legislation before us is that it calls attention to the continued human rights violations by the Soviet Union and their allies.

How can we hope to have real peace with the Soviets if they can't respect a solemn agreement? How can we trust a country that seems to delight in breaking accords? How can we work with a country that enjoys silencing dissenting voices?

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this resolution.

● Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to offer my support for the positive language embodied in House Joint Resolution 10. The chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. FASCELL, and our ranking member, Mr. BROOMFIELD, should be commended for their undertaking today.

As we mark the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki accords, it is appropriate to document the actual effect this agreement has had on the actions of the signatory countries, particularly the Soviet Union.

The constant change in leadership in the Kremlin over the past decade, combined with the signing of the Helsinki accords, has, unfortunately, not resulted in any constructive improvement in the struggle for human rights in the Soviet Union. It would have been naive to expect the human rights situation to improve immediately after the 1975 Helsinki Final Act was signed. However, we have a right to expect that the situation would improve, albeit gradually.

Mr. Speaker, the succession of Mikhail Gorbachev leaves an opportunity to challenge the Soviet Government's record on human rights. One example of the repression leveled by the Soviet Union against people attempting to exercise the basic and fundamental rights enumerated in the Helsinki accords is the plight of Soviet Jews. Statistics from the last 5 years reveal a crisis situation exists in terms of immigration by Soviet Jews, which is at a historically low rate.

I have corresponded on a great number of occasions with Soviet officials, on behalf of Soviet Jews who desire to emigrate from the Soviet Union. In addition, I have been honored to adopt a refusenik by the name of Leonid Volvovsky. Leonid was recently arrested by Soviet authorities for the crime teaching Hebrew to others. I immediately sent a telegram to three top level Soviet officials, including Anatoly Dobrynin, Ambassador to the United States; Aleksandr Rukunkov, the Procurator General—equivalent to the U.S. Attorney General—in Moscow; and to Anatoly Myshkov, the Consul General at the Soviet Consulate in San Francisco. In this telegram I stated: "I understand the Soviet Government has arrested Leonid Volvovsky. Please drop all charges against Volvovsky and let him leave for Isreal. In my contact with Volvovsky over the last 2 years I have found him to be a man of fine character. He only wants happiness and security for his family." To date, I have not received a reply from any Soviet official. Certainly imprisonment for those who teach the Hebrew religion is not a policy a country should be proud of.

Mr. Speaker, 1985 is viewed by many of us in the Congress as a critical period for human rights in general, and Soviet Jews in particular. America must be the nation that bears the burden of carrying the human rights movement to repressive governments in other parts of the world because no other nation on earth enjoys the benefits of freedom more. I urge all my colleagues to support House Joint Resolution 10.●

● Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of Senate Joint Resolution 180 commemorating the 10th anniversary of the Helsinki accords. However, I do so in the hope that the next 10 years of the so-called Helsinki process are more successful than the first. The Soviet Union's record of compliance with the agreement signed in 1975 has been atrocious. Soviet leaders take what they like from the pact—namely, our recognizing their hegemony in Eastern Europe—and ignore the human rights provisions they also signed. Apparently, individual liberties are fine—as long as they don't involve the freedom to think, speak, and write as you please, to worship as you please, to read Western books and newspapers, to telephone a relative in the United States or Israel without the KGB listening in.

Soviet leaders have been especially cynical in the treatment of their citizens who had the temerity to take them at their word and set up groups to monitor compliance with the Helsinki agreements. According to the U.S. Helsinki Watch Committee, of the 100 or more people who openly joined these groups in the Soviet Union, 51 are currently in prison, in psychiatric hospitals, in labor camps, or in internal exile. Four have died in prison, another was killed in a suspicious automobile accident. Another 20 have been incarcerated and released. Not surprisingly, these groups have had to abandon their tasks.

Jewish emigration from the Soviet Union is the other area where the high hopes of the Helsinki era have been bitterly disappointed. After reaching a high of 51,000 in 1979, emigration has dwindled to a tiny fraction of that number. Last year, only 896 Jews were allowed to emigrate.

So while I support the resolution, I want Mr. Gorbachev to know that Americans in and out of government are losing patience with the Kremlin's cynical, empty pronouncements. As President Ford warned us, the Helsinki accord will be judged not by the promises that are made, but by the promises that are kept.●

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 180

Whereas on August 1, 1975 the United States joined thirty-four other nations, including the Soviet Union and other Warsaw Pact states, as signatories to the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, known as the Helsinki Final Act, and

Whereas the Final Act is a balanced document incorporating provisions concerning human rights and fundamental freedoms, military security, cooperation in the fields of economic, scientific, cultural and educational affairs, free flow of information, and humanitarian affairs, and

Whereas the Helsinki process has evolved into the primary tool of East-West Human rights diplomacy and continues to serve as a beacon of hope to victims of oppression in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, and

Whereas the United States, our NATO Allies and a number of neutral and nonaligned countries have documented and protested many serious violations of the human rights and human contacts provisions of the Final Act by the Soviet Union and other Warsaw Pact states, and

Whereas the Soviet Union displays contempt for basic civil and political rights, such as freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief; confines in prisons, labor camps and psychiatric institutions or internally exiles hundreds of citizens who have sought to know and act upon their rights, among them thirty-seven imprisoned members of Helsinki monitoring groups, and

Whereas the Soviet Union callously disregards its pledge to facilitate human contacts and has drastically reduced the numbers of Soviet citizens permitted to emigrate; has consistently denied exit permission to Soviet citizens married to U.S. citizens and to other individuals who have claims to U.S. citizenship; and deliberately impedes the East-West flow of information by jamming Western radio broadcasts, and

Whereas disregard for human rights also is evident in the other Warsaw Pact states of Eastern Europe, and

Whereas inter alia, Bulgaria maintains virtually total control over the life of its people and recently has engaged in a campaign of forcible assimilation aimed at the Turkish minority population; Czechoslovakia harshly represses independent social, political, religious, minority and cultural expression and persecutes members of Charter '77 and VONS (Committee for the Defense of the Unjustly Persecuted); The German Democratic Republic enforces a restrictive emigration policy; Hungary continually harasses citizens who publish or possess unofficial material; Poland outlaws the Solidarity Union, harasses and prosecutes Solidarity and human rights advocates and currently imprisons over 200 persons for exercising their human and workers' rights; Romania maintains a repressive internal regime and seriously violates the freedoms of conscience, expression and association, as well as religious liberty and minority rights; and

Whereas meetings of Helsinki signatory states present important opportunities for Western democracies to call the Soviet Union and its allies to account for these human rights violations, and

Whereas at the recent Ottawa Human Rights Experts Meeting of Helsinki signatory states, East Bloc human rights violations were raised and deplored by U.S. Ambassador Richard Schifter and by other Western and Neutral envoys on behalf of their respective states, and

Whereas U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz will lead the U.S. Delegation to the 10th anniversary commemoration of the signing of the Final Act: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That—

(1) the Congress strongly reaffirms the human rights principles and humanitarian provisions of the Helsinki Final Act and the Madrid Concluding Document;

(2) the Congress recognizes and condemns continued East Bloc violations of international obligations under the U.N. Charter, the Universal Declaration on Human Rights, the Helsinki Final Act, the Madrid Concluding Document, and other relevant international instruments;

(3) the Congress requests that the President of the United States direct the U.S. Department of State to convey to the Soviet Union and its allies the United States' deep and abiding human rights concerns;

(4) the Congress urges the President to direct the U.S. Department of State to take full advantage of the opportunities provided by all upcoming meetings of Helsinki signatory states to call the Soviet Union and its allies to account for ongoing human rights violations and to work constructively with the governments of the other Western democracies to promote human rights progress in the Eastern signatory states; and

(5) the Congress calls upon the President to use every opportunity to stress the inherent link—explicitly stated in the Helsinki Final Act and the Madrid Concluding Document—between respect for human rights and the achievement of lasting peace.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the Senate joint resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 414, nays 0, not voting 19, as follows:

So the Senate joint resolution was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject matter of the Senate joint resolution just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

TREASURY, POSTAL SERVICE AND GENERAL GOVERNMENT APPROPRIATION ACT, 1986

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 3036) making appropriations for the Treasury Department, the U.S. Postal Service, the Executive Office of the President, and certain independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. ROYBAL].

The motion was agreed to.

□ 1353

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 3036, with Mr. BEILENSON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole House rose on Friday, July 26, 1985, titles V and VI were open to amendment at any point. Pending was an amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] for 5 minutes in support of his amendment.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, per my letter to each Member of the House of Representatives, my amendment which is now pending makes uniform cuts across the board in discretionary items in this appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, the total spending in the committee bill amounts to over $13 billion. Of that amount, the mandatory spending programs, three of them, are not included in my amendment. Only included are discretionary amounts, which in the bill total $7.25 billion.

Mr. Chairman, eliminating the mandatory provisions of the bill, there are about $7.2 billion in spending for discretionary items. Those discretionary items are about $192 billion over the level of fiscal year 1985, the current year. In order to preserve the House intention to freeze discretionary items, my amendment cuts that $192 billion by applying an equal reduction of 2.65 percent across the board to each of the discretionary items. It results in a savings from the bill's expenditures of about $192 billion.

Mr. Chairman, I have had Members ask me why I am cutting Customs, why I am cutting BATF or Federal law enforcement training, just as Members always ask why in a reduction amendment we have to cut anything.

Unfortunately, if we are going to reduce spending, we have to cut something.

I would note, Mr. Chairman, that there are two very heavy items in the bill. The committee bill increases the Customs Service spending by 14 percent, which is well over the amount contemplated in the House budget resolution which many Members have voted for twice.

If one accepts my amendment, the Customs Service will still have an increase of over 11 percent, will still be above the House budget resolution and will have plenty of money to run a good operation.

Mr. Chairman, the House is being tested again today on the basis of whether it really meant anything when it said it wanted to reduce deficits. There is a great deal of questioning by the people of the United States to why this body would vote for a freeze in its budget of discretionary items, and then, as it handled its appropriation bills, continue to spend more money than is required by a freeze.

This amendment gives the House a chance to stand up for what it said it was doing when it passed its budget resolution the first time. This gives the House a chance to reaffirm what it said it was doing in its budget resolution and what many of its Members said they wanted to do.

Again, Mr. Chairman, there will be two amendments and those will seek to exempt certain line items from spending. The first amendment, from the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN], will reduce the force and effect of my amendment and result in overspending on discretionaries.

The second amendment will reorient my suggested allocation.

In defense of my own amendment, I can say that I tried to ratify what the committee had done, neither digging deeper than it had done nor favoring any discretionary amounts that it perhaps did not favor.

□ 1400

I felt that across the board was the best way that I could show respect for the committee's work. It is only a 2.65-percent reduction, and it only reduces discretionary spending by $192 million. But I think it is the very least that the House can do if the House has any interest whatsoever in living up to its budget resolution or reducing the deficit.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment does, in fact, reduce budgetary spending for these departments by $192 million. But this is done without the benefit of a hearing, and without actually knowing what the needs are of the departments that are going to be affected by this cut.

I do not think that this is the proper way of making reductions in any budget of the Federal Government. I think that we must know what the needs are of the various departments in question before we do that.

Our committee spent several months studying these issues and came to the conclusion that the amounts recommended by the committee were proper. These amounts are $214 million less than the House-passed budget resolution. It is $214 million less below the budgetary amounts allocated to this committee. Not more, but less.

I have to note that if this amendment is adopted, then hundreds of millions of dollars in revenue that could and should be collected by IRS will not be collected, and our deficit will grow even higher as our honest citizens bear more and more of the tax burden.

My colleagues probably saw in the newspaper this morning that there are thousands of individuals in the United States that have been waiting for their tax refund and they have not been able to receive it partly because the IRS does not have the sufficient personnel to process those returns and send that money back to the people that they owe the money to.

We must also point out the fact, Mr. Chairman, that the Federal Government is paying 13 percent interest on the money that they owe, and that each day that goes by, more and more is being owed to the people who are waiting, impatiently, I might say, for IRS to send them their tax refund, which is expected and in many cases very much needed.

If the amendment is adopted, drugs and other illegal imports that should be stopped at our borders by Customs will find their way into this country, and again because this reduction means fewer personnel. The damage that will be done to our society by drugs in actual terms of dollars is literally many billions of dollars' damage, and no one really knows how much it really will cost ultimately in medical care down the line. The damage done to the lives of our citizens, particularly our youth, is beyond calculation.

There is another department that is also going to be affected by this cut, and I am not going to go through each of these departments, except those departments that are revenue-producing. The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms brings in billions of dollars of revenue, and at the same time it is one of the most important Federal agencies in stopping illegal trafficking of firearms and investigating illegal bombings. They would suffer the consequences of this cut. And as a result, they will be able to do less, again because of lack of personnel.

There are many agencies funded in this bill which perform less exciting and less glamorous functions, but those functions are important to the orderly process of Government. Reductions such as this would reduce their effectiveness, and in the long run would cost the Government far more than these reductions would save.

The General Services Administration, for example, leases, purchases, and maintains billions of dollars' worth of office and other type of space. Less effective management could result in substantial loss. GSA is also responsible for the purchase of billions of dollars in personal property and maintains a stockpile valued at many billions of dollars. We really do not know at this time, since we have not studied the effects of this cutback, what this would mean to their operations.

I can go on and on, Mr. Chairman, about one of these departments. But I hesitate to do so, again because of lack of time, but because primarily no one seems to be listening. If someone just listens to the facts, they will come to the same conclusion that the committee came to, that we cannot make these cuts, particularly in these revenue-producing departments that bring in as least $12 in revenue for every $1 that is spent in their operation.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. COLEMAN OF TEXAS TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FRENZEL

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLEMAN of Texas to the amendment offered by Mr. FRENZEL: At the end thereof insert the following new sentence:

The provisions of the preceding sentence shall not apply to funds appropriated or otherwise made available under title I of this Act for Federal Law Enforcement Training, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, the United States Customs Service, the Internal Revenue Service, and the United States Secret Service, or title II of this Act for the Postal Service.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. COLEMAN of Texas was allowed to proceed for 6 additional minutes.)

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, my amendment would exclude the law enforcement agencies contained in title I and all of title II of the bill from the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota. Those agencies are: the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center; the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms; the U.S. Customs Service; the Internal Revenue Service; the Secret Service; and the Postal Service.

The committee worked long and hard to develop a bill which is both under its tentative 302(b) subdivision and provides the necessary resources for the administration of law enforcement, tax and duty collection; drug interdiction; and the preservation of the revenue foregone function of the Postal Service. We did not "raid" the Treasury. The bill is under the House passed budget allocation by $207 million. However, the gentleman from Minnesota believes the committee is spending too much for the functions under its jurisdiction, and therefore believes it should be cut. While that may seem fiscally proper, such a cut would cause severe repercussions both in law enforcement and revenue collection. In effect, the gentleman's amendment might be pennywise, but it would most certainly be pound foolish.

The amendment I offer to the gentleman's amendment still allows for a cut in the bill of $35 million. What it would do is remove from the harmful and ill-conceived cutting edge those agencies which would otherwise be irreparably harmed by the gentleman's amendment. Let me just explain what his amendment would do to those agencies.

Mr. FRENZEL's amendment would cut the U.S. Customs Service by a total of $20,814,000. Of that amount, $19,212,500 would come out of the salaries and expenses of the Customs Service. That would cause the reduction of approximately 540 positions contained in the bill, resulting in 438,750 fewer entries inspected and processed and a possible revenue loss of $260 million or more in revenue. The Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Ways and Means, the Budget Committee, and others have recommended an increase in customs personnel above the fiscal year 1986 request by some 1,687 positions. Ways and Means and the Congressional Budget Office estimate that the increase in personnel would result in revenue gains of $780 million over the next 2 years. Using those calculations, Mr. FRENZEL's amendment would therefore result in revenue losses of up to $500 million. Furthermore, the Ways and Means Subcommittee on Trade reported that nearly $40 billion in illegal imports were slipping into the country annually. That costs the Treasury, according to the committee, $3 billion annually.

Perhaps a more important point to stress with the Customs Service is that it is the front line against the influx of illegal narcotics threatening the social fiber of our society. In testimony before our committee, the Commissioner of Customs stated that for every pound of cocaine customs seizes, two or three get through. Furthermore, according to the Customs Service, of all cargo containers which enter the country, 98 percent pass through uninspected. The odds presented by that situation are unacceptable in the war on drugs. According to the Select Committee on Narcotics, in 1984 the supply of heroin in this Nation increased by 200 percent. The supply of cocaine increased by 50 percent and the supply of marijuana increased by 300 percent. However, the gentleman's amendment would cut not only 540 enforcement personnel out of the bill, it would also cut $1.6 million from the air interdiction program of the Customs Service. In effect, those cuts would probably cut back on the available air time for P-3A's used to detect and track planes carrying dope into this country, and the funds for the operation and maintenance of 2 additional Blackhawk helicopters Customs hopes to acquire as well, which are used to intercept such aircraft. To cut these funds for the Customs Service's Drug Interdiction Program, while the illegal drug trade continues to flourish, would be a dereliction of duty. If the Congress is really serious about fighting drugs, we are going to have to pay for it.

Mr. FRENZEL would also have us cut $97 million from the Internal Revenue Service. The committee approved an increase of $178 million for the IRS for fiscal year 1986. So did the Ways and Means Committee. The Ways and Means Committee and the Joint Committee on Taxation estimate that this could result in new revenues of up to $1.2 billion or more. Mr. FRENZEL's amendment would cut that figure in half, if not more. As a matter of fact, it would probably result in more losses in the long run. For instance, the committee approved funds for 500 additional personnel to process returns in fiscal year 1986. I do not believe there is a Member here who is not aware of the terrible backlog being experienced by the IRS this year. They are 6 million returns behind, which will cost millions in interest. The committee added the personnel in anticipation of 500 million additional returns to be processed next year. Yet, Mr FRENZEL's amendment would eliminate those positions and we would be left in a worse position. While no one may be too fond of the IRS, they are an important function of Government. When we spend money on them they bring more back in. In light of our deficits, and the amount of taxes owed yet unpaid, it is foolish not to properly fund the agency. Mr. FRENZEL would cut the examination and appeals section of the IRS by over $37 million, cutting staff by 1,000 positions resulting in 60,000 fewer examinations. This lowers the overall audit coverage to 1.2 percent, the tenth straight year of decline since 1976. And, again, we lose badly needed and owed revenue.

The gentleman would cut the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms by more than $4 million. That would result in a reduction of 150 staff positions under the fiscal year 1985 level. This agency enforces our alcohol taxes, estimated at $5 billion annually. Their enforcement capabilities would be greatly deterred, particularly when the increase in distilled spirits tax rate is due to increase on October 1, 1985. It would also curtail their ability to halt cigarette smuggling involving organized crime and to investigate domestic bombings in a time of rising terrorism. To cut this budget and staff would be most unwise.

Mr. FRENZEL would have us cut the budget of the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center. The committee reviewed the administration's request for this program and found it necessary in order that current training levels be maintained. That program works with 59 organizations to see that Federal and State law enforcement personnel are adequately trained. It makes no sense to cut it when Members of this House talk about controlling crime. Not more than 2 weeks ago, this House debated ways of fighting terrorism. To cut the budget of the training facility would be a step in the opposite direction.

Mr. FRENZEL's amendment would cut the Secret Service by $7 million. That budget is already under the fiscal year 1985 appropriations by $2.6 million. The committee worked with the administration in developing this budget and all parties agreed the amount contained in the bill was necessary to continue adequate protection of the President, Vice President, and other Government officials, as well as to curtail counterfeiting. I see no merit in cutting its budget, nor does the administration.

Finally, the gentleman's amendment would further cut the funding contained in the bill for the Postal Service. The result would no doubt mean a further increase in rates for small in-county publications and nonprofit organizations. The funding level contained in the bill is $79 million below the fiscal year 1985 amount. The full committee already cut funding for this function by moving the scheduled rate increase up from July 1986 to January 1986. That represents a 14-percent increase in mailing costs for these small town newspapers and charitable organizations. These groups provide assistance to the poor and downtrodden, particularly in the last few years because of the cutbacks in Government assistance programs. To cut this program further would be contradicting the administration's efforts to enhance more private rather than Government assistance.

The House already rejected a freeze on these agencies when we passed the budget resolution in May. We realized their importance to law enforcement and revenue collection then and should do so now.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment is just bad government. It would result in reductions of revenue. It would lower our defenses against drugs, terrorism, and organized crime. And it would increase the burden on the less fortunate. The bill reported by the committee is fiscally sound. If you want to cut more, support my amendment, and add to the amount already under the House budget allocation. But, at least, do not support an amendment, as the one offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, which will weaken Federal law enforcement and fiscal administration.

□ 1410

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. I thank the gentleman.

Let me support the gentleman's statement, particularly with respect to the IRS. I would like to make a couple of comments about that.

We are losing, some people estimate, $4 to $5 billion a year because we do not have adequate enforcement of our tax laws. We used to examine about 3 percent of the tax returns coming in; now we are down to somewhere around 1.4 to 1.3 percent of the tax returns. We have somewhere around $30 to $35 billion out there in accounts receivable that is not being collected. At that same time we have a diminution of our ability to collect through the collectors we have on the IRS staff.

W.R. Grace Commission said we ought to have 7,500 more people in the IRS to enforce the tax laws the way they are supposed to be enforced. Now I know a lot of folks do not like the IRS, but the people out there that work for a living, that are on the W-2 form, that do not have any flexibility, they are the people that end up having to pay for the lack of compliance, the lack of enforcement that currently exists in this tax system.

I am pleased that we saw some additional positions put in the committee bill above the administration's budget recommendation. I think that is a step forward. I hope we will take a much bigger step next year and get back to the position when we started enforcing the tax laws the way they ought to be enforced.

Some people think it is conservative to say, "Let's get rid of half the IRS." That is not conservative, it is nonsense. Let us make certain we enforce these tax laws. To do that we need an adequate level of audit staff, of those who are able to collect delinquent accounts. I thus support the gentleman's approach.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN] has expired.

(On request of Mr. SKEEN and by unanimous consent, Mr. COLEMAN of Texas was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. SKEEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from New Mexico, the ranking minority member on the committee.

Mr. SKEEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The question I would like to ask: The net effect of your substitute to the Frenzel amendment would be, then, how much in total reduction over where we are now before any amendment takes place, in dollars?

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. As the gentleman from New Mexico knows, the Frenzel amendment would have cut approximately $192 million from the Appropriations Committee bill. My amendment to the amendment, instead, cuts $35 million. While it would have been my preference to have gone completely with the matter of the committee bill because I think the necessary reductions were made in a very precise way, I felt it necessary, even preferable, to offer this amendment to the amendment so that other, more crippling amendments to the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota could not preclude this particular cut. So we are cutting an additional $35 million which by the way causes us to come under the budget authority by some $242 million.

Mr. SKEEN. We were under the House budget, am I not correct?

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. You are correct.

Mr. SKEEN. We are, however, over the President's budget by some $1.2 billion.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. If I might for a second I would like to speak to that issue. As you know, the President's budget did not have any dollars for revenue forgone, which both bodies have decided we are going to have to do something about. So as a result we wind up with a $900 million addition no matter what we do from one body to the other.

Mr. SKEEN. The reason I ask that question is there seems to be some confusion about whether we are over the budget that the House passed or under the budget. I just want some assurance that the base that we are still on, that my information is still correct that we are still under the House-passed budget.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. That is correct, the gentleman is right.

Mr. SKEEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Frenzel amendment.

I want to commend the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] for his effort and hard work in trying to reduce the deficit. There's no doubt that deficit reduction should be a high priority for the Congress.

Although the Frenzel amendment is well intentioned, it may have some unintended and expensive results. On the surface, this amendment appears to save $192 million by imposing a 2.7-percent cut across the board. However, the result may actually increase the deficit by a significant amount.

As I understand it, the Frenzel amendment would cut $98 million from the IRS and about $21 million for the Customs Serivce. These two agencies, along with a reduction in the Postal subsidy, would absorb about 75 percent of the total cut proposed in the amendment.

As the gentleman from Minnesota knows, these two agencies are the biggest revenue producers in the Government. The Customs Service, for example, collected $12.5 billion in duties and taxes during fiscal year 1984. In the end, Customs returned to the Treasury $21 for each dollar appropriated.

The ratio for the IRS is even better. In fact, any cut to this Agency will result in substantial losses in revenue. During the subcommittee hearings on the IRS, I asked the Commissioner for the record what the impact of a $30 million cut would be on tax revenues. To say the least I was shocked with the answer. The IRS estimated that a $30 million cut in IRS operations would cost the Treasury $375 million in fiscal year 1986. I can only imagine what the revenue loss would be with a $98 million cut as proposed by this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, based on this fact alone, this amendment should be rejected. It doesn't make sense to cut a small amount now and lose millions in revenue next year. I urge my colleagues to reject this amendment.

It is amazing to note that because of the delay in processing the tax refunds this year, the Internal Revenue Service has to pay more than $200 million in interest alone. So we are being penny wise and pound foolish with this amendment.

The Coleman amendment is better than the Frenzel amendment, but let us face it. You know why this budget is a billion dollars over the President's budget. The administration has zeroed out because he zeroed in revenue foregone: When that budget came up here, no funds were recommended for revenue foregone.

So this committee did the responsible thing; This bill does comply with the phasing schedule. The committee provided $922 million for revenue foregone in this bill. The committee also added $178 million for the Internal Revenue Service so that they can beef up their enforcement efforts and collect the billions of dollars in taxes now owed to the Government.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CONTE. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. I would just say to the gentleman, I have similar problems with both amendments, and I think because of your statement that it might be wise; I would only offer to withdraw my amendment to the amendment if the gentleman from Minnesota would withdraw his amendment, and then we could pass the bill.

I think that would be appropriate. I will be happy to do that if the gentleman from Minnesota would be willing to withdraw his amendment. On the other hand, if he is not, then I would hope you would support my amendment to the amendment because it is better, and then if you desire, of course, on the final vote on the Frenzel amendment if it is amended by mine, you could vote no.

Mr. CONTE. I will take that under consideration.

I just do not understand why both gentlemen are not directing their amendments to the source of the problem. One of the biggest items in this bill is revenue foregone. It is a Postal subsidy, and nobody wants to talk about it, nobody wants to offer an amendment; but it is a legitimate question.

I know you may get a few letters from the nonprofit organizations and the rural newspapers, but I know you can take that kind of heat.

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that we can stipulate to the fact that the Coleman amendment does in fact improve the Frenzel amendment. It improves it by $157 million, but I rise in opposition with mixed emotions, for it reminds me very much of a situation where a man is asked whether he wants to die at sunrise before a firing squad or take poison in the evening before he goes to bed. The end result is that he is going to die anyway.

In this instance, the Departments in question are going to suffer the consequences of whatever cutback is voted upon no matter what if these amendments are approved.

The truth of the matter is that regardless of the Frenzel-Coleman amendment, they are being brought to this floor without the benefit of the kind of study that is necessary to make a determination with regard to the needs of these departments.

It is true that we are above the President's recommendation, but the truth of the matter, as has already been stated, is that revenue foregone is $926 million more than that zero figure recommended by the President of the United States.

That is the real problem of the situation. Again, as we look at the amendments before us, we find that one is better than the other only because it reduces the impact of amendment No. 1.

So I rise in opposition to both amendments, but in this instance, the Coleman amendment, with some reservations is better, but still not good legislation. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that both amendments are defeated.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I stand today in support of the position expressed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE]. I believe that Mr. COLEMAN has improved on Mr. FRENZEL's amendment, but I happen to believe that the chairman of the subcommittee is correct that we would be better off if neither amendment was adopted.

Several days ago, there was a debate on this floor about the authorization and appropriation for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. Many Members deviated from what had been their norm in voting by saying that we should put additional money into NASA because it would come back to us twelve-fold or fourteen-fold.

Ladies and gentlemen of the House, we have before us today a very similar situation. If we decide to cut back in the money for the Internal Revenue Service, it is very clear, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] stated it, that we will lose upward of $375 million at least, at least, if we fail to get the Internal Revenue Service the necessary personnel to process the returns which they received.

In addition, the statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN] was also very instructive as to what we should be doing on this particular amendment. It we are going to sacrifice some 468,000 inspections by customs officials, we not only run the risk of jeopardizing the whole border operation of protecting the United States, we also run the risk of allowing drugs to come into this country—illegal drugs and contraband.

Can we afford this? Can we afford what this will do to our society? And finally, the question of revenue foregone. I have not heard any speaker who, and I apologize if I missed the remarks, but I have not heard any speaker in support of the Frenzel amendment suggest that they support the administration's position to do with revenue foregone, and that is a major component in this decision today.

I believe the gentleman from Massachusetts is correct that we should oppose the Frenzel amendment. If we are forced to consider the Frenzel amendment, at least with the Coleman amendment added to it, we will have a sounder legislative product.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DURBIN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. The only comment or question I would have for the gentleman is this. Because of where we are parliamentarily, Mr. Chairman, I am wondering whether or not the gentleman does not agree that it would be better to exempt from the Frenzel cuts the Internal Revenue Service, the Customs, the Secret Service, and all of the law enforcement agencies as well as the revenue foregone issue at this point in time?

In other words, I am asking the gentleman whether or not it would not be better for Members of this body to vote "aye" on the Coleman amendment, and then we can determine at the end of that whether or not we want and amendment at all to what the committee work has done.

Mr. DURBIN. I agree with the gentleman. I think that is the proper course to follow.

Mr. Chairman, I would say that I would hope that the Frenzel amendment —would not prevail without the Coleman amendment attached to it.

Mr. SKEEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very interesting process. Of course, those of us on the committee are going to stand up and talk about defending the committee's position. I do not think that we need to defend it, because I think we have done our work and done it well.

However, that is the process; and when you bring these bills out here to the floor, then this is the kind of thing that you open to the rest of the membership who have not had the great privilege and advantage and pleasure of working in these subcommittees, I admire the gentleman from Minnesota a great deal, because I understand his motivation, and I admire his forthright manner in which he approaches budget cuts.

However in this case I have to reluctantly oppose this kind of an amendment because I think that it is misplaced. I do not think that it really gets to the heart of what we are trying to do.

Mr. Chairman, I am a little bit confused. We have another amendment on top of this one, and I understand that there is another one in order, and I would make inquiry of the Chair as to whether or not we can amend this other amendment, the so-called Spratt amendment?

□ 1430

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would advise the gentleman from New Mexico that the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT] could be offered after the committee disposes of the amendment being proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN].

Mr. SKEEN. So we have a triple-tiered situation going on here.

The only problem I have with the Coleman amendment is this: It restores and exempts from the cuts those areas that we worked to bolster because they were income-producing and were critical in so far as need for personnel and for function.

For instance, the Customs Service returns to the Treasury $21 for every $1 that we spend. So assuming from that, if you cut $1, then you are going to lose $21. I do not know if they work in that kind of proportion.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SKEEN. I yield to the gentleman form Texas.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. I hope the gentleman understands that should not be a problem with the Coleman amendment. In fact, the gentleman should be supporting the Coleman amendment. Let me read it again, so there is no mistake.

Mr. SKEEN. Reclaiming my time, I think I may have misled the gentleman due to the thrust of his question.

My only problem with the amendment of the gentleman from Texas is the $35 million that we ultimately cut from the appropriations in this particular bill. That is $35 million from agencies which can ill afford to lose that much in their funding base.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Let me just tell the gentleman what it is. Because it is an amendment to the Frenzel amendment, it cuts 2.65 percent out of the Office of the Secretary, out of the Office of International Affairs, out of the Financial Management Service, out of the Bureau of the Mint, out of the Bureau of Public Debt, out of the Energy Credit, out of compensation of the Office of Administration of the President, the White House Office, the executive residence, the residence of the Vice President, the special assistant, all of the rest that belong in this bill lose 2.56 percent because it is the Frenzel amendment.

My point is that there are no cuts, no losses in the very thing that the gentleman is concerned about and that I am concerned about, and that is law enforcement; there are no cuts if my amendment is adopted.

Mr. SKEEN. I understand the gentleman, and I do appreciate his bringing that up.

I will wind up by saying that I think that the Coleman amendment does offer improvement. I have some reservations, which I have already stated, and I have to oppose the Frenzel amendment.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Well, my colleagues, here we go again. While the American people watch Rome burn, we stand here, fiddling around, with more excuses of why you cannot cut this and you cannot cut that. Here we go again.

Instead of doing something meaningful to bring down the deficit, we are once again mired down in debate that we cannot hold spending at last year's level, we have got to increase it.

I, for one, am fed up with it. You vote that way, if you wish. We are going to give you that chance. But I am at least going to express what I think is the frustration of the American people.

We do not have a budget. We have got to do something to hold down spending, which means that as each bill comes up, we are going to have to make some tough votes. Every bill that comes up has got some wonderful reasons why you cannot cut this and you cannot cut that, and there is merit to every one of them. But if we do that on every one of them, you do not cut spending at all.

What is wrong with the Frenzel amendment is not for what it has been attacked so far on the House floor. What is wrong is that it does not go far enough. The gentleman does not take it back to 1985 spending levels. He does not come anywhere close to it. He cuts some spending but does not take it back to what we spent last year.

When people talk about a freeze, that is what they are talking about. So if you cannot vote for the Frenzel amendment, what you are simply saying is, "Let's let this bill go by, let's give it 3 percent increase over last year's spending," which is what the bill does, "and we will look for some other bill that comes to the floor, and we will try to do it on that one."

We did not do it last week, we are not going to do it today. It looks like you are telling the American people we are not serious about those deficits, we will not do it this week, we will not do it next month. We will suffer with a $200-billion deficit a little while longer.

I urge the Members to vote against the Coleman amendment because it only saves $35 million, and that is not really serious. I think the Frenzel amendment, at $192 million savings is barely serious, but certainly the Coleman amendment is less serious.

I have heard it said—and I serve on the Ways and Means Committee—we have got to have all of these IRS agents just to collect taxes. Well, I did a little mathematics. If, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN] says, 1,500 agents, which is what I am told the amount of money in this amendment he would preserve, would save you $1 billion, why do we not go ahead and appropriate 300,000 new agents and abolish the budget deficit altogether? If 1,500 will give you $1 billion, 300,000 will give you $200 billion and you would not have a deficit; and we can go you one better, we can give you 350,000 agents and we can reduce your taxes as that would bring in a surplus in revenue. We will abolish the deficit and we will reduce your taxes. That is the kind of nonsense you go through with this kind of reasoning.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Last year we increased the number of IRS agents. It did not do a damn thing to reduce our budget deficit. The year before that we added some IRS agents. Did they find any more money? No. But they found some taxpayers to harass.

This function, this budget fiction that more employees who do not know anything, who have to be trained, are suddenly going to go out and find money is ridiculous. Taxpayers produce money, not IRS revenue agents.

Mr. MOORE. Well said. I agree with the gentleman.

I would simply add that is the kind of nonsense we go through in rationalizing every step of the way why we cannot cut spending. You can cut it if you have got the guts to vote to cut spending. And if you do not, then do not go home and tell your people, gee, you want to reduce spending but you just could not do it. The Congress can do whatever the hell it wants to do if you got the courage to, and that is what I have seen missing in this congressional process.

Let me take it one step further. My good friend from New Mexico made the point a moment ago that this bill is below the House-passed budget resolution. That is no great document, but I voted for it. But what you do not realize is that this bill is $1 billion above the Senate-passed resolution, $1 billion more in spending.

Now, if you go to conference and you split the difference, that is $500 million, then you are nowhere close to the $500 million less level in this bill because that would be below 1985 spending, and this bill is 3 percent above it.

So you are deluding yourselves by saying we are saving money, because the bill is under the House-passed budget resolution. You are nowhere close to what a conference is going to come back with, if it does.

Let me conclude by simply saying this: With all due respect to all of you, all of these things are important. What is more important is bringing down the deficit. And I submit that every single bill that comes through—I have been listening now, just as you have been listening all spring and summer as we have fought these appropriation bills, as every one of them comes through, we could give a thousand excuses why you cannot even cut, you cannot even hold it to last year's spending. The Frenzel amendment does not even do that. It does not cut. It does not even hold it to last year's spending. If you cannot vote for that, then you are not serious.

So I end, as I started: Here we go again. Here we go again.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MOORE] has expired.

(On request of Mr. PURSELL and by unanimous consent, Mr. MOORE was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. PURSELL. I want to thank the gentleman also for supporting the Frenzel amendment. I do likewise. I think it is a small amount. But I think we should also be aware that the pay increase is not even in this appropriation bill, as it is not in some of the other appropriation bills. In this bill it would be about $140 million. Now, it would seem to me that, ethically, if the pay raise is recommended by the administration and the conferees and the Congress itself across the board for Federal employees—and that is a separate question—since it has been recommended, what they are going to do is take all of that for all of the appropriation bills and dump it into a supplemental bill down the road, and that adds up to about $1 billion.

So the gentleman is correct in his statement that this is not at the freeze level either with or without the $140 million that was addressed for the pay increase.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman from Michigan has been following the budget process and participating very closely, and I thank him again for his comments. The gentleman brings out again the games the Congress is playing with the American people. We talk about reducing spending, which we are not. We talk about freezing spending, which we are not. And then you point out that we are going to come right along with a supplemental appropriations bill and spend well above what we did last year.

□ 1440

These games have got to end, my colleagues, if we are ever going to do anything about the budget deficits.

Mr. SKEEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SKEEN. I really appreciate what you are saying, and the fervor of it. I think that the gentleman has interpreted it correctly. There is only one problem: Where are the amendments to cut this back down to the budget? Where are all the great, gutsy kind of amenders out here today that will reduce this thing? It would be just as welcome as rain if you could get it passed.

Mr. MOORE. Reclaiming my time, we have offered one and you have spoken against it. Vote for that one and we will cut some more.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FRENZEL. The gentleman from New Mexico is batting a thousand in opposing all the cuts so far. How many more do we have to bring before we find one you like?

Mr. SKEEN. Well, why do you not start with revenue forgone, if the gentleman will yield?

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman's frustration. It is somewhat like, I suppose, the chairman of the Senate Budget Committee who also himself has some frustration.

Let me ask the gentleman this: The gentleman mentions that we are $1 billion over the Senate. Would the gentleman be in favor of cutting the revenue forgone section of the bill by $900 million?

Mr. MOORE. You offer the amendment; I will vote for it.

Mr. HOYER. I take it then the gentleman would be in favor of that?

Mr. MOORE. I am in favor of cutting spending. I will vote to cut any spending anywhere down the line. That is why I am standing up here now.

Mr. HOYER. Including revenue forgone. I thank the gentleman for his statement.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas to protect the law enforcement component of H.R. 3036. This bill funds the U.S. Customs Service, which is a major component of our drug enforcement program. The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. IRS, Secret Service, and the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center. Unless the Coleman amendment is adopted, funding for these programs will be reduced by over $131 million.

I, for one, do not believe that any benefit associated with reduced funding would be worth the increased costs to society. Believe me, there are increased costs in every community in this country if the Frenzel amendment passes.

Just last week, the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control heard from Customs officials on their efforts in the drug war. With 3 months left in this fiscal year, Customs has already seized 15,000 kilos of cocaine, a threefold increase in just 3 years. If that is reduced, if the agents are not there to handle it, how much more cocaine is going to flow into every community in this country?

In its May 1985 special report on worldwide cocaine trafficking trends, DEA estimated wholesale cocaine prices in Miami to be between $30,000 and $35,000 per kilo in March. That means to that date, Customs has seized about $450 million in cocaine. Over $1 billion has been seized since then.

Recognizing the importance of the Customs Service in the war against drugs, the Appropriations Committee funded 16,087 more Customs Service positions than the administration requested. Remember, this administration has cut positions in the last 4 years in every one of their budget proposals.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Of course, I appreciate his work with me on this particular amendment. I know of his interest in the narcotics committee, and I would hope that this point would not be lost.

The gentleman from Louisiana just a moment ago spoke about 1985 levels. All that the numbers of customs do is attempt to get it back to 1981 levels. Not an increase from 1981, just back to those levels. I think that is the point that needs to be reiterated here on this floor.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the gentleman for pointing that out very graphically. We have been fighting a losing battle to keep the positions in the current range, and we have been losing steadily each year as to what we had 4 years ago with a greater need now than ever before.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GILMAN. I want to commend the gentleman for his continuing efforts in waging, helping us wage war on narcotics. I want to associate myself with the gentleman's remarks. We talk about waging an extensive effort against the narcotics traffickers. If we are going to do it, we need the manpower, we need the funds, we need the equipment to do it, and this is not the way to do it, to cut it out of a very important agency that is helping us fight that war in the Customs.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the gentleman for his remarks, and I want everyone to be aware, if you cut it out at the Federal level, there is no comparable way that you can make the dent on drug trafficking in the local community. Without the Customs Service, State and local police cannot do the job in stemming the flow of cocaine and marijuana and other illicit drugs coming into this country. They do not have the resources. They will have to plug in more; the local taxpayers will pay more, but they will not be nearly as effective if the Federal Government is not involved in that fight.

How many more millions of dollars worth of cocaine will enter this country if we reduce Customs funding? Millions and millions and millions. The amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota also would reduce funds for the IRS—the only sure moneymaking operation in the Federal Government. The gentleman says that we have added more but we have not collected more money. That is not true. We have collected more money. We have made a dent on the delinquent taxpayers and others. The problem is that we want to put the agents where they belong in the revenue-producing areas; not in the areas of shuffling paper, and there is a difference when you add them in those areas.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota to reduce the overall discretionary appropriations in this bill which includes the Internal Revenue Service.

I commend the gentleman for his desire to reduce the Federal deficit by cutting spending in general. However, by applying this amendment to the IRS, he is actually defeating his own avowed purpose.

This amendment would cut approximately $100 million from the level of funding for the IRS that is contained in the committee's bill. That $100 million cut will cost us about $600 to $700 million in lost revenue next year because it would reduce IRS enforcement efforts.

This kind of budget cutting is penny-wise and pound-foolish.

The amendment violates the spirit of the reconciliation package tentatively approved by the Ways and Means Committee which calls for $1.2 billion in revenue to be raised through improved IRS operations.

In addition, the Frenzel amendment would wipe out much of the increase in taxpayer services and tax return processing recommended by the Ways and Means Committee and the Appropriations Committee.

Every Member of this body has received complaints from constituents this year about the slowness and problems of processing tax returns. The Ways and Means Oversight Subcommittee has heard extensive testimony on these problems.

In an effort to prevent even further chaos and delays in next year's filing season, we made a bipartisan recommendation for a modest increase in enforcement, taxpayer services, and return processing.

I urge my colleagues to support the amendment by the gentleman from Texas to exempt enforcement agencies from this reduction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. SMITH of Florida was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I appreciate the remarks of the gentleman from Texas. He is a ranking member on the Ways and Means Committee with many years of experience. I defer certainly to have the information that he has just imparted to the Congress.

At a time when we need every dollar of revenue due under the law, reducing IRS personnel as everyone has said would be penny-wise and pound-foolish.

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROYBAL. I would just like to compliment the gentleman on his statement, not necessarily his position, your statement with regard to Customs and the great need for agents is correct. These additional agents will definitely do a great deal to stop narcotics from coming into the United States. The main reason why the committee did in fact increase agents for Customs by 1,687 in personnel, is because of that reason. That increase in personnel is costing $86 million more than the President recommended.

We did the same thing for IRS because of the fact that there are thousands upon thousands of returns that have not been processed and moneys that are due the taxpayer have not been returned to the taxpayer. We inceased that by 2,243 positions, and it is costing $178 million.

We increase revenue foregone by $922 million and that placed us $1.2 billion more than the President recommended. While we are about $1.2 billion more than the President recommended, the vast majority of that amount is in revenue foregone; $922 million.

I would like to compliment the gentleman for again highlighting the fact that this country does face a tremendous problem with regard to narcotics. I think that we do know that every school in the Nation is faced with it. I sincerely hope that we can continue to look at the facts the way they are and vote accordingly.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the gentleman for his comments and kind words. I would hope that everybody would be aware that it is not just Customs. We have Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms; BATF.

We have evidence that drug traffickers are engaged in a symbiotic relationship with terrorists in drug-producing countries. Without question, this is the case in South America. Drug traffickers bring drugs to the United States and often take back guns for these terrorists. BATF has the responsibility to enforce our gun laws.

Do we want to reduce its funding in light of this relationship? Do we want more guns on the streets flowing both in and out of the United States?

In addition, as a member of the Crime Subcommittee, I applaud the Appropriations Committee directive that BATF make enforcements against the prohibition of unregistered private ownership of machineguns a priority. How are we going to do that with less agents? These days, these weapons are becoming commonplace in south Florida, the area in which I reside and which I represent, and we need every available agent to deal with this problem.

Yet we may not get the needed help without the committee's funding level. I want to remind my colleagues of the action that we took on July 17. At that time, we rejected a similar amendment to the Frenzel amendment that would have affected law enforcement programs of the Department of Justice—DEA, FBI, U.S. attorneys, et cetera.

I urge my colleagues to take the same action today and protect the law enforcement functions of the Department of the Treasury. By exempting law enforcement functions from any freeze, we will be telling the American people that we will control spending, and we have. Every appropriation bill that has been out on this floor to date has been lower than the President's request and within the House budget, which is a $56 billion deficit saver.

We have voted for those things, but we are not going to indiscriminately cut spending where it will hurt the taxpayer, and this is one area. We will not cut at the expense of our war against drug traffickers and other criminals.

Recent FBI crime statistics show that in a number of areas, crime continues to increase. Unfortunately, south Florida is one of those areas. In 1984, Dade County experienced 231 murders, 70 of which were directly drug related. I suspect many unexplained and other homicides also were related to drugs. In overall violent crimes, Dade County, unfortunately, was second in the Nation. We are tired of having the reputation as the drug and crime capital of this country. Because we are to a large degree victims of our geography, we cannot totally control at the local level what enters the region, but we must deal with their consequences.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH] has again expired.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman give us an idea of where he is going to proceed? He has had 10 minutes, and certainly drug interdiction and so forth is an important subject. Could the gentleman do with 3, perhaps?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. If the gentleman will yield, I would be happy to do with 3. I have been kind enough, I think, to extend most of my time to people who asked me to yield, and that is why I had to use 10 minutes.

Mr. FRENZEL. I see.

Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman has to do it, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH] is recognized for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy.

It is Government officials and concerned citizens at the local level who are continuing the local fight against crime. This admirable effort may be meaningless, however, if Federal funds for crime programs are decreased. As chairman of the Foreign Affairs Task Force on International Narcotics Control, I deal every day, as all of us do, with the consequences of drugs coming and going in this country, especially in the area of south Florida.

The drug growing in South and Central America is a major problem for all of us in this country, but I also deal with the great benefits, as you do, that we get from the involvement of the Federal Government. The DEA, the IRS, the Customs Service, the INS, BATF and all the other Federal agencies are on the front lines in the war against drugs.

Let us repeat the resolve that we showed 2 weeks ago and adopt the Coleman amendment to save law enforcement funds.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I concur with the gentleman from Texas in his attempt to exempt the Postal Service revenue forgone from any further reductions.

The administration wants the American people to engage in more private giving to help the less fortunate, but a reduction in revenue forgone would hinder efforts by every private charitable organization in this country at the very time when we are trying to raise, through them, the funds needed to offset reductions in social programs.

I do not support the Frenzel amendment, but if there is going to be an attempt to vote on it, I support the Coleman amendment, which is infinitely better as it would be the substitute for Frenzel, and I would urge the adoption of the Coleman amendment on that basis.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I have been listening with great interest as we have debated the various enforcement agencies and whether they should or should not be funded. It has come into my mind that most of the people who are saying that we should cut are like I am in that they believe in a strong defense; a defense for the Nation externally, and I hope they believe in it internally. Because, the front line of defense that we have in many instances is an agency such as the Customs Service, an agency that does enforce laws, an agency that does intercept contraband coming into this country, an agency that does fight drugs, an agency that does attempt to maintain safe streets in this country by stopping things before they start.

But I would like to take a different approach to the discussion, if I might, Mr. Chairman, and that has to do with the trade issue. We have an imbalance in trade in this country which is the No. 1 problem facing America today. We are dealing with a deficit in trade that could go up to the $200 billion level if we let it keep going like it is.

Oh, yes, we have problems that we talk about that are related to the deficit and the strength of the dollar. We also have problems in trade with enforcing international agreements into which we have entered. Specifically in my area of the country, Mr. Chairman, if you came to South Carolina and you went through the small towns and you saw the textile plants closed, and you asked the people why they closed, they would say, "Because the imports came in." Then you look at the situation and question why when we have trade agreements this is happening, and you to to Customs and you say, "Why are we not enforcing the agreements we have," and they say, "We do not have the manpower to do it."

We are putting people in the street because we are not enforcing the law. Is there a person here who would say that it is more important not to enforce the law and throw someone out of work? Would you say that that is the way to save money?

No! That is not the way to save money. Who pays the unemployment? Who pays the Federal supplemental compensation after they have been out and their unemployment has expired? Who does it? The taxpayers do it. And when we have a return of $21 to $1 on expenditures going to a customs agent, how can we say that it is not fiscally responsible to fund those agents who enforce the laws of this country, to collect that which is coming in from foreign sources, to protect the jobs of this country, to protect the international agreements of this country.

No, ladies and gentlemen, it is not fiscal responsibility to abandon our duty. We are standing here once again saying let us abdicate; let us abdicate the responsibility of protecting the people of this country; let us abdicate the responsibility of protecting the jobs of this country; let us just leave it wide open and hope for the best.

That is what we are talking about if we are going to abandon the expenditure of these funds.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I will be brief. I rise in support of the Coleman amendment. Let me say that I have on occasion supported the gentleman from Minnesota in an across-the-board cut where I thought it was necessary and prudent to do so.

Having had some background in tax administration, I want for the record to illustrate what we are doing if we cut deeper into the Internal Revenue Service budget. The Frenzel amendment will save $100 million in IRS outlays, but lose $600 million in uncollected revenue's. That is no bargain. The reason I was prompted to speak again was that I heard someone on the floor say, "Look, the issue is do we get involved and address this Federal budget deficit or do we not? If you do not vote for this across-the-board cut, then you do not care about deficits."

I say if we are willing to cut the muscle out of our ability to enforce our tax laws, then we do not care about the deficit. If we really care about this country's fiscal policy, aside from correcting the structural imbalances in our fiscal policy, we also have to care, it seems to me, about preserving the ability to enforce our tax laws.

For purposes of this debate, I want to put in the record some of the numbers. There is about $90 billion that we ought to be collecting in Federal taxes that we are not now collecting, $90 billion in taxes that ought to be paid that are not being paid. This tax gap is expected to double in 5 years.

How do we get them paid? Through better and stronger tax enforcement.

We have about $30 billion in accounts receivable down at the IRS at the present time. Incidentally, accounts receivable is growing at a faster rate than tax collections in this country. We have cut by nearly one-half the percentage of examinations and audits because the manpower has diminished down at the IRS.

In 1976 we had 2.6 percent of the returns examined by the IRS. In 1986, it is estimated to be only 1.2 percent.

As I said earlier, the Grace Commission says we ought to have 7,500 more people to properly enforce the tax laws.

Criminal investigations, cuttng 74 positions. Staff for investigations and collections, 1,000 less positions in 1986 than in 1985. The IRS prepared its 1986 budget cutting resources for collections by 801 positions.

□ 1500

As I said, there is reported to be $8.5 billion in active delinquent accounts, but accounts receivable are nearly $30 billion down at the IRS. Now, again I am not very anxious or very interested to come down here and be a public relations person for the Internal Revenue system, and I cannot think of a position I would less rather be in than to come down here and push for the IRS. But it seems to me that those who talk about law and order and those who talk about the Federal deficit are not doing a great service to the fiscal policy of this country or helping to solve the terrible problems we have by suggesting that we have to cut more muscle out of our ability to enforce our tax laws.

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from North Dakota yield?

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. PURSELL. If I read my numbers correctly on the Frenzel amendment, he is making an increase with his amendment; if it is adopted, he increases Customs Service by 11.2 percent. And in respect to the gentleman's concern on IRS, he offers his amendment with a 2.3-percent increase. So I think our language gets a little loose here and we lose track of the discipline of appropriate language. We are not talking about cuts here at all. We are not talking about reductions. The debate here today should be on the degree of the Frenzel amendment in respect to how much more we reduce the budget in respect to what it is over 1985. It is not a cut, it is not a reduction, it is how much of an increase the Frenzel amendment will give us as compared to what the committee is recommending.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. I understand what the gentleman was saying. I was standing here for about 4 minutes talking about specific numbers in the enforcement of our tax laws. We have cut the ability to enforce our tax laws dramatically in the examinations, the accounts receivable, criminal investigations, and dozens and dozens of areas. And I have said there is $90 billion out there that is not now being collected this year. We have a budget deficit of $200 billion, and I hear someone come down to the well of this House and say if we do not vote to cut further the Internal Revenue Service budget, which will further diminish our ability to enforce our tax laws, that we do not care about the deficit.

That does not make any sense to me, that kind of a statement. By that logic, we save a penny and lose a nickel. If you care about the deficit, it seems to me you develop a revenue system and then develop the mechanism to enforce the collection of revenues in that system. We are not now doing that. The numbers are clear. The numbers on tax enforcement that I have used come from the GAO and other sources, including the IRS. There is not any dispute about those numbers at all. We have seen a substantial diminution of our ability to enforce our tax laws. If you care about that at all, it seems to me we ought to get involved not just this time but next year and follow the Grace Commission report that everybody around here says they agree with and do what we need to do to enforce these tax laws through a responsible Internal Revenue System.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the Frenzel amendment.

Mr. Chairman, with all respect for my dear friend, the gentleman from Minnesota, I rise regretfully to oppose his amendment.

If you are opposed to the flood of narcotics coming into this country, cocaine, heroin, marijuana, and all of these other evil substances, then you must oppose the Frenzel amendment. If you want to increase Federal revenues, then you must oppose the Frenzel amendment.

Let us look at this matter. There are some 1,500 additional customs agents who will be put into the field by this amendment. They will bring into the Federal Treasury a total of $782 million in additional Federal revenues that otherwise would not be brought in.

With all respect for my dear friend, the gentleman from Minnesota, his amendment is penny-wise and pound-foolish. But let us look beyond that matter. Let us look at what is happening to America.

Last year we had a trade deficit of $123 billion. This year our trade deficit is going to go from $150 to $170 billion. Four billion dollars of that deficit is going to be due to counterfeit goods coming into this country including things like medicines, and like birth control pills, computer chips, computers, auto parts, textiles, aircraft parts, parts for the space shuttle, eyewear, agricultural chemicals, pesticides, pharmaceuticals, and medical devices, as well as sporting goods and a plethora of other manufactured goods. The entire gamut of industrial and commercial supplies into this country is being counterfeited, that is marked with the logo or trademark of respected U.S. manufacturers when in fact made by someone not entitled to do so.

The first line of defense against this is the Customs Service. Each and every one of those billions of dollars that we lose in foreign trade means 25,000 unemployed Americans who are on the streets. Counterfeits, customs frauds, mislabeling, misdirection, dumping, unfair subsidization, and quota violations are all protected against by the Customs Service, who regrettably are far too few and far too overworked to protect America's interests.

If you want to protect American jobs and American industry, then vote against the Frenzel amendment so we can get the Customs agents there to look after the protection of American jobs and American industry.

Remember that the Customs Service even looks at the smuggling of high-tech goods out of this country to the Communist bloc. If you want to make that easier, then by all means vote for the Frenzel amendment.

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I will not yield right now.

What is at stake here is adequate enforcement of the trade and customs laws which protect the United States and its citizens, which bring in revenue, which protect American jobs. These laws prohibit counterfeits and illegal activities of that kind which cost America jobs and investments for the future. And remember counterfeits threaten the health and safety of consumers. Customs agents prevent unsafe counterfeit goods from coming in. That protection would be reduced by this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this is an investment, not an expenditure.

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Chairman, I would again have to suggest to the gentleman that the Frenzel amendment gives Customs an 11.2-percent increase.

Mr. DINGELL. Yes, I heard the gentleman make that point, and the difference between the figures in terms of revenue under the Frenzel amendment to the Customs Service is about $300 million that will not be collected and many jobs lost to American workers.

Now, I have not talked about the Intenal Revenue Service. I have not talked about the other revenue-producing agencies that are at stake here. The hard fact of the matter is that the Frenzel amendment, although it looks mighty good, is unfortunately simplistic and simply is going to cost the taxpayers money and is going to cost America jobs.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce for yielding.

I think it is important for the Members on the other side who may be thinking about supporting the Frenzel amendment and voting against my amendment to his amendment to understand, when we talk about additions to Customs, what we are talking about. You are right, instead of 1,687 with the Frenzel amendment, we will cut 540 from that number. That is the reality of it.

What we are trying to do is get to 1981 levels, and I would submit to the gentleman that, yes, when the committee did its work and made these increases—and, by the way, they did not meet all the increases that were requested by Members of this body—we knew we did not have the funds to do that, and that we had to make cuts in the appropriate places.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me to reclaim my time, each and every one of those dollars spent on the Customs Service brings in $21. There is not a business in this country that would not spend a huge sum of money to get back a 21-to-1 return.

So if you want to vote prudently, for efficient expenditure of public money, for fiscal good sense, vote against the Frenzel amendment and vote to bring in this additional money, to keep out illegal goods, and to protect American jobs.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the Coleman amendment.

Mr. Chairman, if I had known that my amendment would evoke such spirited oratory, I would have brought it up on Saturday night sometime when we could command a better audience.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment, I think, has been overdescribed, as have the abilities of some of the agencies which would be funded under this particular bill.

My amendment does not score anything against the President's budget. My amendment is scored against last year's discretionary spending.

□ 1510

One of the gentlemen said we are getting back to 1981 levels. I will accept a 1981 level of any function of Government spending at any time. I think the taxpayers would be very gratified.

But all I am trying to do now is to put the discretionary amount in total—not each one separately. Some will be a little up, some a little down—but the total of discretionary spending will remain at the 1985 level.

My amendment has been called today penny-wise and pound-foolish because I seek to save the taxpayers some money in spending. Under that definition, I suspect that any amendment that seeks to cut will strike at some vital Government service and therefore be pound foolish.

We have been told that Customs, which has mainly a commercial function, is the only thing between us and the ultimate destruction by cocaine. It is going to stop all the narcotics coming into the country. It is, in addition, going to stop terrorists and, even more wonderfully, it is going to put all the textile workers in the United States who have ever been out of work back to work.

The fact is there is no guarantee that Customs can do any of these things. As a matter of fact, it was last week when I introduced an amendment that would have made a slight reduction to another bill when those who are concerned about narcotics—and I share their deep concern—said that I was going to cut the DEA and the FBI and therefore are going to unleash a flood of terrorists and of illegal drugs upon the land. That was a red herring and so is this. I doubt that Customs will be undernourished with an 11-percent increase. I doubt it will happen as a result of this particular amendment.

With respect to the IRS, there have been complaints that if we take a certain amount of money away we will lose large amounts of revenue. May I say that after giving effect to my amendment, the IRS will still have an increase and that increase will be 2.3 percent.

After giving effect to my amendment, the Customs Service will have an 11-percent increase, which they probably cannot hire enough people to handle. An 11-percent increase is a big increase in any given year.

But an illusion persists that somehow these agencies bring in money by themselves. Members seem to believe they create money by the simple addition of personnel. The problem is the personnel have to be trained. It may be that somewhere down the line they are going to help bring in collections somewhere. But the blunt fact is that we do not know where the personnel are going, and we do not know who they are going to be, and we do not know how long it is going to take to train them, before they bring in the first dime that was not coming in anyway.

As far as I am concerned, and the taxpayers are concerned, one in the hand is worth a thousand in the bush. I think the taxpayers would rather see a reduction in spending than some fabled increase in tax revenues out in the never-never land of the future.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not deserve as much debate as it has gotten. It is a simple reduction of spending.

If the House does not want a freeze, if the House is afraid to vote against very large increases in spending, if the House does not think an 11-percent increase for a very important agency of Government is enough, then the House should forget about the Coleman amendment and simply vote against my amendment. That is a very easy way to do it.

The Coleman amendment reduces my amendment from about $190 million down to some $30 million. It would be I think easier to vote against my amendment. I do not disregard the strong concerns of all the people who participated in the debate and I do not mean to denigrate any of their arguments. I only say we have taken a lot of time talking about $192 million, and I think Members of the House know whether they want to vote yes or no.

There are some of those who have told their constituents at home that they want to reduce Federal spending, and I think they will want to vote for my amendment.

I think there are others who are less concerned and who are interested in departments of Government or specific concerns in their districts, and they will want to vote against it.

I hope there will be a majority on my side.

Mr. LOWERY of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by my good friend from Minnesota, Mr. FRENZEL. While I commend the gentleman for his responsible approach in attempting to reduce discretionary spending in this bill, I must object to the breadth of this amendment insofar as it negatively impacts our Customs Service.

As we all know, the U.S. Customs Service is a major source of revenue for the Federal Government, as well as a vital law enforcement agency. Indeed, during fiscal year 1984, Customs collected over $12.5 billion, representing a return of $21.06 for every dollar received in appropriations.

Besides collecting and protecting revenue, Customs is also involved in many other programs that protect U.S. technological materials and information from reaching unfriendly hands, trace the flow of crime-related money to help reduce organized crime, and protect U.S. industry from unfair foreign competition.

To be sure, Mr. Chairman, Customs' role some 196 years after its inception has been dramatically expanded. Unfortunately, its appropriation has not kept pace. Since 1980, the number of inspection staff has increased by only 2.4 percent and the number of import specialists has actually decreased by 8.5 percent. As a result, we have witnessed a significant increase in import fraud and evasion.

As a new member of the Treasury Appropriations Subcommittee, I listened intently to the testimony presented by Customs officials, by the Ports of Seattle, Los Angeles, and Baltimore, and by many of our colleagues representing major ports of entry. Indeed, today Customs supervises some 300 ports of entry across the country. The conclusion I reached is the unanimous conclusion of the subcommittee, and that is: The potential effect of improper staffing levels on our economy, Treasury revenues, and contraband export enforcement demands that we reassess current Customs Service employment levels.

One final point, Mr. Chairman. I am deeply concerned about the Federal budget deficit. However, budget constraints should not prevent an increase in Customs Service staff positions. It makes little sense to curtail staff of a revenue-raising agency like the Customs Service, when staff limits cause even greater losses to the Treasury.

In closing, I would like to commend the distinguished gentleman from California, Chairman ROYBAL, and the ranking member, my good friend from New Mexico, Mr. SKEEN, for their able leadership in bringing to this House a responsible bill.

I urge defeat of this amendment, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

The question was taken; and the chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXIII, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the pending question following the quorum call. Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska and Mr. WHITTAKER changed their votes from "aye" to "no."

Mr. NATCHER, Mr. SPENCE, Mrs. BOGGS, and Mr. GOODLING changed their votes from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the "revenue foregone" subsidy which compensates the Postal Service for losses that result from the free delivery of mail to the blind and handicapped and for reductions in postage rates for nonprofit organizations.

First of all, let me state that I have received a great deal of mail from my district detailing the devastating effects of increased postal rates upon the blind and handicapped and nonprofit organizations.

Nonprofit organizations provide many of the services which we, in our attempts to reduce Government spending, are asking of the private sector—services which provide needed social services vital to our society.

Now is not the time to further burden these worthy organizations; already many such organizations have suffered under postal rate increases, and the viability of nonprofit organizations would be jeopardized if we were to cut the revenue foregone subsidies provided to the Postal Service.

I strongly support the revenue foregone subsidy at or near last year's level; however, H.R. 3036 contains far too many programs that are funded above last year's level. In light of the current budget deficit, I cannot support this bill because of this excessive funding.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to the bill?

Are there amendments in order under clause 2(c) of rule XXI?

Mr. COBEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in a few minutes, the motion to rise will probably be made. I urge my colleagues to vote against the motion because we cannot, in good conscience, continue to allow the FEC to go unmonitored, without any congressional oversight.

If the motion to rise is defeated, I plan to offer an amendment which would prohibit the funds appropriated by this act to be used for the purpose of issuing any regulations which do not comply with the decision of the U.S. Supreme Court in Ellis versus the Brotherhood of Railroad and Airline Clerks.

Over a year ago, the Supreme Court ruled in the Ellis case that if union members objected to the use of compulsory union dues for purposes of political contributions, that union members were entitled to a reduction in their union dues. The FEC has not taken steps to enforce this decision.

It is important that we stand up for the rights of the working men and women of this country. My amendment would simply ensure that in the future, the FEC considers the first amendment rights of union members.

In front of me, I have affidavits and lists of names of thousands of individuals who have filed complaints against their unions, because their union dues were being used for political purposes. This is the stack before me, right here.

There is no doubt that many unions continue to use compulsory union dues to support a political cause or candidate.

Again, I urge you to defeat the motion to rise and to vote for my amendment because you believe that compulsory union dues should not be used for political purposes. But more importantly, lend your support if you believe that your responsibility is to ensure that the independent agencies that we fund, such as the FEC, do not work outside the law.

Today, I ask you to protect our system of government and the sanctity of American law. If you vote your conscience, I think that you will also vote against the motion to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there amendments in order under clause 2(c) of rule XXI?

If not, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. ROYBAL].

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

● Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to express my support for certain provisions of H.R. 3036, the Treasury, Postal Service, and general Government appropriations bill for fiscal year 1986. As chairman of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, I am specifically interested in and supportive of the funding provisions that will provide resources to attack the illicit drug problem that plagues our country. The ravages of drugs do not discriminate by color, age, sex, locale, physical handicap, or socioeconomic status. Our strategy against drug abuse and drug trafficking must include efforts to reduce both the demand for and the supply of drugs. This bill provides much needed funding for the drug law enforcement efforts of the Customs Service.

For salaries and expenses of the U.S. Customs Service, the bill provides $725 million for fiscal year 1986. This is an increase of nearly $86 million over the administration's request and $81.5 million more than the 1985 level.

Customs is one of our Nation's key drug suppression agencies with primary responsibility for detection and interdiction of illicit narcotics at our borders. Customs is also heavily involved in financial investigations of major drug traffickers. Because of Customs' important role in drug enforcement, I have been greatly distressed by the administration's attempts to significantly reduce Customs inspectors and other enforcement personnel during each of the last 5 years. The administration has said how supportive it is of drug law enforcement efforts. Yet, in every year, the budget has proposed that Customs be cut drastically in areas that impact directly on drug enforcement.

The Appropriations Committee has seen fit to restore 887 positions that the administration proposed to eliminate in 1986 including 206 inspectors. Moreover, H.R. 3036 provides funding for 800 additional Customs positions—650 new positions and full year funding for 150 positions added in the 1985 supplemental appropriations bill. These extra positions will significantly improve Customs narcotics interdiction capability. I commend the committee for its committed and strategic increase in Customs personnel. At a time when separate reports by the State Department, the United Nations International Narcotics Control Board, the House Foreign Affairs Committee and the Select Committee on Narcotics have all indicated increased narcotics production and trafficking worldwide, we can ill afford to cut our force of Customs inspectors and other enforcement personnel. The additional positions included in this bill will also generate substantial revenues which will help to reduce the deficit.

H.R. 3036 also provides $8 million for the Customs forfeiture fund, the full amount requested in the budget. Amounts deposited in the fund include seized and forfeited currency and any proceeds beyond the expenses of seizures and forfeiture. Customs is permitted to use these funds for expenses related to seizure, awards to informants, purchase of evidence, and certain other purposes, subject to appropriations.

The Customs appropriation also includes $60,425,000 for the Customs Air Interdiction Program. This is the full amount of the 1986 budget request and a $16 million increase over the 1985 funding level.

I am happy to see that this increase for the Air Interdiction Program is included because it reflects continued support and recognition of the need to bolster this component of our Interdiction Program that has not received enough attention in the past. The use of aircraft to smuggle drugs, especially cocaine, across our southern border has been increasing. There can be no positive results in disrupting the operations of despicable drug smugglers unless resources, both financial and technical are provided. Programs such as Customs Air Interdiction effort, that stretches from Florida across the southwest and into California, are needed to address the serious threat of air trafficking. At this time, I also want to commend the marine component of Customs Interdiction Program for the fine work it has been doing in southern Florida under most difficult circumstances.

H.R. 3036 also includes funds for the Internal Revenue Service and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms. Both of these agencies have become increasingly involved in narcotics enforcement in recent years. IRS has greatly expanded its financial investigations of suspected drug kingpins and is looking more closely at possible violations of currency reporting requirements that may be narcotics related. BATF has taken a more active role in narcotics case that also involve weapons violations. I support the funding levels provided for these two agencies.

There is no doubt in my mind that we must continue to effect legislation that sends a clear message to the American people, agency heads, and would-be smugglers, that we will continue to dedicate our efforts in Congress to address this problem of epidemic proportion. I am confident that the provisions mentioned earlier under H.R. 3036 will facilitate the mission of drug law enforcement and interdiction to be carried out by the Treasury Department.●

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Chairman, today we are considering the Department of the Treasury, Postal Service, and independent agencies appropriations bill, and I urge all my colleagues to support H.R. 3036. I am particularly concerned that Members of Congress support full funding for "Revenue Foregone" ensuring that the hundreds of worthy charitable organizations and our newspapers and magazines are allowed to continue to reach the public through use of preferred mail rates. Historically, the Congress in its wisdom has allowed private charitable organizations to use preferred mail rates in order for these groups to provide services and communications to its membership, including such organizations for the blind, handicapped, and other groups who depend upon these preferred mail rates to provide vitally needed services and to be able to solicit contributions from the public to support their program services. Additionally, thousands of rural Americans depend on their county or local newspapers as a vital link to their communities without which local communication would not be possible.

H.R. 3036 provides for $922 million to support the preferred mail rates offered by the U.S. Postal Service under Revenue Foregone, which will still require a minimal increase in the preferred rates even at this funding level. Nevertheless, without full funding of Revenue Foregone, many of these charitable organizations and newspapers could not survive because it would provide triple or drastically increase the postal rates for these groups. Additionally, it would not be cost-effective for newspapers and magazines to be forced to increase their subscription rates to meet the added cost of the increased rates which the Postal Service would have to automatically apply should this appropriation be reduced.

For these reasons, I urge all my colleagues to support continuity in voting for H.R. 3036 and the full funding of Revenue Foregone. I am convinced that this is an excellent investment by the American public in securing the services of many charitable organizations and in maintaining communications throughout our expansive country.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. ROYBAL].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SPRATT changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

So the motion was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BEILENSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3036) making appropriations for the Treasury Department, the U.S. Postal Service, the Executive Office of the President, and certain Independent Agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mr. Torricelli for, with Mr. Boulter against.

Mr. HALL of Ohio changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

Mr. MOODY changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, and include extraneous material, on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BONER of Tennessee). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Saunders, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following date, the President approved and signed a bill of the House of the following title:

On July 29, 1985:

H.R. 1617. An act to authorize appropriations to the Secretary of Commerce for the programs of the National Bureau of Standards for fiscal year 1986, and for other purposes.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 960) "An act to amend the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, the Arms Export Control Act, and other Acts to authorize appropriations for the fiscal year 1986 for international security and development assistance, the Peace Corps, the Inter-American Foundation, and the African Development Foundation, and for other purposes."

REPORT ON RESOLUTION WAIVING CERTAIN POINTS OF ORDER AGAINST CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 3011, DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATION ACT, 1986

Mr. HALL of Ohio, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 99-238) on the resolution (H. Res. 240) waiving certain points of order against consideration of the bill (H.R. 3011) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 3008, FEDERAL EQUITABLE PAY PRACTICES ACT OF 1985

Mr HALL of Ohio, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 99-239) on the resolution (H. Res. 241) providing for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3008) to promote equitable pay practices and to eliminate discrimination within the Federal Civil Service, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION ACT, 1986

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3067) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to not to exceed 1 hour, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN] and myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON].

The motion was agreed to.

□ 1629

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 3067, with Mr. HERTEL of Michigan in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the unanimous consent agreement, the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON].

□ 1630

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, this afternoon we bring to you the annual District of Columbia appropriation bill for fiscal year 1986. This, Mr. Chairman, is truly a bipartisan bill; it comes to you from the Committee on Appropriations with a written endorsement from Mr. David Stockman, Director of the Office of Management and Budget, who commends the committee for its "responsible action" in keeping with the administration's request.

The bill will provide a total of $2.7 billion in budget authority for the operation of the District of Columbia government during fiscal year 1986. This is $325 million above last year's level and consists of Federal funds of $532 million and local funds of $2.2 billion.

In Federal funds, Mr. Chairman, we recommend a virtual freeze at last year's level—in fact the $532 million we recommend is $1.2 million below last year's appropriation due to three nonrecurring items—the criminal justice initiative of $8.4 million; the education initiative of $1.5 million; and the Presidential inaugural expenses of $2.3 million.

These Federal funds which total $532 million consist of four items:

A Federal payment of $425 million which is at last year's level. For the first time in several years, there is no increase recommended in the Federal payment.

Our reimbursement to the District for water and sewer services furnished to Federal facilities is $30.1 million or $6 million above last year's level due to an increase in rates.

The Federal contribution to the police, fire, teachers, and judges retirement funds is $52 million and reflects no increase over the fiscal 1985 appropriation.

A Federal payment of $25 million for St. Elizabeths Hospital which is $5 million above last year's appropriation.

One of the crucial issues we have faced over the past few years is the financing of St. Elizabeths Hospital which is a Federal facility for the care and treatment of the mentally ill. The District reimbursed the Federal Government for the cost of care and treatment received by District residents. The administration 4 years ago embarked on a 10-year program to phase down Federal support. The Congress last year passed Public Law 98-621 which establishes the administrative and financial responsibilities of the Federal and District governments and provides for transitional payments to the District until 1991 when the city will assume full administrative and financial control of the institution.

Mr. Chairman, as I mentioned a moment ago, this bill reflects a reduction of $1.2 million in Federal funds below last year's level, and we are below the committee's tentative 302(b) budget resolution allocations by $8 million.

DISTRICT FUNDS

In District funds, the bill includes $2.7 billion of which $2.4 billion is for operating expenses and $249 million is for the capital outlay program.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, let me try to clarify what we mean when we refer to District funds. This $2.4 billion operating budget is financed with Federal funds of $532 million with the balance of $1.9 billion or almost 80 percent of the operating budget coming from the District's own locally raised revenues such as income and property taxes and various fines and fees. So I would ask the Members to keep that in mind as we consider this bill.

The capital outlay program of $249 million will be financed by issuing long-term bonds which the District has been able to do since last year at a lower rate than the rate it was paying to borrow from the Federal Treasury.

GOVERNMENTAL DIRECTION AND SUPPORT

For the 23 activities funded under the governmental direction and support appropriation, the committee recommends a total of $99,342,000 or an increase of $11,144,000 above last year's level. The bill includes the full budget request of $661,000 and 18 positions for the District of Columbia auditor. Included in our recommendation is an increase of $109,000 for three new positions to expand the office's audit capability. The committee's approval of three new positions rather than the transfer of filled positions from another agency will allow the auditor to select staff he feels is competent to carry out the required tasks. For the Department of Finance and Revenue, the committee recommends $19,034,000 and 553 positions, including an increase of $143,000 to fund three new revenue-generating initiatives: a homestead exemption audit; an increase in the audit level for sales and use taxes and unclaimed property; and a street vendor compliance program. These three new programs are expected to generate a total of $2.6 million in additional revenues.

We recommend $55,000 for the newly established D.C. Commission on Baseball which is responsible for assisting and advising the Mayor and council regarding the establishment of a professional baseball team in the District. The commission plans to raise $45,000 from private sources which will give it a total budget of $100,000. According to testimony we received, market analyses and demographic studies show that of the eight cities competing for what is believed to be two expansion teams, the Washington area has the highest per capita income as well as the sixth largest population market and the seventh largest media market. The commission has embarked on a campaign to sell 10,000 season tickets this summer to demonstrate area support for a major league baseball team which could be ready to play at RFK Stadium as soon as 1987. The announcement of the two winning cities is expected to be made by December 1985 when league owners meet to vote on recommendations of the baseball commissioner. Mr. Chairman, our committee congratulates the Mayor and the council for their leadership and foresight in creating the D.C. Baseball Commission and for the aggressive manner in which the District government is pursuing the acquisition of a major league team for the Nation's Capital. We believe that Washington, DC, is the ideal location for the next expansion major league baseball team.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT AND REGULATION

The committee recommends a total of $99,525,000 for the 13 agencies and commissions responsible for economic development and regulation in the District. Our recommendation reflects an increase of $27,613,000 of which $25 million or 91 percent is for four agencies—the Departments of Housing and Community Development, Employment Services, and Consumer and Regulatory Affairs, and the Office of Business and Economic Development. We recommend increases of $7,845,000 for the Department of Housing and Community Development including $5 million for a new rent supplement program which will make payments on behalf of qualified low-income tenants to owners of private dwellings whose rent falls within certain standards. We also recommend an increase of $735,000 for this Department for a Citywide Home Purchase Assistance Program and $700,000 for low-rent housing support services. We recommend increases of $4,520,000 for the Department of Employment Services which provides opportunities for District residents to prepare for, find, and maintain gainful employment. Of this increase, $2,982,000 will be used for various jobs programs throughout the city and $1,130,000 will fund 48 current staff positions which were previously funded with Federal grants.

For the Department of Consumer and Regulatory Affairs, we recommend $28,063,000 or an increase of $5,178,000 which includes $2,041,000 for personnel and implementation costs for an automated data processing system in support of the One-Stop Business and Permit Center and other departmental operations. The committee has also approved increases of $80,000 and three positions for the Pesticide, Air Monitoring and Hazardous Waste Program, and $238,000 to carry out the Department's responsibilities under the Anacostia Tributary Restoration Agreement.

The largest increase percentagewise over last year's level is for the Office of Business and Economic Development whose budget totals $9,303,000 and reflects increases of $7,630,000 basically for three new programs designed to stimulate economic activity in the District. More than half of the increase or $4,048,000 is for the Economic Development Corporation whose objective is to help meet the needs of small and minority businesses and encourage private-sector participation. In addition, $3,332,000 is for the Business Purchase Assistance Program to provide down payments to help purchase existing businesses or storefronts and further the revitalization of commercial corridors in neighborhood shopping areas. The committee has also approved $250,000 for a new International Business Development Program to encourage businesses to establish an office in the District.

PUBLIC SAFETY AND JUSTICE

The committee recommends $535,416,000 or an increase of $33,133,000 for the city's various public safety activities. A total of $148,124,000 is included for the Metropolitan Police Department. The committee has retained language in last year's bill which requires the District to maintain an average strength of 3,880 uniformed officers for fiscal 1986. For the fire department, we recommend $59,863,000, an increase of $4,203,000 above the fiscal 1985 appropriation. Bill language is included requiring the District to pay employees who retired from the department prior to February 15, 1980, a one-time lump sum bonus of 3 percent of their annuity by September 30, 1985. This payment results from an agreement entered into on March 27, 1985, between District officials and the collective-bargaining unit for District firefighters. The committee has been advised that new 1-hour breathing masks are finally being purchased. The first order for 173 masks was placed on June 12, 1985, and the remaining 135 masks are to be ordered in July 1985. The initial appropriation for these masks was made 3 years ago in fiscal 1983.

Mr. Chairman, let me point out that one of the areas the committee is concerned about involves fire protection in ward 2. The committee has directed that Engine Company No. 3 located at 439 New Jersey Ave., NW., not be closed. If the District continues to feel there is a need to close the facility, evidence supporting that action is to be submitted to the committee for its approval at least 90 days prior to the city taking any action to close the station.

For the National Guard, Mr. Chairman, we recommend $710,000 including $10,000 which will be matched with Federal funds to provide partial scholarship assistance for officers to meet minimum educational requirements of an undergraduate degree.

The bill includes $59,714,000 for the operation of the District's courts in fiscal 1986. We reviewed the court's request for judicial insurance coverage which was prompted by the liability exposure created by the Supreme Court decision in the case Pullian versus Allen. We also raised this issue with the corporation counsel who testified that the District is self-insured and the judges and court employees are included under this self-insurance umbrella even though the inclusion of the courts' employees is not codified in the D.C. Code. Rather than recommend an appropriation for judicial insurance coverage, the committee urges the Mayor and the council to pursue the expedited passage of legislation amending the D.C. Code to ensure appropriate coverage for the court's employees comparable to that provided for medical employees.

For the Department of Corrections, we recommend the full request of $124,602,000 which reflects a net increase of $2,238,000. Mr. Chairman, a recent court order limits the population at the D.C. jail to approximately 900 fewer inmates than are there now. This places the Mayor in an untenable position—he can't release them; yet if he does not reduce the population at that facility, he may be held in contempt of court. We have included report language asking District officials to consider all possible alternatives before moving inmates from the D.C. jail to the Lorton Reformatory. Construction of a new jail is being discussed, but for the present, the Mayor clearly needs some flexibility if he is to successfully resolve the problem. And it is not the committee's intention to restrict the Mayor's flexibility. We are simply asking him to consider all possible alternatives.

PUBLIC EDUCATION SYSTEM

We recommend a total of $515,005,000 for the six activities included under the public education system appropriation. This allowance is $25,050,000 above last year's appropriations.

Mr. Chairman, we believe the District's elected board and its appointed superintendent are doing an excellent job educating our young people. I know that most of you who have been here for any period of time realize that this board and superintendent place the interests of students foremost on their agenda. And there seems to be a feeling of cooperation between the Mayor, the council, and the school board as it relates to funding levels for the school system, and that same cooperation seems to be evident between the school board and the superintendent. All of this bodes well for the students. And for the first time in at least 16 years, the public school system is showing an increase in enrollments. While the increase is modest, it nonetheless reverses the trend which saw student enrollment drop from 145,584 in 1969 to 87,397 last year.

We have asked the board and the superintendent to study the student dropout rate, which is presently 16.9 percent, and submit a report to the committee prior to next year's hearing with a plan and recommendations on ways to reduce the rate. It is our feeling, Mr. Chairman, that many of our problems start with truancy and student dropouts, and the committee is ready to assist the board and the superintendent in whatever way we can to encourage students to stay in school and be graduated.

We recommend $15,002,000 for the public library in fiscal 1986. This allowance is $1,057,000 above last year's appropriation and includes increases for the book fund, for building repairs and service restoration in the original children's rooms in five libraries, and to improve technical support for the library's computer system. Mr. Chairman, the District has many outstanding employees, and the public library director, Dr. Hardy Franklin, is certainly one of those. He was named "Public Librarian of the Year" for 1984, and we want to congratulate him. He is certainly doing a fine job. For the Commission on the Arts and Humanities, the bill includes the full budget request of $1,673,000. This allowance reflects an increase of $546,000 and includes $500,000 for a new grants program to major institutions.

HUMAN SUPPORT SERVICES

The committee recommends $614,347,000 for human support services during fiscal 1986, an increase of $64,560,000 above last year's appropriation. There are 10 departments or activities funded under this appropriation heading with the largest by far being the Department of Human Services with a budget of $511,576,000 for fiscal 1986, an increase of $54,809,000 above the fiscal year 1985 level. This department provides social, economic, and health support systems to those who are unable to do so for themselves. Included in our recommendation is an increase of $2,161,000 to provide emergency shelter and support services through contractual arrangements. The bill includes an additional $1,164,000 to expand the District's Day Care Program and $384,000 for a new program to provide day care for 3- to 5-year-olds enrolled in nursery school programs in the public schools for part of the day. The committee recommends an increase of $2.4 million to cover inflationary costs and expand the Foster Care Program, and an additional $2,847,000 to increase the number of placements of developmentally disabled individuals. The largest increase in this department is $21,547,000 for the Medicaid/Medical Charities Program which will have a total of $153,450,000 in District funds for fiscal 1986. Over half of this increase consists of a transfer in of $13,848,000 from the St. Elizabeths Hospital account. We also recommend increases of $7,415,000 in skilled and intermediate nursing facilities.

Mr. Chairman, one of the major problems facing this country is drug abuse. In this bill we recommend an increase of $5 million to provide prevention, education, and detoxification programs to reduce the incidence of drug abuse and $1 million for the department to develop an action plan in conjunction with the public school system for drug abuse prevention.

For the Office on Aging, we recommend an increase of $1,537,000 which includes $200,000 for 10 new nutrition sites and $200,000 for social and supportive services at a new multipurpose senior center. We recommend an increase of $51,000 and two positions for the Commission for Women.

PUBLIC WORKS

We recommend $193,741,000 for the four activities in this appropriation title. This is $9,522,000 above last year's appropriation. We recommend the full budget request of $96.5 million for the District's share of operating expenses and debt service for metrorail and metrobus operations in fiscal year 1986. For the Department of Public Works, we recommend $93,151,000, an increase of $9,519,000 above the fiscal 1985 level. This department, Mr. Chairman, is responsible for maintaining the District's physical infrastructure, collecting and disposing of solid waste, administering motor vehicle regulations, and maintaining most of the District's vehicles. We recommend increases of $275,000 for 1,000 new parking meters and $35,000 for an additional 100 vehicle boots. As hard as it may be to believe, Mr. Chairman, there are occasions, although rare, when parking meters and vehicle boots are actually stolen. We also recommend an increase of $1,657,000 to repair sidewalks, streets, and bridges, and $160,000 to purchase a multipurpose emergency vehicle which the department testified will provide the most economical and efficient means for handling emergencies and public hazards.

WASHINGTON CONVENTION CENTER FUND

The bill includes $8,371,000 for the fiscal year 1986 general fund contribution to the Washington Convention Center. Our recommendation reflects a net increase of $1,632,000 and includes $2,130,000 to purchase the food service equipment. Convention center officials testified that the purchase of this equipment will increase concession revenue earned by the center by 100 percent.

REPAYMENT OF LOANS AND INTEREST

We recommend $198,409,000 to repay loans and interest on the District's $2 billion in outstanding loans borrowed over the years to finance its construction projects. This allowance includes $1.2 million for interest on advances to the Unemployment Compensation Trust Fund.

REPAYMENT OF GENERAL FUND DEFICIT

Mr. Chairman, once again we recommend that $20 million be applied toward reducing the District's accumulated general fund deficit which stood at $269,860,000 as of September 30, 1984, down one-third from its peak of $387.5 million in 1980. The budget included $5 million for this purpose. The additional $15 million recommended by the committee is to be identified by the Mayor and made available through reductions in amounts included in the bill or from additional revenues. Mr. Chairman, we do not believe the deficit problem should be resolved by selling bonds and saddling District taxpayers with additional interest costs for the next several years. Selling bonds would simply exchange the deficit for a long-term liability, and the additional interest costs could very well exceed the amount the committee has asked the city to set aside each year for deficit reduction purposes. Instead, we plan to recommend a standard reduction of $20 million each year to be used exclusively to reduce the deficit.

SHORT-TERM BORROWINGS

The bill includes $3,750,000 for interest on short-term borrowings which the District uses to meet its seasonal cash-flow financing needs. This allowance is $1,250,000 below last year's appropriation and reflects the District's actual experience in the bond market.

CAPITAL OUTLAY

The committee recommends $248,783,000 for 89 projects for the District's Construction Program in fiscal year 1986. These projects will be financed with long-term borrowings on the bond market.

A total of $157,606,000 is recommended for public building construction and includes $10 million for asbestos abatement in the public schools, $12.7 million to complete the renovation of the Washington Center for Aging Services, and $15.1 million to renovate two public housing projects—Carrollsburg Dwellings and James Apartments. It also includes $23,667,000 for the Office of Business and Economic Development to construct an employment center revitalization project and a commercial center revitalization project. A total of $50,124,000 is recommended for 13 highway and bridge projects including $16,926,000 for the reconstruction of the Whitehurst Freeway and $9,265,000 for the Barney Circle-Anacostia Freeway connection. The bill includes $19,635,000 for water and sewer projects and includes $8 million as the District's share of costs to complete the Blue Plains Regional Wastewater Treatment Plant.

Mr. Chairman, the committee is concerned about the delay in repairing and resurfacing the Southeast-Southwest Freeway. Part of the District's share of construction funds was appropriated as far back as 1980. The committee was advised that sections of the freeway have been designed three times because of Federal Highway Administration requirements. The complaints we receive concern not only the deteriorated condition of the roadway, but they also involve the underside of the bridges from which chunks of concrete continue to fall onto vehicles parked in lots under the bridges.

Mr. Chairman, the time to make these repairs and do the reconstruction work required is long overdue, and we urge District and Federal Highway officials to resolve whatever problems there are and get on with the task at hand.

PAY-AS-YOU-GO CAPITAL PROJECTS

Mr. Chairman, in last year's bill the appropriation for "capital outlay" included $8,916,000 requested by the District for so-called pay-as-you-go capital projects to be financed with current operating revenues. The rationale used by the District to justify this request was that these projects were either maintenance-type projects or capital projects that had total costs of $1 million or less, and by funding them with current operating revenues, the debt service on long-term borrowings would be minimized. The Congress concurred in the city's request and included statutory language expressly requiring that "$5,087,000 for fiscal year 1985, $3,531,000 for 1986, and $298,000 for fiscal year 1987 shall be financed from general fund operating revenues". That provision, Mr. Chairman, is a mandate binding on the District, and it provides no legal authority for the use of long-term borrowings for these projects as proposed in the District's fiscal year 1986 budget and financial plans. The District's proposal is contrary to existing law and therefore cannot be accepted by the committee. We have also been advised that such a proposal creates a legal cloud as to all of the capital projects approved in last year's act.

Accordingly, the committee has adjusted the District's fiscal year 1986 financial plan and included the $3,531,000 from general fund operating revenues to fund the fiscal 1986 requirements for pay-as-you-go capital projects as mandated in last year's appropriations act. The committee expects the District government to fully abide by the law.

ENTERPRISE FUNDS

The bill includes $167,388,000 for the four activities funded with enterprise funds. A total of $148,083,000 is included for the Utility Administration of the Department of Public Works. This allowance is $23,973,000 above last year's appropriation and includes increases of $3,373,000 for debt service costs, $5,034,000 for sludge disposal, and $3,793,000 to hire additional personnel and purchase spare parts in order to comply with a consent decree entered into with the Environmental Protection Agency on the operation of the Blue Plains Wastewater Treatment Plant.

The bill includes the budget request of $14,904,000 for the Washington Aqueduct which collects, purifies and pumps potable water. This allowance is $904,000 above the fiscal year 1985 appropriation and includes an increase of $587,000 to cover two rate increases for energy costs.

The committee recommends $4,151,000 in District funds for the Lottery and Charitable Games Control Board which is responsible for regulating charitable games and conducting legalized lotteries in the District. The board testified that the increase of $620,000 and 15 positions above the fiscal year 1985 allowance will be used to increase sales which will ultimately result in additional operating revenues for the District. The board expects to transfer $34.8 million to the District's general fund during fiscal year 1986.

For the Office of Cable Television, we recommend $250,000 for fiscal year 1986. This office will oversee the day-to-day construction and operations of the District's cable television system. Construction is anticipated to start some time in early 1986 with cable service expected in late 1986.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Mr. Chairman, the bill carries a number of general provisions on pages 15 through 26. However, only four of them are new and I will cover them briefly.

Language under section 130 authorizes and ratifies action taken by the Public Service Commission in July 1984 to deregulate streetlighting. Funds in the amount of $14,850,000 are included in the Supplemental Appropriations Act for 1985 (H.R. 2577) to purchase the streetlight plant from manhole to light from the Potomac Electric Power Co. The price was determined in the course of a depreciation study conducted by a national accounting firm.

The second language item under section 131 is the one you probably have read about in the newspapers.

It exempts Members of Congress who live in a State solely for the purpose of attending sessions of Congress from personal property taxes on one motor vehicle used for purposes of attending sessions of Congress. Several members have talked with me about the fact that they pay some form of tax on their vehicles in their home States—it may be called a registration fee or a vehicle tax, but the fee or tax is based on the value of the vehicle, and to be subject to a personal property tax by a jurisdiction where they are residing solely for the purpose of attending sessions of Congress results in double taxation.

This exemption is similar to the income tax exemption for Members which was provided under Public Law 95-67, approved July 19, 1977, which was held constitutional in United States versus Maryland. That decision relied in substantial measure on the Supreme Court's decision in Dameron versus Broadhead where the Court upheld the power of Congress to prohibit the State of Colorado from applying a personal property tax to a Louisiana domiciliary who was a member of the U.S. Air Force stationed at Lowry Air Force Base in Colorado.

Mr. Chairman, our only interest here is to prevent a State or jurisdiction from imposing an ad valorem tax on a vehicle registered by the Member or his spouse in his home State and used by the Member to attend sessions of Congress.

The third language item is under section 132 and designates part of 15th Street, SW, between Independence Avenue and Maine Avenue as "Raoul Wallenberg Place" in honor of the Swedish diplomat who saved the lives of some 100,000 Hungarian Jews during World War II. The one-block section is the site of the future National Holocaust Memorial Museum. We expect appropriate street signs to be erected on each end of the street as soon as possible after this bill is signed into law.

The fourth language item is under section 133 and requires that contracts issued by the District government be awarded on a competitive basis. It is not our intent, Mr. Chairman, to eliminate the city's minority set-aside program which requires each agency to spend at least 35 percent of its contracting dollars with certified minority business enterprises. Rather, our efforts are to retain the set-aside program and encourage competition among minority contractors. Frankly, we are not sure how far this language goes and we are looking into it further.

Mr. Chairman, the members who serve on our subcommittee are to be commended for their dedication and for their sensitivity to the delicate balance between home rule issues and the Federal interest. I want to express my appreciation to each of them for their assistance: the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] who has been a member of this subcommittee for over 30 years and served as chairman for 17 years; the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES]; the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WILSON]; the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SABO]; the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER] who is one of our two new members this year; the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN]; and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLF] who is the second of our two new members.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN], serves as the ranking Republican on our subcommittee, and I must say that if there is any one member who makes the difference on our subcommittee, it is the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He serves as the ranking member on a second subcommittee and he also serves on a third subcommittee; yet he comes to all of our hearings and asks probing and information-providing questions. He certainly does a yeoman's job and I would be remiss if I did not say that his hard work and cooperation are the main reasons we are able to bring to the floor this afternoon a bipartisan bill.

CONCLUSION

Mr. Chairman, this is a good bill—the committee has left the District's budget virtually untouched. We have expressed our concern in those few areas where we felt it was necessary. The District is making very good progress in establishing itself in the financial markets, and in providing services to local residents in a timely manner. The city is on the move with an aggressive economic development program.

We are optimistic about the District, and the bill we bring to you this afternoon is a good bill and I recommend that it be approved.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I rise in strong support of H.R. 3067, the fiscal year 1986 District of Columbia appropriations bill. Article I, section 8, of the U.S. Constitution gives Congress power "To exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever, over such District * * * as may * * * become the Seat of the Government of the United States * * *." Although Congress delegated broad home rule powers to the District of Columbia in 1973, Congress retained the power of the purse. It is that power which we exercise, today.

This appropriations bill does two things. First, it provides a Federal payment from the United States to the District of Columbia. Second, it sets the entire D.C. budget, made up of Federal payment, property tax, income tax, sales tax, estate and gift tax, fees, and any other income.

Under the distinguished leadership of subcommittee Chairman JULIAN DIXON, the subcommittee has adopted a policy of letting the District make its own choices unless what is proposed: (1) is unconstitutional, (2) violates the Home Rule Act, or (3) raises a "Federal question." I note that, although he is an able Representative of the 28th District of California, Chairman DIXON is a native Washingtonian and descended from one of this area's oldest and most distinguished families. He carries on the tradition of civic leadership in Washington set by his forebearers.

Assisting in the preparation of this bill were staff members Migo Miconi, Mary Porter, and Kenny Kraft from appropriations, and Wilhelmina Marshall, liaison from the D.C. Budget Office..

The bill provides $2,689,077,000. Out of this $532,170,000 are Federal funds. This includes a Federal payment of $425 million, which is the same amount as appropriated last year, and as requested this year by the Office of Management and Budget. The balance of the Federal money goes to reimbursement for water and sewer service; retirement for teachers, police, firefighters, and judges; and St. Elizabeths Hospital.

The increase in this bill over last year's version is due to increased tax revenues which the District has raised, itself. OMB supports this bill. I received a "Dear Larry" letter from my good friend Dave (Stockman) who said "I want to commend the subcommittee for its responsible action * * *." It is the subcommittee's recommendations which the full committee brings to the House floor, today.

Mr. DIXON has already done a good job of explaining what is in H.R. 3067 so I will not repeat it. We recommend virtually the entire D.C. request. However, we do insist that an additional $15 million be used to retire the debt. This would be combined with the $5 million requested by the city council for a total amount of $20 million in fiscal year 1986. Since fiscal year 1980, the city's accumulated deficit of $387.5 million has been reduced by $130 million or one-third.

My compliments to the chairman and the subcommittee on a job well done.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from the District of Columbia [Mr. FAUNTROY].

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Chairman, I rise with deep concerns about H.R. 3067, the District of Columbia appropriations bill for fiscal year 1986.

In December 1973, this Congress reestablished the concept of home rule for the District of Columbia through enactment of the District of Columbia Self-Government and Governmental Reorganization Act (Public Law 93-198). Since enactment of home rule for the District, each Congress has approved legislation which sought to improve and enhance D.C. home rule. Those improvements were accomplished through the legislative process.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 3067, unfortunately, is attempting to use the appropriations process to enact substantive legislation which is antihome rule. I would like to speak to two of these.

First, the bill includes language under section 132 designating part of 15th Street Southwest, between Independence Avenue and Maine Avenue, as "Raoul Wallenberg Place." H.R. 2119, which was introduced in April, seeks the same objective and is before my Subcommittee on Fiscal Affairs and Health as well as the Subcommittee on Government Operations and Metropolitan Affairs of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Raoul Wallenberg was one of the truly great heroes of World War II. He saved many Jews from the Nazi concentration camps and he deserved recognition. However, the naming of streets is purely a home rule matter.

Mr. Chairman, as many of my colleagues know, I have been in the forefront of the struggle to end apartheid in South Africa through legislation in the Congress and demonstrations at the South African Embassy. The Mayor of the District of Columbia has expressed his desire to rename that portion of Massachusetts Avenue, Northwest, in front of the embassy as "Nelson and Winnie Mandela Avenue." I would be more than willing to speak with him regarding "Raoul Wallenberg Place."

Second, H.R. 3067 includes language under section 133 which states, "The expenditure of any appropriation under this act for any contract shall be limited to those contracts awarded on a competitive basis." This language could be interpreted to mean termination of the District's Minority Contract Set-Aside Program.

I would like to ask the distinguished gentleman from California whether the contracting language is intended to change or jeopardize the District's Minority Set-Aside Program. If not, will the language be clarified to make this clear during conference?

□ 1640

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAUNTROY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, this language was offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA]. I do not know what his intent was, but I made it clear when the amendment was offered in committee that I thought it would have a serious impact on the minority set-aside program. I received assurances from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] that he would work with me to ensure that his language does not in any way jeopardize the District's Minority Set-Aside Program.

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Chairman, I am certainly relieved to know that, and I am confident that both of the gentlemen who have been supportive of the principle of home rule through the years will protect our Minority Contracts Set-Aside Program.

Mr. Chairman, I insert in the RECORD at this point a Washington Post editorial, dated July 27, 1985. I would like to emphasize from the editorial:

> The House Appropriations Committee has voted to attach a significant requirement to the District's fiscal 1986 appropriations bill. It would force the District government to award all of its contract through competitive bidding.
> This is a serious slap at home rule for the District. Congress has gone beyond legitimate expressions of concern and decided to make its own policy. The decision may impair the District's effort to give minority firms a better chance to win contracts.
> The same congressional committee decided to make another addition to the appropriations bill by voting to rename a city street after the World War II Swedish hero, Raoul Wallenberg. The desire to honor Mr. Wallenberg, who is credited with saving thousands of Jews and others from Nazi concentration camps, is admirable and well-intentioned, but it does not belong in the District's appropriations bill. Should Congress arbitrarily rename the District's thoroughfares whenever it desires?

Mr. Chairman, this is the heart of the matter. How many of my colleagues would be willing to vote for legislation which would infringe upon cities and counties in their districts? Why do it to the District of Columbia?

I strongly appeal to the members of the Appropriations Committee to think about home rule and its meaning, during the conference with the other body. The true meaning and intent of home rule must be not only confirmed, but enhanced.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA].

Mr. REGULA. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time and appreciate the comments of the gentleman from the District of Columbia. I would just point out in response to that, as you know, we have had discussions with the Mayor on the concern about this, and hopefully can arrive at something that will result in competitive bidding without impinging on any of the present standards, and certainly on the minority set-aside.

There is no reason at all that that cannot, in fact, it would continue. All the language says is the the 35-percent minority set-aside would be subjected to competitive bidding. I think the gentleman would agree with that, because it would allow all of the minority bidders to have an opportunity for a piece of the business.

But in the act creating home rule for the District of Columbia, and I quote directly from section 501, it says—

> Such Federal payment should operate to encourage efforts on the part of the government of the District to maintain and increase its level of revenues and to seek such efficiencies and economies in the management of its programs as are possible.

All we are suggesting here is that competitive bidding with the minority set-aside will result in achieving economies and efficiencies in management. So that is the objective of this language.

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REGULA. I yield to the gentleman from the District of Columbia.

Mr. FAUNTROY. I certainly agree with that objective and I am pleased to know that the gentleman will be protecting the Minority Set-Aside Program in the conference on this matter.

Mr. REGULA. I just wanted to add one thing. The gentleman quoted a part of the editorial from the Washington Post, but I want to read the last paragraph.

> Congress should give the city the fullest opportunity to eliminate any favoritism and wasteful spending. But the argument for home rule is strongest when city officials take action to deal with their own problems. It is weakest, as now, when nothing is done.

So I think you are suggesting, and I am likewise, that we try to get language that protects minority set-asides, and yet will achieve the economies and efficiencies that were spelled out in the original act establishing home rule.

Mr. FAUNTROY. If the gentleman would yield, I would like to thank him for that colloquy.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. RUDD].

Mr. RUDD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend the chairman of the committee and the ranking member of the committee for the effort that they have put forth in the production of this bill. They have worked long and hard. I served on this committee for a term, and I know that it is a difficult committee from time to time because of the political conceptions and misconceptions on it.

But, Mr. Chairman, I oppose this legislation, particularly the allocation of funds for the D.C. Statehood Commission and the Statehood Compact Commission.

In drafting the Constitution, our Founding Fathers, in article I, section 7, gave Congress the power "to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever, over such District * * * as may * * * become the seat of the Government of the United States." They did not intend that the District become a State. The intent of our Founding Fathers in the Constitution is very clear.

While the District enjoys substantial home rule prerogatives, the Congress still retains the ultimate responsibility for this appropriation and we ought to exercise those responsibilities. If statehood is appropriate for the District of Columbia, a city of 630,000 people, then it should be appropriate for every other city in the country including the ninth largest city in the Nation, which is practically my hometown, Phoenix, AZ. Can you imagine every city of this size having two Senators and a number of Members of Congress?

The legislation, while prohibiting the use of Federal funds for abortions except in cases of rape, incest, or when the life of the mother is in danger, is silent with respect to use of other funds appropriated in the bill for abortions. The American public does not want taxpayer funding of abortions, and again we ought to use our authority to address that concern.

If the District of Columbia is serious about statehood, we ought to drastically reduce the Federal payment in this bill, which represents an astonishing 23.5 percent of the anticipated general revenue local collections. If no drastic reduction is made, we ought to retain the control that our Founding Fathers intended.

□ 1650

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MCKINNEY], a member of the authorizing committee.

Mr. MCKINNEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3067, and wish to compliment the members of the Appropriation Committee and especially the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON], chairman of the District of Columbia Subcommittee, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN], ranking member of that subcommittee, for their wisdom and leadership in crafting this bill.

There are a few specific items I wish to highlight, but before I do so, I want to note that my compliments to the members of the Committee on Appropriations are more than courteous rhetoric. As some of my colleagues may recall, at the beginning of this session of Congress I suggested that the budget for the Committee on the District of Columbia, of which I am the ranking member, be substantially reduced and that the House pave the way for elimination of the committee by the 100th Congress. It was, and remains my opinion that the issues remaining before the Committee on the District of Columbia in our efforts to achieve the maximum possible level of home rule for the residents of the District of Columbia would be more properly and efficiently handled by either a new or existing subcommittee on one of the current standing committees of the House.

I want to make it very clear that I would not be able to make such a statement and believe it to be true were it not for the leadership which has been evident for some years in the Appropriations Committee, and more specifically, in the Appropriations Subcommittee on the District of Columbia. There has been an evolutionary process taking place in which the annual appropriations bill for the District addresses certain legislative matters which would, in a perfect world, be considered by the authorizing committee. I mention this not to protect turf, or in any way to criticize the efforts of our colleagues on the Appropriations Committee. Rather, I note this as a change for the better. It has been particularly heartening to this Member to note that when the D.C. appropriations bill does have some legislative provisions in the bill, they are valid and fully justifiable actions which painstakingly preserve the delicate balance of home rule. It is my sincere hope that the Appropriations Committee will continue to exhibit the restraint that has been evident in the past, and at the same time take the necessary action when warranted.

With regard to the specifics of the bill, I would echo the comments already heard with regard to the overall funding levels in this bill. The Federal funds provided include the full $425 million authorized as the Federal payment to the city, $30.1 million in reimbursement for water and sewer services provided to Federal buildings in the city, $52 million as the Federal contribution to the police, firefighters', teachers', and judges' retirement systems, and $25 million as the second of six annual payments authorized by Public Law 98-621 to assist the District in the establishment of a comprehensive mental health system which includes St. Elizabeths Hospital being taken over by the local government. This brings the total amount of direct Federal funding in this bill to $532.2 million, exactly the amount recommended by the President in his budget request to Congress for fiscal year 1986.

Also included in this bill, but having no impact on the Federal budget, is approval for the appropriation of $2.7 billion as the city's operating and capital budget for fiscal year 1986. It is worth nothing that the committee has made changes in the allocation of this $2.7 billion budget of $10,000. I would like to repeat that, because I believe it says a great deal about the committee's respect for the city's financial abilities and it's respect for the principle of home rule. In approving a total budget of $2.7 billion, the committee has recommended changes of only $10,000.

On a subject which is near and dear to the heart of this Member, I would note the committee report language concerning the city's efforts to eliminate the accumulated operating fund deficit. On page 51 of the committee report, there are two statements which I hope the Mayor and the city's financial advisers will note. First, the committee indicates that it "does not believe that the deficit problem should be resolved by selling bonds." I could not agree more, and I have opposed the recurring efforts on the part of the city to achieve authorization to issue such bonds. The report goes on to explain that the issuance of bonds would strap the residents of the city with a long-term liability which would continue for a period of time in excess of the time required to eliminate the deficit by biting the bullet and budgeting incremental amounts for this purpose. Finally, I am pleased to note the statement in the report which makes it clear that the committee intends to recommend a standard reduction of $20 million each year to be used exclusively to eliminate the operating fund deficit. I sincerely hope these statements will put to rest the city's efforts to seek authorization for the issuance of bonds to finance the deficit, an idea which I join my colleagues on the Appropriations Committee in opposing.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I wish to reiterate my support for this bill and express in the most sincere manner possible, my heartfelt thanks to the chairman and ranking member of the Subcommittee on the District of Columbia for their efforts in bringing this measure to the floor. It is a bill which is identical to what the President recommended with respect to Federal funds, it is virtually identical to what the city requested in terms of allocating $2.7 billion, and it is wholly consistent with the spirit of home rule for the residents of the Capital City.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLF].

Mr. WOLF. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, as a new member of the House Appropriations Committee, on the District of Columbia Subcommittee, I recognize the diligent work that the chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] subcommittee members and staff put into the fiscal year 1986 D.C. appropriations bill. On the whole it is a very good bill, which is why I support it.

However, as a Member of Congress representing the 10th District of Virginia, I was very disappointed that an amendment was added to the bill at the very last minute with no hearings or discussions which would exempt Members of Congress who live in northern Virginia from paying a personal property tax on their automobile. I am particularly disappointed in the process that permitted this to happen without notifying northern Virginia officials in advance and giving them an opportunity to testify on the effects of this legislation.

While I am unhappy that the personal property tax amendment is part of the overall D.C. appropriation bill, there are many other provisions in the bill which I believe are worthy of support which will ultimately benefit northern Virginia residents. These provisions deal with issues such as the District's legal drinking age and we are hopeful, Mr. Chairman, that the message will be sent to the District of Columbia that the Congress is on record as supporting raising the drinking age in the District of Columbia from 18 to 21. We now have the 18-year-old drinking age in the District of Columbia, 21 years in the State of Maryland and 21 years in the State of Virginia. As a result of that, you are developing a blood border around the District of Columbia. So we hope that the message will be delivered to the District that it is important that they raise their drinking age to 21 so that there will be uniform drinking age across the board.

Also, in the legislation there are restrictions on the expansion of Lorton Reformatory.

Last, it has a requirement that my colleague from Maryland, Congressman STENY HOYER, added for immediate aid to disabled vehicles on District of Columbia area bridges during rush hour, and efforts to bring major league baseball to the District of Columbia.

So I am supporting the D.C. fiscal year 1986 appropriations bill, but must voice my deep disappointment that the personal property tax exemption for Members of Congress was added to the bill without considering the localities involved.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, I inadvertently yielded back the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I would ask unanimous consent that I may reclaim my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PARRIS].

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the provision of this bill that was inserted by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA], and I do so with the clear understanding of the suggestions, or allegations, most of which I think are unfounded, as to the adverse effect of that provision on the existing minority contracting practices of the District of Columbia.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to put into the RECORD for the benefit of my colleagues a portion of the existing Federal law under the Home Rule Act. Section 501, title V, of that act reads in part as follows: "Such Federal payment", meaning the annual contribution by the Federal Government to the District of Columbia, "such Federal payments should operate to encourage efforts on the part of the government of the District to maintain and increase its level of revenues and to seek such efficiencies and economies in the management of its programs as are possible."

What that means, Mr. Chairman, is that it is a legitimate interest and an obligation of this Congress in the use and appropriation of the taxpayers' funds to help, to assist, to establish the opportunity for the District of Columbia to provide with the Federal payment the best and most efficient government that this city can possibly have. That is all of our function, it is consistent with all of our earnest desire. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the provision inserted by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] in requiring competitive contracting for public contracts and services, is a step in that and the right direction and therefore totally consistent with the provisions of the Home Rule Act. It would be my hope that this bill would be adopted with that provision intact and that the conference will see fit to sustain it in the final conference version of this legislation.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. LOWERY of California. Mr. Chairman, this year is the 40th anniversary of the disappearance of Raoul Wallenberg, one of the greatest heroes of our age, as well as the liberation of the Nazi death camps. As a way of remembering this tragic period in human history and as a way of honoring one of the greatest heroes of the Holocaust, the Appropriations Committee has included in the general provisions part of the bill, section 132, designating a block of 15th Street between Maine Street and Independence Avenue as "Raoul Wallenberg Place."

The portion of 15th Street, Southwest, which would be renamed by this bill is the site of the future U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum. It is bordered entirely by Federal property, and there are no residences on the street. The Bureau of Engraving is located on the street, but its mailing address is on 14th Street. Therefore, no addresses on the street would be affected except that of the the National Holocaust Memorial Museum.

Mr. Chairman, Raoul Wallenberg was born in 1912 to a distinguished Swedish family. In July 1944, in response to a request of the World Jewish Congress following deportation of nearly half a million Hungarian Jews to the death camps of Auschwitz and Birkenau, he was secretly sent by the American Government's War Refugee Board to Budapest as a Swedish diplomat. At that time there were still 250,000 Jews living in the Budapest ghetto, and Wallenberg undertook the impossible task of slowing down their deportation.

Working from the Swedish Embassy, he organized a rescue staff of several hundred Jewish volunteers and declared 32 apartment buildings housing 20,000 Jews to be shelters under the protection of the Swedish flag. He issued protective Swedish passports to approximately 30,000 Jews, providing them a degree of immunity from persecution. He organized the most daring and audacious methods for saving the lives of Jews—turning up at railway stations that served as assembly points for transporting the victims to death camps and, using his diplomatic privileges, snatching dozens of victims from the trains on the grounds that they were under Swedish protection.

Through his fearless actions, imagination and self-sacrifice, Wallenberg and his helpers were able to save the lives of 25,000 Jews during the period from July 1944 until the middle of January 1945. And by inspiring and cajoling others to play their part in this humanitarian work, he was able to save about 100,000 Jews from the death camps.

On January 17, 1945, the Soviet Army reached the outskirts of Budapest, and Raoul Wallenberg was taken into Soviet protective custody. He was never released. In fact, in 1957 the Soviets announced that Wallenberg had died while in a Soviet prison in Moscow. The U.S. State Department has raised the issue of Wallenberg's fate with the Soviets many times, but no satisfactory answer has been given.

Raoul Wallenberg, the "Lost Hero of the Holocaust," has become a legend to people all over the world. He has been nominated for a Nobel Peace Prize. Many of you joined our distinguished colleague, TOM LANTOS, in supporting legislation in the 97th Congress which made him an honorary U.S. citizen, thereby allowing the United States to petition the Soviet Union for a full accounting of his fate. Wallenberg is only the second person to be awarded this great honor.

Wallenberg was also named an honorary citizen of the District of Columbia on October 6, 1981. Mayor Marion Barry presided over the ceremony, which was attended by Wallenberg's sister and others.

Congressman LANTOS, the only survivor of the Holocaust to be elected to Congress, was born in Budapest, Hungary. He was twice sent to Nazi work camps during 1944, but escaped and survived in Wallenberg's safe houses. He worked with Wallenberg and was active in the anti-Nazi underground.

"In History," Congressman LANTOS has said, "One can find many men who have killed 100,000 people. But how many have saved 100,000? Renaming a portion of 15th Street in honor of Wallenberg is a small—but appropriate—gesture to one of the genuine heroes of our age."
